 Now, by my seat's right royal majesty, 120

Wert thou not brother to great Edward's
 son,

This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head
 Should run thy head from thy unreverent shoulders.

Gaunt. O! spare me not, my brother
 Edward's son,

For that I was his father Edward's son.
 That blood already, like the pelican,

Hast thou tapp'd out and drunkenly
 carous'd:

My brother Gloucester, plain well-meaning
 soul,

Whom fair befall in heaven 'mongst happy souls!

May be a precedent and witness good 130
 That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's
 blood:

Join with the present sickness that I have;
 And thy unkindness be like crooked age,

To crop at once a too-long withered flower.
 Live in thy shame, but die not shame with
 thee!

These words hereafter thy tormenters be!
 Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:

Love they to live that love and honour have.

Exit, borne out by his Attendants.

K. Rich. And let them die that age and sullens have;
For both hast thou, and both become the grave. 140

York. I do beseech your majesty, impute his words

To wayward sickness and age in him:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry Duke of Hereford, were he here.

K. Rich. Right, you say true: as Hereford's love, so his;
As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.

K. Rich. What says he?
North. Nay, nothing; all is said:
His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent. 150

York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt so!

Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.

K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he:

His time is spent; our pilgrimage must be.
So much for that. Now for our Irish wars.
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns,

Which live like venom where no venom else
But only they have privilege to live.

And for these great affairs do ask some charge,

Towards our assistance we do seize to us 160
The plate, coin, revenues, and movables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.

York. How long shall I be patient? Ah! how long

Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
Not Gloucester's death, nor Hereford's banishment,

Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,

Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke
About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient
cheek,

Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.
I am the last of noble Edward's sons, 171
Of whom thy father, Prince of Wales, was first;

In war was never lion rag'd more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman.

His face thou hast, for even so look'd he,
Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;
But when he frown'd, it was against the French,

And not against his friends; his noble
hand

Did win what he did spend, and spent not
that 180

Which his triumphant father's hand had won;

His hands were guilty of no kindred blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.

O Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter?
York. O! my liege,

Pardon me, if you please; if not, I, pleas'd
Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.

Seek you to seize and gripe into your hands

The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford? 190

Is not Gaunt dead, and doth not Hereford live?

Was not Gaunt just, and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?

Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
Take Hereford's rights away, and take from
Time

His charters and his customary rights;
Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;

Be not thyself; for how art thou a king
But by fair sequence and succession? 199

Now, afore God,—God forbid I say true!—
If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,

Call in the letters-patent that he hath
By his attorneys-general to sue

His livery, and deny his offer'd homage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,

You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts

Which honour and allegiance cannot think.

K. Rich. Think what you will: we seize into our hands

His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands. 210

York. I'll not be by the while: my liege,
farewell:

What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;

But by bad courses may be understood
That their events can never fall out good. Exit.

K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the Earl of Wiltshire straight:

Bid him repair to us to Ely House
To see this business. To-morrow next

We will for Ireland; and 't is time, I trow:
And we create, in absence of ourself, 219

Our uncle York lord governor of England;
For he is just, and always lov'd us well.

Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;

Be merry, for our time of stay is short.

Flourish. Exeunt KING, QUEEN, BUSHY, AUMERLE, GREENE, and BAGOT.

North. Well, lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead.

Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.

Will. Barely in title, not in revenue.

North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence

Ere 't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue.

North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him
ne'er speak more 230

That speaks thy words again to do thee
harm!

Willo. Tends that thou 'dst speak to the Duke of Hereford?
If it be so, out with it boldly, man;
Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him.

Ross. No good at all that I can do for him, Unless you call it good to pity him, Bereft and gelded of his patrimony.

North. Now, afore God, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne

In him, a royal prince, and many more
Of noble blood in this declining land. 240

The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute
'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.

Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,

And lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fin'd

For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.

Willo. And daily new exactions are devis'd;

As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what: 250

But what, o' God's name, doth become of this?

North. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd he hath not,

But basely yielded upon compromise
That which his ancestors achiev'd with blows.

More hath he spent in peace than they in wars.

Ross. The Earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.

Willo. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man.

North. Reproach and dissolution hangeth over him.

Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars, 259

His burdensome taxations notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.

North. His noble kinsman: most degenerate king!

But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,

Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm;
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,

And yet we strike not, but securely perish.

Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer;

And unavoided is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck.

North. Not so: even through the hollow eyes of death 270

I spy life peering; but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.

Willo. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:

We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts: therefore be bold.

North. Then thus: I have from Port le Blanc, a bay

In Brittany, receiv'd intelligence
That Harry Duke of Hereford, Rainold Lord

Cobham, 286

That late broke from the Duke of Exeter,
His brother, Archbishop late of Canterbury,

Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Ramston,
Sir John Norbery, Sir Robert Waterton, and

Francis Quoint,
All these well furnish'd by the Duke of

Bretagne,
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,

Are making hither with all due expedience,
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore.

Perhaps they had ere this, but that they stay

The first departing of the king for Ireland. 290

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wing,

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,

Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt,

And make high majesty look like itself,
Away with me in post to Ravenspurgh;

But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay and be secret, and myself will go.

Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them that fear.

Willo. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. Exeunt. 300

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the QUEEN, BUSHY, and BAGOT.

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:

You promis'd, when you parted with the king,

To lay aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Queen. To please the king I did; to please myself

I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,

Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard: yet again, methinks,

Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb, 10

Is coming towards me, and my inward soul
With nothing trembles; at some thing it grieves

More than with parting from my lord the

king.

Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,

Which show like grief itself, but are not so.
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,

Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which rightly gaz'd upon

Show nothing but confusion, eyed awry
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty, 20

Looking awry upon your lord's departure, Finds shapes of grief more than himself to wail;

Which, look'd on as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice-gracious queen,
More, than your lord's departure weep not:
more 's not seen;
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye,
Which for things true weeps things imaginary.

Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me it is otherwise: howe'er it be,
I cannot but be sad, so heavy sad. 30
As, though in thinking on no thought I think,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.

Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something grief:
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:
'Tis in reversion that I do possess;
But what it is, that is not yet known; what
I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe, I wot. 40

Enter GREEN.

Green. God save your majesty! and well met, gentlemen:

I hope the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland.

Queen. Why hop'st thou so? 'tis better hope he is,
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope:

Then wherefore dost thou hope he is not shipp'd?

Green. That he, our hope, might have retir'd his power,

And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land:
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd. 50
At Ravenspurgh.

Queen. Now God in heaven forbid!
Green. Ah! madam, 'tis too true: and that is worse,

The Lord Northumberland, his son young Henry Percy,

The Lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby,

With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.

Bushy. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland,

And all the rest revolted faction, traitors?

Green. We have: whereupon the Earl of Worcester

Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship,

And all the household servants fled with him. 55

To Bolingbroke.

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woe,

And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir:
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,

Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Bushy. Despair not, madam.

Queen. Who shall hinder me?

I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope: he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper back of death, 70
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter YORK.

Green. Here comes the Duke of York.

Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck:

O! full of careful business are his looks.
Uncle, for God's sake, speak comfortable words.

York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts:

Comfort 's in heaven; and we are on the earth,

Where nothing lives but crosses, cares, and grief.

Your husband, he is gone to save far off, 80
Whilst others come to make him lose at home:

Here am I left to underprop his land,
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself.
Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;

Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.

York. He was? Why, so! Go all which way it will!

The nobles they are fled, the commons they are cold,

And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.
Sirrah, get thee to Plashy, to my sister

Gloucester; 90
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound.

Hold, take my ring.

Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:

To-day, as I came by, I called there;
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.

York. What is 't, knave?

Serv. An hour before I came the duchess died.

York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes

Comes rushing on this woeful land at once!
I know not what to do: I would to God, 100

So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's.

What! are there no posts dispatch'd for Ireland?

How shall we do for money for these wars?
Come, sister; cousin, I would say: pray, pardon me.

Go, fellow, get thee home; provide some carts

And bring away the armour that is there.

Exit Servant.

Gentlemen, will you go muster men? If I know

How or which way to order these affairs.

Thus thrust disorderly into my hands, 110
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen:
The one is my sovereign, whom both my oath

And duty bids defend; the other again
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd, Whom conscience and my kindred bids to
right.

Well, somewhat we must do. Come, cousin,
I'll

Dispose of you. Gentlemen, go muster up your men,

And meet me presently at Berkeley castle.
I should to Plashy too,
But time will not permit. All is uneven, 120
And every thing is left at six and seven.

Exeunt YORK and QUEEN.

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,

But none returns. For us to levy power
Proportionable to the enemy
Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king
in love

Is near the hate of those love not the king.

Bagot. And that's the wavering commons; for their love

Lies in their purses, and whoso empties
them

By so much fills their hearts with deadly
hate. 130

Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,

Because we ever have been near the king.

Green. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol castle;

The Earl of Wiltshire is already there.

Bushy. Thither will I with you; for little office

The hateful commons will perform for us,
Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.

Will you go along with us?

Bagot. No; I will to Ireland to his majesty. 140

Farewell: if heart's presages be not vain,
We three here part that ne'er shall meet
again.

Bushy. That's as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Alas! poor duke, the task he undertakes

Is numbering sands and drinking oceans
dry:

Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.

Farewell at once; for once, for all, and ever.

Bushy. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Wolds in Gloucestershire.

Enter BOLINGBROKE and NORTHUMBER-LAND, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkeley
now?

North. Believe me, noble lord,
I am a stranger here in Gloucestershire:

These high wild hills and rough uneven
ways

Draw out our miles and make them wear-some;

And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,

Making the hard way sweet and delectable.
But I bethink me what a weary way

From Ravenspurgh to Cotswold will be found

In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company, 10

Which, I protest, hath very much beguil'd
The tediousness and process of my travel:

But theirs is sweeten'd with the hope to have
The present benefit which I possess;

And hope to joy is little less in joy
Than hope enjoy'd: by this the weary lords

Shall make their way seem short, as mine hath done

By sight of what I have, your noble company.

Boling. Of much less value is my company

Than your good words. But who comes
here? 20

Enter HENRY PERCY.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy, Sent from my brother Worcester, whence-soever.

Harry, how fares your uncle?

Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learn'd his health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the queen?

Percy. No, my good lord; he hath forsook the court,

Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd
The household of the king.

North. What was his reason?
He was not so resolv'd when last we spake
together.

Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor. 30

But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurgh,
To offer service to the Duke of Hereford,

And sent me over by Berkeley, to discover What power the Duke of York had levied
there;

Then with direction to repair to Ravenspurgh.

North. Have you forgot the Duke of Hereford, boy?

Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot

Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge

I never in my life did look on him.

North. Then learn to know him now;
this is the duke. 40

Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service,

Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young,
Which elder days shall ripen and confirm

To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure

I count myself in nothing else so happy
As in a soul remembering my good friends;

And as my fortune ripens with thy love,
It shall be still thy true love's recompense:

My heart this covenant makes, my hand
thus seals it. 50

North. How far is it to Berkeley? and what stir
Keeps good old York there with his men of war?

Percy. There stands the castle, by yon
tuft of trees,

Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard;

And in it are the Lords of York, Berkeley,
and Seymour;

None else of name and noble estimate.

Enter ROSS and WILLOUGHBY.

North. Here come the Lords of Ross and Willoughby,

Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.
Boling. Welcome, my lords. I wot your love pursues

A banish'd traitor; all my treasury 60
Is yet but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,

Shall be your love and labour's recompense.
Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble lord.

Willo. And far surmounts our labour to attain it.

Boling. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor;

Which, till my infant fortune comes to years, Stands for my bounty. But who comes
here?

Enter BERKELEY.

North. It is my Lord of Berkeley, as I guess.

Berk. My Lord of Hereford, my message is to you.

Boling. My lord, my answer is—to Lancaster; 70

And I am come to seek that name in England;
And I must find that title in your tongue

Before I make reply to aught you say.
Berk. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning

To raze one title of your honour out:

To you, my lord, I come, what lord you will,
From the most gracious regent of this land,

The Duke of York, to know what pricks you on

To take advantage of the absent time
And fright our native peace with self-born
arms. 80

Enter YORK, attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you;

Here comes his grace in person. My noble uncle! Kneels.

York. Show me thy humble heart; and not thy knee,

Whose duty is deceivable and false.

Boling. My gracious uncle—

York. Tut, tut!

Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:
I am no traitor's uncle; and that word
'grace'

In an ungracious mouth is but profane.

Why have those banish'd and forbidden
legs 90

Dar'd once to touch a dust of England's ground?

But then more 'why?' why have they dar'd to march

So many miles upon her peaceful bosom,
Frighting her pale-fac'd villages with war

And ostentation of despised arms?
Com'st thou because the anointed king is
hence?

Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.

Were I but now the lord of such hot youth
As when brave Gaunt thy father, and myself 100

Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars
of men,

From forth the ranks of many thousand
French,

O! then how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee

And minister correction to thy fault.
Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault:

On what condition stands it and wherein?
York. Even in condition of the worst degree;

In gross rebellion and detested treason:
Thou art a banish'd man, and here art
come 110

Before the expiration of thy time,
In braving arms against thy sovereign.

Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Hereford;

But as I come, I come for Lancaster.
And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace

Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my father, for methinks in you

I see old Gaunt alive: O! then, my father,
Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd

A wandering vagabond; my rights and royalties 120

Pluck'd from my arms perforce and given
away

To upstart unthrifths? Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be King of England,

It must be granted I am Duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman;

Had you first died, and he been thus trod
down,

He should have found his uncle Gaunt a
father,

To rouse his wrongs and chase them to the bay.

I am denied to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters-patent give me leave: 130

My father's goods are all distrain'd and sold,
And these and all are all amiss employ'd.

What would you have me do? I am a subject,

And challenge law: attorneys are denied me,
And therefore personally I lay my claim

To my inheritance of free descent.
North. The noble duke hath been too much abused.

Ross. It stands your grace upon to do him
right.

Will. Base men by his endowments are made great.

York. My lords of England, let me tell you this: 140

I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to do him right;
But in this kind to come, in braving arms,
Be his own carver and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong, it may not be;
And you that do abet him in this kind
Cherish rebellion and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn his coming is

But for his own; and for the right of that
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid; 150

And let him ne'er see joy that breaks that oath!

York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms:

I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak and all ill left;
But if I could, by him that gave me life,
I would attach you all and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But since I cannot, be it known to you
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;
Unless you please to enter in the castle 160
And there repose you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept:

But we must win your grace to go with us
To Bristol castle, which they say is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away.

York. It may be I will go with you; but yet I'll pause,

For I am loath to break our country's laws. 169
Nor friends nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things past redress are now with me past care. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Camp in Wales.

Enter SALISBURY and a Captain.

Cap. My Lord of Salisbury, we have stay'd ten days,

And hardly kept our countrymen together,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman:

The king reposes all his confidence in thee.
Cap. 'Tis thought the king is dead: we will not stay.

The bay-trees in our country are all wither'd
And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven,
The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth 10

And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change,

Rich men look sad and ruffians dance and leap,

The one in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.

Farewell: our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assur'd Richard their king is dead. Exit.

Sal. Ah! Richard, with the eyes of heavy mind

I see thy glory like a shooting star
Fall to the base earth from the firmament. 20
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest.
Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. Exit.

ACT III

SCENE I.—Bristol. BOLINGBROKE'S Camp.

Enter BOLINGBROKE, YORK, NORTUMBURLAND, PERCY, WILLOUGHBY, ROSS; BUSHY and GREEN, prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.

Bushy and Green, I will not vex your souls,
Since presently your souls must part your bodies,

With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 't were no charity; yet, to wash your blood

From off my hands, here in the view of men

I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have misled a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disfigur'd clean: 10
You have in manner with your sinful hours
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him,

Broke the possession of a royal bed,
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks

With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.

Myself, a prince by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood, and near in love
Till you did make him misinterpret me,
Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds, 20

Eating the bitter bread of banishment;
Whilst you have fed upon my signiories,
Dispark'd my parks, and fell'd my forest woods,

From mine own windows torn my household coat,

Raz'd out my impress, leaving me no sign,

Save men's opinions and my living blood,
To show the world I am a gentleman.

This and much more, much more than twice all this,

Condemns you to the death. See them deliver'd over

To execution and the hand of death. 30

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me

Than Bolingbroke to England. Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is that heaven will take our souls

And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. My Lord Northumberland, see them dispatch'd.

Exeunt NORTHUMBERLAND and Others, with BUSHY and GREEN.

Uncle, you say the queen is at your house; For God's sake, fairly let her be entreated: Tell her I send to her my kind commends; Take special care my greetings be deliver'd. York. A gentleman of mine I have dispatched<sup>40</sup>

With letters of your love to her at large. Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle. Come, lords, away.

To fight with Glendower and his complices: Awhile to work, and after holiday. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Coast of Wales. A Castle in view.

Flourish: drums and trumpets. Enter King RICHARD, Bishop of CARLISLE, AUMERLE and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barkloughly castle call you this at hand?

Aum. Yea, my lord. How brooks your grace the air

After your late tossing on the breaking seas? K. Rich. Needs must I like it well: I weep for joy

To stand upon my kingdom once again. Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand, Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs:

As a long-parted mother with her child Plays fondly with her tears and smiles in meeting,

So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,<sup>10</sup>

And do thee favour with my royal hands. Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,

Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense;

But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom, And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way, Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet Which with usurping steps do trample thee. Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies; And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,

Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder<sup>20</sup> Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch

Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies. Mock not my senseless conjuration, lords: This earth shall have a feeling and these stones

Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under foul rebellion's arms.

Car. Fear not, my lord: that power that made you king

Hath power to keep you king in spite of all. The means that heaven yields must be embrac'd,

And not neglected; else, if heaven would,<sup>30</sup> And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse, The proffer'd means of succour and redress.

Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;

Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security, Grows strong and great in substance and in friends.

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st thou not

That when the searching eye of heaven is hid

Behind the globe, and lights the lower world, Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,

In murders and in outrage bloody here;<sup>40</sup> But when from under this terrestrial ball He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines And darts his light through every guilty hole, Then murders, treasons, and detested sins, The cloak of night being pluck'd from off their backs,

Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?

So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke, Who all this while hath revell'd in the night Whilst we were wandering with the antipodes,

Shall see us rising in our throne, the east,<sup>50</sup> His treasons will sit blushing in his face, Not able to endure the sight of day, But self-affrighted tremble at his sin.

Not all the water in the rough rude sea Can wash the balm from an anointed king; The breath of worldly men cannot depose The deputy elected by the Lord.

For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,

God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay<sup>60</sup> A glorious angel: then, if angels fight, Weak men must fall, for heaven still guards the right.

Enter SALISBURY.

Welcome, my lord: how far off lies your power?

Sal. Nor near nor further off, my gracious lord,

Than this weak arm: discomfort guides my tongue

And bids me speak of nothing but despair. One day too late, I fear me, noble lord, Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth. O! call back yesterday, bid time return,

And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men:<sup>70</sup>

To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late, O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;

For all the Welshmen, hearing thou wert dead,

Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispers'd, and fled.

Aum. Comfort, my liege! why looks your grace so pale?

K. Rich. But now the blood of twenty thousand men

Did triumph in my face, and they are fled; And till so much blood thither come again,

Have I not reason to look pale and dead? All souls that will be safe fly from my side;<sup>80</sup> For time hath set a blot upon my pride.

Aum. Comfort, my liege! remember who you are.

K. Rich. I had forgot myself. Am I not king?

Awake, thou sluggard majesty! thou sleepest.

Is not the king's name twenty thousand names?

Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes At thy great glory. Look not to the ground,

Ye favourites of a king: are we not high? High be our thoughts: I know my uncle

York Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here? 90

Enter SCROOP.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege

Than can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him! K. Rich. Mine ear is open and my heart prepar'd: The worst is worldly loss thou canst unfold.

Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 't was my care;

And what loss is it to be rid of care? Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?

Greater he shall not be: if he serve God We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so:

Revolt our subjects? that we cannot mend; 100

They break their faith to God as well as us: Cry woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay;

The worst is death, and death will have his day.

Scroop. Glad am I that your highness is so arm'd

To bear the tidings of calamity. Like an unseasonable stormy day,

Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,

As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears, So high above his limits swells the rage

Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land With hard bright steel and hearts harder than steel. 111

White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps

Against thy majesty; and boys, with women's voices,

Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints

In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown; Thy very beadsmen learn to bend their bows

Of double-fatal yew against thy state; Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills

Against thy seat: both young and old rebel, And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well thou tell'st a tale so ill. 121

Where is the Earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?

What is become of Bushy? where is Green? That they have let the dangerous enemy

Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?

If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it. I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke. Scroop. Peace have they made with him indeed, my lord.

K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without redemption!

Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man! 130

Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heart!

Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas!

Would they make peace? terrible hell make war

Upon their spotted souls for this offence! Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property, Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate.

Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made

With heads and not with hands: those whom you curse

Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound

And lie full low, grav'd in the hollow ground. Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the Earl of Wiltshire dead? 141

Scroop. Ay, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.

Aum. Where is the duke my father with his power?

K. Rich. No matter where. Of comfort no man speak:

Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs; Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes

Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth; Let's choose executors and talk of wills:

And yet not so, for what can we bequeath Save our deposed bodies to the ground? 150

Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,

And nothing can we call our own but death, And that small model of the barren earth

Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.

For God's sake, let us sit upon the ground And tell sad stories of the death of kings:

How some have been depos'd, some slain in war,

Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd,

Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd;

All murder'd: for within the hollow crown 160 That rounds the mortal temples of a king

Keeps Death his court, and there the antick sits,

Scoffing his state and grinning at his pomp; Allowing him a breath, a little scene,

To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks,

Infusing him with self and vain conceit, As if this flesh which walls about our life

Were brass impregnable; and humour'd thus

Comes at the last and with a little pin Bores through his castle wall, and farewell

king! 170

Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood

With solemn reverence: throw away respect,

Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty, For you have but mistook me all this while:

I live with bread like you, feel want,
Taste grief, need friends: subjected thus,
How can you say to me I am a king?

Car. My lord, wise men ne'er sit and wail their woes.

But presently prevent the ways to wail.

To fear the foe, since fear oppresseseth
strength, 180

Gives in your weakness strength unto your foe.

And so your follies fight against yourself.

Fear and be slain; no worse can come to fight:

And fight and die is death, destroying
death;

Where fearing dying pays death servile
breath.

Aum. My father hath a power; inquire of him

And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. Rich. Thou chid'st me well. Proud Bolingbroke, I come

To change blows with thee for our day of doom.

This ague-fit of fear is over-blown; 190
An easy task it is to win our own.

Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?

Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky

The state and inclination of the day;

So may you by my dull and heavy eye,

My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.

I play the torturer, by small and small
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken.

Your uncle York is join'd with Boling-
broke, 200

And all your northern castles yielded up,

And all your southern gentlemen in arms

Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.
Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me

forth

Of that sweet way I was in to despair!

What say you now? what comfort have we
now?

By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly

That bids me be of comfort any more.

Go to Flint castle: there I'll pine away;

A king, woe's slave, shall kingly woe

obey. 210

That power I have, discharge; and let them
go

To ear the land that hath some hope to grow,

For I have none: let no man speak again

To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

Aum. My liege, one word.

K. Rich. He does me double wrong,
That wounds me with the flatteries of his

tongue.

Discharge my followers: let them hence
away,

From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair
day. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Wales. Before Flint Castle.

Enter, with drum and colours, BOLINGBROKE and Forces; YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, and Others.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn

The Welshmen are dispers'd, and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed

With some few private friends upon this coast.

North. The news is very fair and good,
my lord:

Richard not far from hence hath hid his
head.

York. It would beseem the Lord Northumberland

To say 'King Richard': alack! the heavy
day

When such a sacred king should hide his
head.

North. Your grace mistakes; only to be brief 10

Left I this title out.

York. The time hath been Would you have been so brief with him, he would

Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head, your whole head's

length.

Boling. Mistake not, uncle, further than you should.

York. Take not, good cousin, further than you should,

Lest you mistake the heavens are o'er your
head.

Boling. I know it, uncle; and oppose not myself

Against their will. But who comes here?

Enter PERCY.

Welcome, Harry: what! will not this castle
yield? 20

Percy. The castle royally is mann'd, my lord,

Against thy entrance.

Boling. Royally!

Why, it contains no king?

Percy. Yes, my good lord,
It doth contain a king: King Richard lies

Within the limits of yon lime and stone;

And with him are the Lord Aumerle, Lord
Salisbury,

Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman
Of holy reverence; who, I cannot learn.

North. O! belike it is the Bishop of Carlisle. 30

Boling. Noble lords,

Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle,
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parley

Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:
Henry Bolingbroke

On both his knees doth kiss King Richard's
hand,

And sends allegiance and true faith of heart
To his most royal person; hither come

Even at his feet to lay my arms and power,
Provided that my banishment repeal'd, 40

And lands restor'd again be freely granted.
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of
blood
Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:

The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke

It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair King Richard's
land,

My stooping duty tenderly shall show.
Go, signify as much, while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain. 50

Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drum,

That from this castle's tatter'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perus'd.
Methinks King Richard and myself should meet

With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock

At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.

Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water:
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him. 60 March on, and mark King Richard how he looks.

A parley sounded, and answered by a trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the walls King RICHARD, the Bishop of CARLISLE, AUMERLE, SCROOP, and SALISBURY.

See, see, King Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun
From out the fiery portal of the east,
When he perceives the envious clouds are bent

To dim his glory and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the occident.

York. Yet looks he like a king: behold,
his eye,

As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth Controlling majesty: alack, alack, for woe, 70

That any harm should stain so fair a show!
K. Rich. To NORTHUMBERLAND. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood

To watch the fearful bending of thy knee,
Because we thought ourself thy lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, show us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship;

For well we know, no hand of blood and bone

Can gripe the sacred handle of our sceptre, 80
Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp.

And though you think that all, as you have
done,

Have torn their souls by turning them from
us,

And we are barren and bereft of friends;
Yet know, my master, God omnipotent,
Is mustering in his clouds on our behalf

Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head
And threaten the glory of my precious crown. 90 Tell Bolingbroke, for yon methinks he stands,

That every stride he makes upon my land
Is dangerous treason: he is come to open
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers'
sons

Shall ill become the flower of England's face,

Change the complexion of her maid-pale
peace

To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pastures' grass with faithful English
blood. 100

North. The king of heaven forbid our lord
the king

Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice-noble cousin, Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy
hand;

And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon your royal grandsire's
bones,

And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious
head,

And by the buried hand of war-like Gaunt,
And by the worth and honour of himself, 110
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,
His coming hither hath no further scope

Than for his lineal royalties and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees:

Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.

This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him. 120

K. Rich. Northumberland, say thus the king returns:

His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast
Speak to his gentile hearing kind commends.

NORTHUMBERLAND retires to BOLINGBROKE.

To AUMERLE. We do debase ourselves, cousin, do we not,

To look so poorly and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland and send

Defiance to the traitor, and so die? 130

Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words

Till time lend friends and friends their helpful swords.

K. Rich. O God! O God! that e'er this tongue of mine,

That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yon proud man, should take it off again With words of sooth. O! that I were as great

As is my grief, or lesser than my name,

Or that I could forget what I have been,
Or not remember what I must be now.
Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to beat, 140
Since foes have scope to beat both thee and
me.

Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. What must the king do now?
Must he submit?

The king shall do it: must he be depos'd?
The king shall be contented: must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood, 150
My sceptre for a palmer's walking-staff,
My subjects for a pair of carved saints,
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little little grave, an obscure grave;
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects'
feet

May hourly trample on their sovereign's
head;

For on my heart they tread now whilst I live;
And buried once, why not upon my head?
Aumerle, thou weep'st, my tender-hearted
cousin! 160

We'll make foul weather with despised
tears;

Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer
corn,

And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding
tears?

As thus: to drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid: 'There lies

Two kinsmen digg'd their graves with weeping eyes.'

Would not this ill do well? Well, well, I
see 170

I talk but idly and you laugh at me.
Most mighty prince, my Lord Northumber-
land,

What says King Bolingbroke? will his majesty

Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says ay.

North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend

To speak with you; may't please you to come down?

K. Rich. Down, down I come; like glis-
tering Phaethon,

Wanting the manage of unruly jades.
In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base, 180

To come at traitors' calls and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down? Down, court! down, king!

For night-owls shriek where mounting larks should sing. Exeunt from above.

Boling. What says his majesty?

North. Sorrow and grief of heart

Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King RICHARD and his Attendants.

Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.

My gracious lord,— Kneeling.
K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee 190

To make the base earth proud with kissing it:

Me rather had my heart might feel your love
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, although your knee be low.

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.

K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.

Boling. So far be mine, my most re-doubted lord,

As my true service shall deserve your love.

K. Rich. Well you deserve: they well deserve to have 200

That know the strong'st and surest way to get.

Uncle, give me your hand: nay, dry your
eyes;

Tears show their love, but want their remedies.

Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.

What you will have I'll give, and willing
too;

For do we must what force will have us do.
Set on towards London. Cousin, is it so?

Boling. Yea, my good lord.

K. Rich. Then I must not say no.
Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Langley. The Duke of YORK'S Garden.

Enter the QUEEN and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,

To drive away the heavy thought of care?

First Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.

Queen. 'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,

And that my fortune runs against the bias.
First Lady. Madam, we'll dance.

Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight

When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:

Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.

First Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales. W
Queen. Of sorrow or of joy?

First Lady. Of either, madam.

Queen. Of neither, girl;

For if of joy, being altogether wanting,

It doth remember me the more of sorrow;

Or if of grief, being altogether had,

It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:

For what I have I need not to repeat,

And what I want it boots not to complain.

First Lady. Madam, I'll sing.

Queen. 'Tis well that thou hast cause;
But thou should'st please me better would'st
thou weep.

First Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.

Queen. And I could sing would weeping do me good,

And never borrow any tear of thee.

But stay, here come the gardeners:

Let's step into the shadow of these trees.

My wretchedness unto a row of pins,

They'll talk of state; for every one doth so

Against a change: woe is forerun with woe.

QUEEN and Ladies retire.

Enter a Gardener and two Servants.

Gard. Go, bind thou up yond dangling apricocks,

Which, like unruly children, make their sire

Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:

Give some supportance to the bending twigs.

Go thou, and like an executioner,

Cut off the heads of too fast growing sprays.

That look too lofty in our commonwealth:

All must be even in our government.

You thus employ'd, I will go root away

The noisome weeds, that without profit

suck

The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

First Serv. Why should we in the compass of a pale

Keep law and form and due proportion,

Showing, as in a model, our firm estate,

When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,

Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers chok'd

up,

Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges

ruin'd,

Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs

Swarming with caterpillars?

Gard. Hold thy peace:

He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring

Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:

The weeds that his broad-spreading leaves

did shelter,

That seem'd in eating him to hold him up,

Are pluck'd up root and all by Bolingbroke;

I mean the Earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

First Serv. What! are they dead?

Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke

Hath seiz'd the wasteful king. O! what pity is it

That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his

land

As we this garden. We at time of year

Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees,

Lest, being over-proud in sap and blood,

With too much riches it confound itself:

Had he done so to great and growing men,

They might have liv'd to bear and he to taste

Their fruits of duty: superfluous branches

We lop away that bearing boughs may live:

Had he done so, himself had borne the
crown,

Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown
down.

First Serv. What! think you then the king shall be depos'd?

Gard. Depress'd he is already, and de-
pos'd

'Tis doubt he will be: letters came last
night

To a dear friend of the good Duke of York's,

That tell black tidings.

Queen. O! I am press'd to death through want of speaking.

Coming forward.
Thou, old Adam's likeness, set to dress this garden,

How dares thy harsh rude tongue sound this unpleasing news?

What Eve, what serpent, hath suggested
thee

To make a second fall of cursed man?
Why dost thou say King Richard is depos'd?

Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than
earth,

Divine his downfall? Say where, when,
and how

Cam'st thou by this ill tidings? speak, thou wretch.

Gard. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I

To breathe this news, yet what I say is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold

Of Bolingbroke; their fortunes both are weigh'd:

In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;

But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides himself, are all the English peers,

And with that odds he weighs King Richard
down.

Post you to London and you'll find it so; 90
I speak no more than every one doth know.

Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,

Doth not thy embassy belong to me,
And am I last that knows it? O! thou

think'st

To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast. Come, ladies,

go,

To meet at London London's king in woe.
What! was I born to this, that my sad look

Should grace the triumph of great Boling-broke?

Gardener, for telling me these news of
woe,

Pray God the plants thou graft'st may never
grow.

Exeunt QUEEN and Ladies.
Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse,

I would my skill were subject to thy curse.
Here did she fall a tear; here in this place

I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace;
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be
seen,

In the remembrance of a weeping queen.
Exeunt.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—London. Westminster Hall.

The Lords spiritual on the right side of the throne; the Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.

Enter BOLINGBROKE, AUMERLE, SURREY, NORTHUMBERLAND, PERCY, FITZWATER, another Lord, the Bishop of CARLISLE, the Abbot of WESTMINSTER, and Attendants. Officers behind, with BAGOT.

Boling. Call forth Bagot.

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;

What thou dost know of noble Gloucester's death,

Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd

The bloody office of his timeless end.

Bagot. Then set before my face the Lord Aumerle.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue

Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd. In that dead time when Gloucester's death was plotted, 10

I heard you say, 'Is not my arm of length, That reacheth from the restful English court As far as Calais, to mine uncle's head?'

Amongst much other talk, that very time, I heard you say that you had rather refuse

The offer of an hundred thousand crowns Than Bolingbroke's return to England;

Adding withal, how blest this land would be In this your cousin's death.

Aum. Princes and noble lords, What answer shall I make to this base man? 20

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars, On equal terms to give him chastisement?

Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd With the attainer of his slanderous lips.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death, That marks thee out for hell: I say thou liest,

And will maintain what thou hast said is false

In thy heart-blood, though being all too base To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear; thou shalt not take it up. 30

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best

In all this presence that hath mov'd me so.

Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathies,

There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine. By that fair sun which shows me where thou stand'st,

I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,

That thou wert cause of noble Gloucester's death.

If thou deny'st it twenty times, thou liest; And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,

Where it was forged, with my rapier's point. 40

Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.

Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true

In this appeal as thou art all unjust;

And that thou art so, there I throw my gage. To prove it on thee to the extremest point

Of mortal breathing: seize it if thou dar'st.

Aum. An if I do not may my hands rot off And never brandish more revengeful steel 50

Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Another Lord. I task the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle;

And spur thee on with full as many lies As may be holla'd in thy treacherous ear

From sun to sun: there is my honour's pawn;

Engage it to the trial if thou dar'st.

Aum. Who sets me else? by heaven, I'll throw at all.

I have a thousand spirits in one breast, To answer twenty thousand such as you.

Surrey. My Lord Fitzwater, I do remember well 60

The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

Fitz. 'T is very true: you were in presence then;

And you can witness with me this is true.

Surrey. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is true.

Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.

Surrey. Dishonourable boy! That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword

That it shall render vengeance and revenge, Till thou the lie-giver and that lie do lie

In earth as quiet as thy father's skull.

In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn; 70

Engage it to the trial if thou dar'st.

Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse!

If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live, I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness,

And spit upon him, whilst I say he lies, And lies, and lies: there is my bond of faith,

To tie thee to my strong correction. As I intend to thrive in this new world,

Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal: Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say 80

That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men

To execute the noble duke at Calais.

Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage.

That Norfolk lies, here do I throw down this, If he may be repeal'd to try his honour.

Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage

Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be,

And though mine enemy, restor'd again To all his lands and signories; when he's return'd,

Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial. 90

Car. That honourable day shall ne'er be seen.

Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
For Jesu Christ in glorious Christian field,
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens;
And toil'd with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy; and there at Venice gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so
long. 100

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?

Car. As surely as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom

Of good old Abraham! Lords appellants,
Your differences shall all rest under gage
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter YORK attended.

York. Great Duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul

Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand. 110
Ascend his throne, descending now from
him;

And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!

Boling. In God's name, I 'll ascend the regal throne.

Car. Marry, God forbid!

Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best beseeeming me to speak the truth.
Would God that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard! then true noblesse would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. 120

What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?

Thieves are not judg'd but they are by to hear.

Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God's majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judg'd by subject and inferior breath,
And he himself not present? O! forfend
it, God,

That in a Christian climate souls refin'd 130
Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed.

I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stirr'd up by God thus boldly for his king.
My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call
king,

Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king;
And if you crown him, let me prophesy,
The blood of English shall manure the
ground

And future ages groan for this foul act;
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars 140
Shall kin with kin and kind with kind con-
found;

Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha and dead men's skulls.
O! if you raise this house against this
house,

It will the woefullest division prove
That ever fell upon this cursed earth.
Prevent it, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest children's children cry against you
'woe!'

North. Well have you argu'd, sir; and,
for your pains, 150

Of capital treason we arrest you here.
My lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.
May it please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit.

Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view

He may surrender; so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct. Exit.

Boling. Lords, you that here are under our arrest,

Procure your sureties for your days of answer.

Little are we beholding to your love, 160
And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter YORK, with King RICHARD, and Officers bearing the crown, etc.

K. Rich. Alack! why am I sent for to a
king

Before I have shook off the regal thoughts Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd

To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my limbs:

Give sorrow leave awhile to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?

Did they not sometime cry 'All hail!' to me?
So Judas did to Christ: but he, in twelve, 170

Found truth in all but one; I, in twelve thousand, none.

God save the king! Will no man say amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then,
amen.

God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me.
To do what service am I sent for hither?

York. To do that office of thine own good will

Which tired majesty did make thee offer,
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke. 180

K. Rich. Give me the crown. Here, cousin, seize the crown;

Here, cousin,
On this side my hand and on that side thine.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well
That owes two buckets filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down, unseen and full of water:
That bucket down and full of tears am I,
Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign. 190

K. Rich. My crown I am; but still my griefs are mine.

You may my glories and my state depose, But not my griefs; still am I king of those.

Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares set up do not pluck my cares down.

My care is loss of care, by old care done; Your care is gain of care, by new care won: The cares I give I have, though given away; They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown? 200

K. Rich. Ay, no; no, ay; for I must nothing be;

Therefore no no, for I resign to thee. Now mark me how I will undo myself:

I give this heavy weight from off my head, And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand, The pride of kingly sway from out my heart; With mine own tears I wash away my balm, With my own hands I give away my crown, With mine own tongue deny my sacred state, With mine own breath release all duty's rites: 210

All pomp and majesty I do forswear; My manors, rents, revenues I forego; My acts, decrees, and statutes I deny: God pardon all oaths that are broke to me!

God keep all vows unbroke that swear to thee!

Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd,

And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all achiev'd!

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,

And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit!

God save King Henry, unking'd Richard says, 220

And send him many years of sunshine days! What more remains?

North. Offering a paper. No more but that you read

These accusations and these grievous crimes Committed by your person and your followers Against the state and profit of this land;

That, by confessing them, the souls of men May deem that you are worthily depos'd.

K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out

My weav'd-up follies? Gentle Northumberland, If thy offences were upon record, 230

Would it not shame thee in so fair a troop To read a lecture of them? If thou would'st,

There should'st thou find one heinous article,

Containing the deposing of a king, And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,

Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven.

Nay, all of you that stand and look upon me,

Whilst that my wretchedness doth bait myself, Though some of you with Pilate wash your hands, 239

Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,

And water cannot wash away your sin.

North. My lord, dispatch; read o'er these articles.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:

And yet salt water blinds them not so much But they can see a sort of traitors here.

Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself, I find myself a traitor with the rest;

For I have given here my soul's consent To undo the pompous body of a king; 250

Made glory base and sovereignty a slave, Proud majesty a subject, state a peasant.

North. My lord,—
K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haught insulting man,

Nor no man's lord; I have no name, no title, No, not that name was given me at the font,

But 't is usurp'd: alack! the heavy day, That I have worn so many winters out,

And know not now what name to call myself. O! that I were a mockery king of snow, 260

Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke, To melt myself away in water-drops.

Good king, great king, and yet not greatly good,

An if my word be sterling yet in England, Let it command a mirror hither straight,

That it may show me what a face I have, Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.

Boling. Go some of you and fetch a looking-glass. Exit an Attendant.

North. Read o'er this paper while the glass doth come.

K. Rich. Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come to hell. 270

Boling. Urge it no more, my Lord Northumberland.

North. The commons will not then be satisfied.

K. Rich. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough

When I do see the very book indeed Where all my sins are writ, and that 's myself.

•Re-enter Attendant, with a glass.

Give me the glass, and therein will I read. No deeper wrinkles yet? hath sorrow struck

So many blows upon this face of mine And made no deeper wounds? O flattering glass!

Like to my followers in prosperity, 280 Thou dost beguile me. Was this face the face

That every day under his household roof Did keep ten thousand men? was this the face

That like the sun did make beholders wink? Was this the face that fac'd so many follies,

And was at last out-fac'd by Bolingbroke? A brittle glory shineth in this face:

As brittle as the glory is the face;

Dashes the glass against the ground.

For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.
Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport, 290
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd
The shadow of your face.

K. Rich. Say that again.
The shadow of my sorrow! Ha! let's see:
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of laments
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief
That swells with silence in the tortured soul;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king.

For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st 300
Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way

How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,

And then be gone and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?

Boling. Name it, fair cousin.
K. Rich. 'Fair cousin!' I am greater than a king;

For when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects: being now a subject,

I have a king here to my flatterer.
Being so great, I have no need to beg.

Boling. Yet ask. 310

K. Rich. And shall I have?

Boling. You shall.

K. Rich. Then give me leave to go.

Boling. Whither?

K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your sights.

Boling. Go, some of you convey him to the Tower.

K. Rich. O, good! convey? conveyers are you all.

That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall.
Exeunt King RICHARD and Guard.

Boling. On Wednesday next we solemnly set down

Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves. 320

Exeunt all but the Bishop of CARLISLE, the Abbot of WESTMINSTER, and AUMERLE.

Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here
beheld.

Car. The woe's to come; the children
yet unborn

Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.
Aum. You holy clergymen, is there no plot

To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?
Abbot. My lord,

Before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament

To bury mine intents, but also to effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise. 330

I see your brows are full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of
tears:

Come home with me to supper; I will lay
A plot shall show us all a merry day.

Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—London. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter the QUEEN and Ladies.

Queen. This way the king will come;
this is the way
To Julius Cæsar's ill-erected tower,
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke:
Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter King RICHARD and Guard.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose wither: yet look up, behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew.
And wash him fresh again with true-love
tears. 10

Ah! thou, the model where old Troy did
stand,

Thou map of honour, thou King Richard's
tomb,

And not King Richard; thou most beauteous inn,

Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in
thee,

When triumph is become an alehouse
guest?

K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman,
do not so,

To make my end too sudden: learn, good
soul,

To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awak'd, the truth of what we are

Show us but this. I am sworn brother,
sweet, 20

To grim Necessity; and he and I Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France,

And cloister thee in some religious house;
Our holy lives must win a new world's
crown,

Which our profane hours here have stricken
down.

Queen. What! is my Richard both in shape and mind

Transform'd and weaken'd? hath Boling-broke depos'd

Thine intellect? hath he been in thy heart?
The lion dying thrusteth forth his paw

And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage 30

To be o'erpower'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like,

Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod,
And fawn on rage with base humility,

Which art a lion and a king of beasts?
K. Rich. A king of beasts indeed; if ought but beasts,

I had been still a happy king of men.
Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France;

Think I am dead, and that even here thou
tak'st,

As from my death-bed, thy last living leave.
In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire 40

With good old folks, and let them tell thee tales
Of woeful ages, long ago betid;
And ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief,
Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds:
For why, the senseless brands will sympathize
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
And in compassion weep the fire out;
And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the deposing of a rightful king. 50

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang'd;
You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.
And, madam, there is order ta'en for you;
With all the swift speed you must away to France.

K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is ere foul sin gathering head Shall break into corruption. Thou shalt think,
Though he divide the realm and give thee half, 60
It is too little, helping him to all;
And he shall think that thou which know'st the way

To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,
Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way
To pluck him headlong from the usurp'd throne.
The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
That fear to hate; and hate turns one or both

To worthy danger and deserved death.
North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.
Take leave and part; for you must part forthwith. 70

K. Rich. Doubly divorc'd! Bad men, ye violate
A two-fold marriage; 'twixt my crown and me,
And then betwixt me and my married wife.
Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me;
And yet not so, for with a kiss 't was made.
Part us, Northumberland: I towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime;

My wife to France: from whence, set forth in pomp,
She came adorned hither like sweet May,
Sent back like Hallowmas or short'st of day. 80

Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?

K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

Queen. Banish us both and send the king with me.

North. That were some love but little policy.

Queen. Then whither he goes, thither let me go.

K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe.

Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;
Better far off than near, be ne'er the near.
Go, count thy way with sighs, I mine with groans.

Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans. 90

K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short,

And piece the way out with a heavy heart.
Come, come, in wooing sorrow let's be brief,
Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.

One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part:

Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart.

Queen. Give me mine own again; 't were no good part

To take on me to keep and kill thy heart.

So, now I have mine own again, be gone,
That I may strive to kill it with a groan. 100

K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay:

Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of YORK'S Palace.

Enter YORK and the DUCHESS.

Duch. My lord, you told me you would tell the rest,

When weeping made you break the story off,
Of our two cousins coming into London.

York. Where did I leave?

Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,
Where rude misgovern'd hands, from windows' tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course, 10

While all tongues cried 'God save thee, Bolingbroke!'

You would have thought the very windows spake,

So many greedy looks of young and old
Through casements darted their desiring eyes

Upon his visage, and that all the walls
With painted imagery had said at once
'Jesu preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!'

Whilst he, from one side to the other turning,

Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,

Bespake them thus: 'I thank you, countrymen': 20

And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. Alack! poor Richard; where rode he the whilst?

York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men, After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage, Are idly bent on him that enters next, Thinking his prattle to be tedious;

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes

Did scowl on Richard: no man cried 'God save him!'

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home;

But dust was thrown upon his sacred head,<sup>30</sup> Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off, His face still combating with tears and smiles,

The badges of his grief and patience, That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd

The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,

And barbarism itself have pitied him.

But heaven hath a hand in these events, To whose high will we bound our calm contents.

To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,

Whose state and honour I for aye allow. <sup>40</sup>

Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Aumerle that was; But that is lost for being Richard's friend, And, madam, you must call him Rutland now.

I am in parliament pledge for his truth And lasting fealty to the new made king.

Enter AUMERLE.

Duch. Welcome, my son: who are the violets now

That strew the green lap of the new come spring?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not:

God knows I had as lief be none as one.

York. Well, bear you well in this new spring of time, <sup>50</sup>

Lest you be cropp'd before you come to prime.

What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?

Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God prevent it not, I purpose so.

York. What seal is that that hangs without thy bosom?

Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.

Aum. My lord, 't is nothing.

York. No matter then who sees it: I will be satisfied; let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech your grace to pardon me: <sup>60</sup>

It is a matter of small consequence, Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.

I fear, I fear,—

Duch. What should you fear?

'T is nothing but some bond that he is enter'd into

For gay apparel 'gainst the triumph day.

York. Bound to himself? what doth he with a bond

That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool. Boy, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not show it. <sup>70</sup>

York. I will be satisfied; let me see it, I say. Snatches it, and reads.

Treason! foul treason! Villain! traitor! slave!

Duch. What is the matter, my lord?

York. Ho! who is within there?

Enter a Servant.

Saddle my horse.

God for his mercy! what treachery is here!

Duch. Why, what is it, my lord?

York. Give me my boots, I say: saddle my horse. Exit Servant.

Now, by mine honour, by my life, my troth, I will appeach the villain.

Duch. What 's the matter?

York. Peace, foolish woman. <sup>80</sup>

Duch. I will not peace. What is the matter, Aumerle?

Aum. Good mother, be content; it is no more

Than my poor life must answer.

Duch. Thy life answer!

York. Bring me my boots: I will unto the king.

Re-enter Servant, with boots.

Duch. Strike him, Aumerle. Poor boy, thou art amaz'd.

Hence, villain! never more come in my sight. Exit Servant.

York. Give me my boots, I say.

Duch. Why, York, what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own? Have we more sons, or are we like to have? <sup>90</sup>

Is not my teeming date drunk up with time? And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age,

And rob me of a happy mother's name? Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?

York. Thou fond, mad woman, Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?

A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,

And interchangeably set down their hands, To kill the king at Oxford.

Duch. He shall be none; We'll keep him here: then what is that to him? <sup>100</sup>

York. Away, fond woman! were he twenty times

My son, I would appeach him.

Duch. Hadst thou groan'd for him As I have done thou would'st be more pitiful.

But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect That I have been disloyal to thy bed,

And that he is a bastard, not thy son: Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind;

Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind;

Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind;

Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind;

He is as like thee as a man may be,
Not like to me, nor any of my kin,
And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman! Exit.

Duch. After, Aumerle! Mount thee upon his horse; 111

Spur post, and get before him to the king,
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse
thee.

I'll not be long behind; though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as fast as York:
And never will I rise up from the ground
Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee. Away!
be gone. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.

Enter BOLINGBROKE as king; PERCY, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell me of my un-thrifty son?

'T is full three months since I did see him
last.

If any plague hang over us, 't is he.
I would to God, my lords, he might be
found:

Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns
there,

For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions,

Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes

And beat our watch and rob our passengers;
Which he, young wanton and effeminate
boy, 10

Takes on the point of honour to support
So dissolute a crew.

Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the prince,

And told him of those triumphs held at Oxford.

Boling. And what said the gallant?

Percy. His answer was, he would unto the stews,

And from the common'st creature pluck a glove,

And wear it as a favour; and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.

Boling. As dissolute as desperate: yet through both 20

I see some sparks of better hope, which elder days

May happily bring forth. But who comes
here?

Enter AUMERLE.

Aum. Where is the king?

Boling. What means our cousin, that he stares and looks

So wildly?

Aum. God save your grace! I do beseech your majesty

To have some conference with your grace
alone.

Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.

Exeunt PERCY and Lords.

What is the matter with our cousin now?

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth, Kneels. 30

My tongue cleave to my roof within my
mouth,

Unless a pardon ere I rise or speak.

Boling. Intended or committed was this fault?

If on the first, how heinous e'er it be,
To win thy after-love I pardon thee.

Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the key,

That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling. Have thy desire.

York. Within. My liege, beware! look to thyself;

Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there. 40
Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe.

Drawing.

Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand; thou hast no cause to fear.

York. Within. Open the door, secure, foolhardy king:

Shall I for love speak treason to thy face?
Open the door, or I will break it open.

Enter YORK.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak;
Recover breath; tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.

York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know

The treason that my haste forbids me
show. 50

Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise pass'd:

I do repent me; read not my name there;
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

York. 'T was, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.

I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king;
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence.

Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling. O heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy!

O loyal father of a treacherous son! 60
Thou sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain,

From whence this stream through muddy passages

Hath held his current and defil'd himself!
Thy overflow of good converts to bad,

And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.

York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd,

And he shall spend mine honour with his
shame,

As thriftless sons their scraping fathers'
gold.

Mine honour lives when his dishonour
dies, 70

Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies:
Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him

breath,
The traitor lives, the true man's put to

death.

Duch. Within. What ho, my liege! for God's sake, let me in.

Boling. What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this eager cry?

Duch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king; 't is I.

Speak with me, pity me, open the door:
A beggar begs that never begg'd before.

Boling. Our scene is alter'd from a serious thing,

And now chang'd to 'The Beggar and the King.' 80

My dangerous cousin, let your mother in:
I know she's come to pray for your foul sin.

York. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,
More sins for this forgiveness prosper may.

This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rests sound;

This let alone will all the rest confound.

Enter DUCHESS.

Duch. O king! believe not this hard-hearted man:

Love loving not itself none other can.

York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make here?

Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear? 90

Duch. Sweet York, be patient. Hear me, gentle liege. Kneels.

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech:
For ever will I walk upon my knees,

And never see day that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,

By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers I bend my knee. Kneels.

York. Against them both my true joints bended be. Kneels.

Ill may'st thou thrive if thou grant any grace!

Duch. Pleads he in earnest? look upon his face; 100

His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;

His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast:

He prays but faintly and would be denied;
We pray with heart and soul and all beside:

His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they

grow:

His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Ours of true zeal and deep integrity.

Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have

That mercy which true prayer ought to have. 110

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. Nay, do not say 'stand up';
But 'pardon' first, and afterwards 'stand up.'

An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
'Pardon' should be the first word of thy speech.

I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say 'pardon,' king; let pity teach thee how:

The word is short, but not so short as sweet;

No word like 'pardon' for kings' mouths so meet.

York. Speak it in French, king; say, 'pardonnez-moi.'

Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy? 120

Ah! my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,

That sett'st the word itself against the word.
Speak 'pardon' as 't is current in our land;

The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue

there,
Or in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear,

That hearing how our complaints and prayers do pierce,

Pity may move thee pardon to rehearse.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not sue to stand;
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand. 130

Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.

Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!

Yet am I sick for fear; speak it again;
Twice saying 'pardon' doth not pardon

twain,
But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. With all my heart
I pardon him.

Duch. A god on earth thou art.

Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law and the abbot,

With all the rest of that consorted crew, Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.

Good uncle, help to order several powers 140
To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are:
They shall not live within this world, I swear,

But I will have them, if I once know where.

Uncle, farewell: and cousin too, adieu:
Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you

true.

Duch. Come, my old son: I pray God make thee new. Exeunt.

Enter EXTON and Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king,
what words he spake,

'Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?'

Was it not so?

Serv. Those were his very words.

Exton. 'Have I no friend?' quoth he: he spake it twice, 150

And urg'd it twice together, did he not?

Serv. He did.

Exton. And speaking it, he wistly look'd
on me,

As who should say, 'I would thou wert the
man

That would divorce this terror from my
heart';

Meaning the king at Pomfret. Come, let's
go:

I am the king's friend, and will rid his foe.
Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Pomfret. The Dungeon of the Castle.Enter King RICHARD.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare
The prison where I live unto the world:
And for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer it out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
My soul the father: and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world,

In humours like the people of this world, 10
For no thought is contented. The better sort,

As thoughts of things divine, are intermix'd
With scruples, and do set the word itself
Against the word:

As thus, 'Come, little ones'; and then again,

'It is as hard to come as for a camel
To tread the postern of a needle's eye.'
Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot Unlikely wonders; how these vain weak
nails

May tear a passage through the flinty ribs 20
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.
Thoughts tending to content flatter themselves

That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,

Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars
Who sitting in the stocks refuge their shame,

That many have and others must sit there:
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back
Of such as have before endur'd the like. 30
Thus play I in one person many people,
And none contented: sometimes am I king;
Then reasons make me wish myself a beggar,

And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again; and by and by
Think that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing: but whate'er I be,
Nor I nor any man that but man is 39
With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
With being nothing. Music.

Ha, ha! keep time. How sour sweet music is

When time is broke and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men's lives.

And here have I the daintiness of ear
To check time broke in a disorder'd string;
But for the concord of my state and time
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste
me;

For now hath time made me his numbering clock: 50

My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs
they jar

Their watches on unto mine eyes, the outward watch,

Whereto my finger, like a dial's point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.

Now sir, the sound that tells what hour it is
Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,

Which is the bell: so sighs and tears and groans

Show minutes, times, and hours; but my time

Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the clock. 60

This music mads me: let it sound no more;

For though it hath help madmen to their wits,

In me it seems it will make wise men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!

For 't is a sign of love, and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter a Groom of the Stable.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!

K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.

What art thou? and how comest thou hither,

Where no man never comes but that sad dog 70

That brings me food to make misfortune live?

Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,

When thou wert king; who, travelling towards York,

With much ado at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometimes royal master's face.

O! how it yearn'd my heart when I beheld
In London streets, that coronation day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary,
That horse that thou so often hast bestrid,
That horse that I so carefully have dress'd. 80

K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle friend,

How went he under him?

Groom. So proudly as if he disdain'd the ground.

K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!

That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;

This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.

Would he not stumble? would he not fall down,

Since pride must have a fall, and break the neck

Of that proud man that did usurp his back?
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee, 90

Since thou, created to be aw'd by man,
Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;

And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jauncing Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with a dish.

Keeper. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 't is time thou wert away.

Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. Exit.

Keeper. My lord, will 't please you to fall to?

K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do. 99

Keeper. My lord, I dare not: Sir Pierce of Exton, who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.

K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster and thee!
Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

Strikes the Keeper.

Keeper. Help, help, help!

Enter EXTON and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault?

Villain, thine own hand yields thy death's instrument.

Snatching a weapon, and killing one.

Go thou and fill another room in hell.

He kills another; EXTON strikes him down.
That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire

That staggers thus my person. Exton, thy fierce hand 110

Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land.

Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high,

Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die. Dies.

Exton. As full of valour as of royal blood: Both have I spilt; O! would the deed were good;

For now the devil, that told me I did well, Says that this deed is chronicled in hell.

This dead king to the living king I'll bear. Take hence the rest and give them burial here. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Windsor. An Apartment in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE and YORK, with Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear

Is that the rebels have consum'd with fire Our town of Cicester in Gloucestershire; But whether they be ta'en or slain we hear not.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

Welcome, my lord. What is the news?

North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness.

The next news is, I have to London sent The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent.

The manner of their taking may appear At large discoursed in this paper here. 10

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains,

And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter FITZWATER.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London

The heads of Brocas and Sir Bennet Seely, Two of the dangerous consorted traitors

That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;

Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter PERCY, with the Bishop of CARLISLE.

Percy. The grand conspirator, Abbot of Westminster,

With clog of conscience and sour melancholy, 20

Hath yielded up his body to the grave; But here is Carlisle living, to abide

Thy kingly doom and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:

Choose out some secret place, some reverend room

More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life; So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife: For though mine enemy thou hast ever been, High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter EXTON, with Attendants bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present 30

Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies

The mightiest of thy greatest enemies, Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought

A deed of slander with thy fatal hand Upon my head and all this famous land.

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed.

Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,

Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead, I hate the murderer, love him murdered. 40

The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,

But neither my good word nor princely favour:

With Cain go wander through the shades of night,

And never show thy head by day nor light. Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,

That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow:

Come, mourn with me for that I do lament, And put on sullen black incontinent.

I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land, To wash this blood off from my guilty

hand. 50

March sadly after; grace my mournings here,

In weeping after this untimely bier. Exeunt.

THE FIRST PART OF KING HENRY THE FOURTH

IN the First Part of Henry IV Shakespeare has for the first time in his history plays given his imagination free scope and, by combining fiction with fact, presented a picture of the England of the time such as no chronicle could supply. We cannot think it other than a part of Shakespeare's design in developing the character of the future King Henry V, that he should bring him into intimate contact with a group that represented, perhaps, a majority of the common people of England. It is no small accomplishment, even in a king, to be able to "drink with any tinker in his own language during life," to call a "leash of drawers" by their "christian names" and to converse with fellows that have "fewer words than a parrot." Such men make up the great body of the nation, and it is a fine thing for any prince to have their support through a common understanding, and to be assured that when he is king he can "command all the good lads in Eastcheap." Shakespeare is sending Prince Hal to school, and where could he find a better tutor than sweet Jack Falstaff who is not only witty himself, but the cause that wit is in other men? History is not made up entirely of kings and courts and battles, nor is the most valuable information always acquired in the schools. To the ruler, much importance should attach to franklins from the wild of Kent, to ostlers grieving over the rise in the price of oats, to carriers on the way to London with turkeys and razes of ginger, to road houses villainous for fleas; to ragamuffins pressed into service, wounded soldiers compelled to beg through life at the town's end, linen hanging on the hedges, to stiles, gateways and footpaths. This is the England that we see in Henry IV and this is the England over which Shakespeare is preparing Prince Hal to rule. The secret of his future greatness is here revealed by the genuine liking he has for these very human people with whom he prefers to spend his time, rather than in the cold and formal atmosphere of his father's court.

But this conception of Prince Hal is utterly invalidated if we accept at its face value the speech assigned to him at the end of the second scene of the first Act: "I know you all, etc." If Shakespeare wrote that speech (and he probably did), it would be interesting to know under what exigency he was forced to insert it, for no one could know so well as he how completely it robs the Prince of all the charm with which Shakespeare has endowed him. Space forbids any attempt to harmonize it with the character, and it is doubtful whether that can ever be done without doing violence to the language; to the general reader the play will be improved by ignoring it; for if Prince Hal is only playing a part throughout these scenes to enhance by contrast his future glory, he becomes almost contemptible.

The action of the play is directed almost entirely to bringing together in mortal combat Prince Hal and Hotspur at the battle of Shrewsbury. Thoroughly human and likable as Hotspur is, he is being groomed throughout to deck the Prince at last with all his heaped-up honors. It is the thought of passing his "proud titles" on to this "mad-cap Prince of Wales" that grieves Hotspur more than "the loss of brittle life." And that is the defect in Hotspur. Glorious as he is in energy and action, he aspires to honor that he may wear it without a competitor. He has little real patriotism in his make-up. There seems to be a bad streak in his family. His uncle Worcester's perfidy shows palpably at Shrewsbury when he deceives Hotspur in reporting the king's terms of peace. Hotspur himself, anticipating success in the rebellion, does not hesitate to divide the kingdom into three equal parts with Glendower and Mortimer, and then quarrels with Glendower over straightening the Trent which, in its bend, seems to cut into his portion. Generous by nature, he has the habit of close bargaining and will "cavil on the ninth part of a hair." The contrast between him and Prince Hal is finely brought out by comparing his dying speech, already referred to, with that pronounced by the Prince over his dead body:

" . . . . fare thee well, great heart!
 Ill weav'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk!
 When that this body did contain a spirit,
 A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
 But now two paces of the vilest earth
 Is room enough: this earth that bears thee dead
 Bears not alive so stout a gentleman."

Not a word of his own achievement; no apparent sense of an exchange of his own "indignities" for Hotspur's "glorious deeds." To him it mattered little that Falstaff should claim the honor of having killed Percy so long as "the day is ours." There was in him a generosity of spirit quite beyond the comprehension of his father. Indeed, the character of the king is perhaps best revealed by his estimate of his son. To King Henry, Hotspur in rebellion has a more worthy claim to the state than Prince Hal, "the shadow of succession." Henry himself does not seem to attach any deep meaning to loyalty. He estimates human worth by power and by achievement rather than by devotion to principle. He is not so much concerned that Prince Hal is suffering morally as a result of his escapades, as he is that he is hurting his reputation—and the king's. That he is a bit of a hypocrite is clear from his account of his own clever method of winning popular favor:

"By being seldom seen, I could not stir
 But like a comet I was wondered at;
 That men would tell their children 'This is he';
 Others would say 'Where, which is Bolingbroke?'
 And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
 And dress'd myself in such humility
 That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
 Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
 Even in the presence of the crowned king."

And this is the method that he would recommend to his son. There is something pitiful about his inability to see that the loneliness which he seems to feel so deeply, is due to faults within his own nature. His very dignity, his most kingly trait, is cold and forbidding and makes impossible the sweet relation of close and devoted friends. To his enemies he is subtle and ingrate. Of all who helped him to the throne he is now suspicious, because he feels some remorse for the crooked path by which he attained the crown. He is particularly sensitive lest they presume upon past services, and therefore gives them just cause for resentment; yet he would, if only for policy's sake, be at peace with them. The terms which he sends to the rebels are generous, and the sentence imposed upon Worcester and Vernon is just.

Something ought to be said of Glendower, his pride in his English and the restraint he exercises in his dealings with Hotspur; of Lady Percy who, if she is to be compared with Portia, Brutus' wife, has every right to insist that their husbands shall be compared too, but who would not have exchanged her "mad-headed ape" for a wilderness of Brutuses; of Mistress Quickly who, as an honest man's wife, may well resent being called "a thing to thank God on"; and of Falstaff, "sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff." But of him we shall have more in the Second Part. If thus far we have mistaken him for a coward and a buffoon we should do well to revise our judgment before proceeding further. He would like to pass for both, but the evidence is against him. He has a theory about honor, but such honor as Percy seeks must thrust itself upon him. Such honor is insensible to the dead, and detraction will not let it live with the living. Those whose "spirit works lest arms and legs want play" will not understand him; but the number increases of those who, if Falstaff should remain a guest, would prefer to make the tavern in Eastcheap their drum rather than share bloody noses and cracked crowns with Hotspur on the field of Shrewsbury.

ACT I

SCENE I.—London. The Palace.

Enter King HENRY, WESTMORELAND, and Others.

K. Hen. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new
broils

To be commenc'd in strands afar remote.
No more the thirsty entrance of this soil Shall daub her lips with her own children's
blood;

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowerets with the armed hoofs

Of hostile paces: those opposed eyes,
Which, like the meteors of a troubled
heaven,

All of one nature, of one substance bred,
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual well-beseeming ranks,
March all one way, and be no more oppos'd
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore,
friends,

As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
Whose soldier now, under whose blessed
cross

We are impressed and engag'd to fight,

Forthwith a power of English shall we levy,
Whose arms were moulded in their mothers'
womb

To chase these pagans in those holy fields
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet Which fourteen hundred years ago were nail'd

For our advantage on the bitter cross.
But this our purpose is a twelvemonth old,
And bootless 't is to tell you we will go:
Therefore we meet not now. Then let me
hear

Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland
What yesternight our council did decree
In forwarding this dear expedience.

West. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits of the charge set down
But yesternight; when all athwart there came

A post from Wales loaden with heavy news;
Whose worst was, that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight Against the irregular and wild Glendower, 40
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,

A thousand of his people butchered;
Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,

Such beastly shameless transformation
By those Welshwomen done, as may not be Without much shame re-told or spoken of.

K. Hen. It seems then that the tidings of this broil

Brake off our business for the Holy Land.

West. This match'd with other did, my gracious lord;

For more uneven and unwelcome news 50
Came from the north, and thus it did import:
On Holy-rood day, the gallant Hotspur
there,

Young Harry Percy and brave Archibald,
That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met,

Where they did spend a sad and bloody
hour;

As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention did take horse, 60

Uncertain of the issue any way.

K. Hen. Here is a dear and true industrious friend,

Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his
horse,

Stain'd with the variation of each soil Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;

And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.

The Earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,

Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter
see

On Holmedon's plains: of prisoners Hotspur took 70

Mordake the Earl of Fife, and eldest son
To beaten Douglas, and the Earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.
And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? ha, cousin, is it not?

West. In faith,
It is a conquest for a prince to boast of.

K. Hen. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin

In envy that my Lord Northumberland
Should be the father to so blest a son; 80
A son who is the theme of honour's tongue;
Amongst a grove the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet Fortune's minion and her
pride:

Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O! that it could be prov'd

That some night-tripping fairy had ex-chang'd

In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,

And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet.
Then would I have his Harry, and he
mine. 90

But let him from my thoughts. What think you, coz,

Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd,
To his own use he keeps, and sends me
word,

I shall have none but Mordake Earl of Fife.
West. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,

Malevolent to you in all aspects;

Which makes him prune himself, and bristle
up

The crest of youth against your dignity.

K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer this; 100

And for this cause awhile we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.

Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor; so inform the lords:

But come yourself with speed to us again;
For more is to be said and to be done

Than out of anger can be uttered.

West. I will, my liege. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. An Apartment of the PRINCE'S.

Enter the PRINCE and FALSTAFF.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad?

Prince. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning these after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou would'st truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? Unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping-houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-coloured taffeta, I see no reason why thou should'st be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed, you come near me now, Hal; for we that take purses go by the moon and the seven stars, and not by Phoebus, he, 'that wandering knight so fair.' And, I prithee, sweet wag, when thou art king, as, God save thy grace, majesty, I should say, for grace thou wilt have none.— 20

Prince. What! none?

Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

Prince. Well, how then? come roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us that are squires of the night's body be called thieves of the day's beauty: let us be Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; and let men say we be men of good government, being governed as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we steal. 33

Prince. Thou sayest well, and it holds well too; for the fortune of us that are the moon's men doth ebb and flow like the sea, being governed as the sea is, by the moon.
As for proof now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing 'Lay by,' and spent with crying 'Bring in'; now in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder, and by and by in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows. 43

Fal. By the Lord, thou sayest true, lad.
And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

Prince. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance? 49

Fal. How now, how now, mad wag! what! in thy quips and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

Prince. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou hast called her a reckoning many a time and oft.

Prince. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

Fal. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there. 60

Prince. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and where it would not, I have used my credit.

Fal. Yea, and so used it that, were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent,—But, I prithee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus fobbed as it is with the rusty curb of old Father Antick the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief. 70

Prince. No; thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.

Prince. Thou judgest false already; I mean thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

Prince. For obtaining of suits? 80

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood, I am as melancholy as a gib cat, or a lugged bear.

Prince. Or an old lion, or a lover's lute.

Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

Prince. What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch? 88

Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes, and art indeed the most comparative, rascalliast, sweet young prince. But, Hal, I prithee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought. An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir, but I marked him not; and yet he talked very wisely; but I regarded him not; and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

Prince. Thou didst well; for Wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it. 100

Fal. O! thou hast damnable iteration, and art indeed able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal; God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain: I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom. 110

Prince. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. 'Zounds! where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one; an I do not, call me villain and baffle me.

Prince. I see a good amendment of life in thee; from praying to purse-taking.

Enter POINS, at a distance.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation. Poins! Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match. O! if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain that ever cried 'Stand!' to a true man. 122

Prince. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal. What says Monsieur Remorse? What says Sir John Sack-and-Sugar? Jack! how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last for a cup of Madeira and a cold capon's leg? 129

Prince. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs: he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

Prince. Else he had been damned for cozening the devil. 137

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill! There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have vizards for you all; you have horses for yourselves. Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester; I have bespoke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap: we may do it as secure as sleep. If you will go I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home and be hanged.

Fal. Hear ye, Yedward: if I tarry at home and go not, I'll hang you for going. 150

Poins. You will, chops?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

Prince. Who, I rob? I a thief? not I, by my faith.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou camest not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.

Prince. Well then, once in my days I'll be a madcap. 160

Fal. Why, that's well said.

Prince. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.

Prince. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I prithee, leave the prince and me alone: I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure that he shall go. 169

Fal. Well, God give thee the spirit of persuasion, and him the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewell: you shall find me in Eastcheap.

Prince. Farewell, thou latter spring!
Farewell, All-hallowen summer! 178

Exit FALSTAFF.
Poins. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow: I have a jest to execute that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill shall rob those men that we have already waylaid; yourself and I will not be there; and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head off from my shoulders.

Prince. But how shall we part with them in setting forth? 188

Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves, which they shall have no sooner achieved but we'll set upon them.

Prince. Yea, but 'tis like that they will know us by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see, I'll tie them in the wood; our vizards we will change after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. 202

Prince. Yea, but I doubt they will be too hard for us.

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured; and in the reproof of this lies the jest. 213

Prince. Well, I'll go with thee: provide us all things necessary and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap; there I'll sup. Farewell.

Poins. Farewell, my lord. Exit.

Prince. I know you all, and will awhile uphold

The unyok'd humour of your idleness:
Yet herein will I imitate the sun, 220
Who doth permit the base contagious clouds
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at.
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapours that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd for
come, 229

And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.
So, when this loose behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I never promised,
By how much better than my word I am
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes;
And like bright metal on a sullen ground,

My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly and attract more eyes

Than that which hath no foil to set it off. 239
I'll so offend to make offence a skill,
Redeeming time when men think least I will. Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Palace.

Enter King HENRY, NORTHUMBERLAND, WORCESTER, HOTSPUR, Sir WALTER BLUNT, and Others.

K. Hen. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,

Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And you have found me; for accordingly
You tread upon my patience: but be sure
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition,
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,

And therefore lost that title of respect
Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.

Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves 10

The scourge of greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness too which our own hands

Have help to make so portly.

North. My lord,—

K. Hen. Worcester, get thee gone; for I do see Danger and disobedience in thine eye.

O! sir, your presence is too bold and peremptory,

And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier of a servant brow.

You have good leave to leave us; when we need 20

Your use and counsel we shall send for you. Exit WORCESTER.

To NORTHUMBERLAND. You were about to speak.

North. Yea, my good lord. Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,

Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,
Were, as he says, not with such strength denied

As was deliver'd to your majesty:
Either envy, therefore, or misprision
Is guilty of this fault and not my son.

Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners:
But I remember, when the fight was done, 30
When I was dry with rage and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,

Came there a certain lord, neat, and trimly dress'd,

Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin, new reap'd,

Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home:
He was perfum'd like a milliner,

And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet-box, which ever and anon

He gave his nose and took 't away again;

Who therewith angry, when it next came
there, 40
Took it in snuff: and still he smil'd and talk'd;
And as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them untaught knaves, unman-
nerly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corpse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
My prisoners in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting with my wounds being cold,
To be so pester'd with a popinjay, 50
Out of my grief and my impatience
Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what,
He should, or he should not; for he made me mad.
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so
sweet,
And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman
Of guns, and drums, and wounds, God save the mark!
And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth
Was parmaceti for an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
That villainous saltpetre should be digg'd 60
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and but for these vile guns
He would himself have been a soldier.
This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answer'd indirectly, as I said;
And I beseech you, let not his report
Come current for an accusation
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.
Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good
my lord, 70
Whatever Harry Percy then had said
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest re-told,
May reasonably die and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.
K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners,
But with proviso and exception,
That we at our own charge shall ransom
straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer; 80
Who, on my soul, hath willfully betray'd
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against the great magician, damn'd Glendower,
Whose daughter, as we hear, the Earl of March
Hath lately married. Shall our coffers then
Be emptied to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend 90
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot. Revolted Mortimer!
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war: to prove that true Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour 100
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.
Three times they breath'd and three times
did they drink,
Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood,
Who then, affrighted with their bloody
looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
Never did base and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly
wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer 110
Receive so many, and all willingly:
Then let not him be slander'd with revolt.
K. Hen. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost belie him:
He never did encounter with Glendower:
I tell thee,
He durst as well have met the devil alone
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art thou not asham'd? But, sirrah, hence-
forth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer:
Send me your prisoners with the speediest
means, 120
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. My Lord Northumberland,
We license your departure with your son.
Send us your prisoners, or you 'll hear
of it.
Exeunt KING HENRY, BLUNT, and Train.
Hot. An if the devil come and roar for
them,
I will not send them: I will after straight
And tell him so; for I will ease my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head.
North. What! drunk with choler? stay and pause awhile: 129
Here comes your uncle.
Re-enter WORCESTER.
Hot. Speak of Mortimer!
'Zounds! I will speak of him; and let my soul
Want mercy if I do not join with him:
In his behalf I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood drop by drop i' the dust,
But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high i' the air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.
North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad.
Wor. Who struck this heat up after I was gone?

Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners; 149

And when I urg'd the ransom once again
Of my wife's brother, then his cheek look'd pale,

And on my face he turn'd an eye of death,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

Wor. I cannot blame him: was he not proclaim'd

By Richard that dead is the next of blood?

North. He was; I heard the proclamation:

And then it was, when the unhappy king,
Whose wrongs in us God pardon! did set forth

Upon his Irish expedition; 150
From whence he, intercepted, did return
To be depos'd, and shortly murdered.

Wor. And for whose death we in the world's wide mouth

Live scandaliz'd and foully spoken of.

Hot. But, soft! I pray you, did King Richard then Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer

Heir to the crown?

North. He did; myself did hear it.

Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king,

That wish'd him on the barren mountains starve.

But shall it be that you, that set the crown 160

Upon the head of this forgetful man,

And for his sake wear the detested blot

Of murd'rous subornation, shall it be,

That you a world of curses undergo,

Being the agents, or base second means,

The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?

O! pardon me that I descend so low,

To show the line and the predicament

Wherein you range under this subtle king.

Shall it for shame be spoken in these days, 170

Or fill up chronicles in time to come,

That men of your nobility and power

Did gage them both in an unjust behalf,

As both of you, God pardon it! have done,

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,

And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke?

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,

That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off

By him for whom these shames ye underwent?

No; yet time serves wherein you may redeem 180

Your banish'd honours, and restore yourselves

Into the good thoughts of the world again;

Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt

Of this proud king, who studies day and night

To answer all the debt he owes to you

Even with the bloody payment of your deaths.

Therefore, I say,—

Wor. Peace, cousin! say no more.

And now I will unclasp a secret book,

And to your quick-conceiving discontents
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous 190

As full of peril and adventurous spirit

As to o'er-walk a current, roaring loud,

On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

Hot. If he fall in, good night! or sink or swim:

Send danger from the east unto the west,
So honour cross it from the north to south,
And let them grapple: O! the blood more stirs

To rouse a lion than to start a hare.

North. Imagination of some great exploit Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

Hot. By heaven methinks it were an easy leap 201

To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon,

Or dive into the bottom of the deep,

Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,

And pluck up drowned honour by the locks;
So he that doth redeem her thence might wear

Without corrival all her dignities:

But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!

Wor. He apprehends a world of figures here,

But not the form of what he should attend. 210

Good cousin, give me audience for a while,
And list to me.

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Wor. Those same noble Scots

That are your prisoners,—

Hot. I'll keep them all;

By God, he shall not have a Scot of them:

No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not:

I'll keep them, by this hand.

Wor. You start away,

And lend no ear unto my purposes.

Those prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat.

He said he would not ransom Mortimer; 219

Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer;

But I will find him when he lies asleep,

And in his ear I'll holla 'Mortimer'!

Nay, I'll have a starting shall be taught to speak

Nothing but 'Mortimer,' and give it him,

To keep his anger still in motion.

Wor. Hear you, cousin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy,

Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke:

And that same sword-and-buckler Prince of Wales, 220

But that I think his father loves him not,

And would be glad he met with some mischance,

I would have him poison'd with a pot of ale.

Wor. Farewell, kinsman: I will talk to you

When you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool

Art thou, to break into this woman's mood,
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own!

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourg'd with rods, Nettled and stung with pismires, when I hear 240
 Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.
 In Richard's time,—what do you call the place?—
 A plague upon 't—it is in Gloucestershire;—
 'T was where the madcap duke his uncle kept,
 His uncle York; where I first bow'd my knee
 Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke; 'Sblood!
 When you and he came back from Ravenspurg.
North. At Berkeley castle.
Hot. You say true. 250
 Why, what a candy deal of courtesy
 This fawning greyhound then did proffer me!
 Look, 'when his infant fortune came to age,'
 And 'gentle Harry Percy,' and 'kind cousin';
 O! the devil take such cozeners. God forgive me!
 Good uncle, tell your tale, for I have done.
Wor. Nay, if you have not, to 't again;
 We'll stay your leisure.
Hot. I have done, i' faith.
Wor. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners.
 Deliver them up without their ransom straight, 260
 And make the Douglas' son your only mean
 For powers in Scotland; which, for divers reasons
 Which I shall send you written, be assur'd,
 Will easily be granted.
 To NORTHUMBERLAND. You, my lord,
 Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd,
 Shall secretly into the bosom creep
 Of that same noble prelate well belov'd,
 The archbishop.
Hot. Of York, is it not?
Wor. True; who bears hard 270
 His brother's death at Bristol, the lord Scroop.
 I speak not this in estimation,
 As what I think might be, but what I know
 Is ruminated, plotted, and set down;
 And only stays but to behold the face
 Of that occasion that shall bring it on.
Hot. I smell it:
 Upon my life it will do wondrous well.
North. Before the game's afoot thou still lett'st slip.
Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot: 279
 And then the power of Scotland and of York
 To join with Mortimer, ha?
Wor. And so they shall.
Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.
Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed.
 To save our heads by raising of a head;
 For, bear ourselves as even as we can,
 The king will always think him in our debt,
 And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,
 Till he hath found a time to pay us home.

And see already how he doth begin 289
 To make us strangers to his looks of love.
Hot. He does, he does: we'll be reveng'd on him.
Wor. Cousin, farewell: no further go in this
 Than I by letters shall direct your course.
 When time is ripe, which will be suddenly,
 I'll steal to Glendower and Lord Mortimer;
 Where you and Douglas and our powers at once,
 As I will fashion it, shall happily meet,
 To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,
 Which now we hold at much uncertainty.
North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive, I trust. 300
Hot. Uncle, adieu: O! let the hours be short Till fields and blows and groans applaud our sport. Exeunt.

ACT II

SCENE I.—Rochester. An Inn Yard.

Enter a Carrier, with a lantern in his hand.

First Car. Heigh-ho! An't be not four by the day I'll be hanged: Charles' Wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler!

Ostler. Within. Anon, anon.

First Car. I prithee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess. 8

Enter another Carrier.

Second Car. Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots: this house is turned upside down since Robin Ostler died.

First Car. Poor fellow! never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

Second Car. I think this be the most villainous house in all London road for fleas: I am stung like a tench.

First Car. Like a tench! by the mass, there is ne'er a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock. 20

Second Car. Why, they will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamberlie breeds fleas like a loach.

First Car. What, ostler! come away and be hanged, come away.

Second Car. I have a gammon of bacon and two races of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-cross. 28

First Car. God's body! the turkeys in my panner are quite starved. What, ostler! A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? An 'twere not as good a deed as drink to break the pate on thee, I am a very villain. Come, and be hanged! hast no faith in thee?

Enter GADSHILL.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

First Car. I think it be two o'clock.

Gads. I prithee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

First Car. Nay, by God, soft: I know a trick worth two of that, i' faith. 41

Gads. I prithee, lend me thine.

Second Car. Ay, when? canst tell? 'Lend me thy lantern,' quoth a'? marry, I'll see thee hanged first.

Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

Second Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee. Come, neighbour Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen: they will along with company, for they have great charge. Exeunt Carriers. 51

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. Within. 'At hand,' quoth pick-purse.

Gads. That's even as fair as 'at hand,' quoth the chamberlain; for thou variest no more from picking of purses than giving direction doth from labouring; thou layest the plot how. 57

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, Master Gadshill. It holds current that I told you yesternight: there's a franklin in the wild of Kent hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already and call for eggs and butter: they will away presently. 66

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks, I'll give thee this neck.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I prithee, keep that for the hangman; for I know thou worshippest Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may. 72

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for if I hang old Sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he's no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans that thou dreamest not of, the which for sport sake are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake make all whole. I am joined with no foot land-rakers, no long-staff sixpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio purple-hued malt-worms; but with nobility and tranquillity, burgomasters and great oneyers; such as can hold in, such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: and yet I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or rather, not pray to her, but prey on her, for they ride up and down on her and make her their boots. 91

Cham. What! the commonwealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholding to the night than to fern-seed for your walking invisible.

Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man. 101

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to; homo is a common name to all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Road by Gadshill.Enter the PRINCE and POINS.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter: I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gummed velvet.

Prince. Stand close.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Poins! Poins, and be hanged! Poins!

Prince. Peace, ye fat-kidneyed rascal! What a brawling dost thou keep!

Fal. Where's Poins, Hal?

Prince. He is walked up to the top of the hill: I'll go seek him. 9

Fal. I am accursed to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath removed my horse and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the square further afoot I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I 'scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two-and-twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else: I have drunk medicines. Poins! Hal! a plague upon you both! Bardolph! Peto! I'll starve ere I'll rob a foot further. An't were not as good a deed as drink to turn true man and to leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles afoot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough. A plague upon't when thieves cannot be true to one another! 29

They whistle.

Whew! a plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse and be hanged.

Prince. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood! I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt me thus? 40

Prince. Thou liest: thou art not colted; thou art uncolted.

Fal. I prithee, good Prince Hal, help me to my horse, good king's son.

Prince. Out, you rogue! shall I be your ostler?

Fal. Go, hang thyself in thine own heir apparent garters! If I be ta'en I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: when a jest is so forward, and afoot too! I hate it. 50

Enter GADSHILL.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poins. O! 't is our setter: I know his voice.

Enter BARDOLPH and PETO.

Bard. What news?

Gads. Case ye, case ye; on with your vizards: there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 't is going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, ye rogue; 't is going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.

Prince. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter then they light on us.

Peto. How many be there of them?

Gads. Some eight or ten.

Fal. 'Zounds! will they not rob us?

Prince. What! a coward, Sir John Paunch? 69

Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.

Prince. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Poins. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge: when thou needest him there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him if I should be hanged.

Prince. Ned, where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by; stand close.

Exeunt PRINCE and POINS.

Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business. 81

Enter Travellers.

First Trav. Come, neighbour; the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Thieves. Stand!

Travellers. Jesu bless us!

Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats: ah! whoreson caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth: down with them; fleece them.

Travellers. O! we are undone, both we and ours for ever. 92

Fal. Hang ye, gorbellied knaves, are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs; I would your store were here! On, bacons, on! What!

ye knaves, young men must live. You are grand-jurors, are ye? we'll jure ye, i' faith.

Here they rob them and bind them.
Exeunt.

Re-enter the PRINCE and POINS.

Prince. The thieves have bound the true men. Now could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever. 102

Poins. Stand close; I hear them coming.

Re-enter Thieves.

Fal. Come, my masters; let us share, and then to horse before day. An the Prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring; there's no more valour in that Poins than in a wild duck. 109

Prince. Your money!

Poins. Villains!

As they are sharing, the PRINCE and POINS set upon them. They all run away, and FALSTAFF, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booty behind them.

Prince. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse:

The thieves are scatter'd and possess'd with fear

So strongly that they dare not meet each other;

Each takes his fellow for an officer. 114

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, And lards the lean earth as he walks along: Were 't not for laughing I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue roar'd. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Warkworth. A Room in the Castle.

Enter HOTSPUR, reading a letter.

But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.

He could be contented; why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house: he shows in this he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more.

The purpose you undertake is dangerous;—

why, that's certain: 't is dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. 10

The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named uncertain; the time itself unsorted; and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.

Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my Lord of York commends the plot and the general course of the action. 'Zounds! an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? Lord Edmund Mortimer, my Lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not besides the Douglas? Have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month, and are they not some of them set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Ha! you shall see now in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king and lay open all our proceedings. O! I could divide myself and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Hang him! let him tell the king; we are prepared. I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady PERCY.

How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady P. O! my good lord, why are you thus alone? 40

For what offence have I this fortnight been A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is 't that takes from thee

Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep?

Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth,

And start so often when thou sitt'st alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks,

And given my treasures and my rights of thee

To thick-eyed musing and curs'd melancholy? 49

In thy faint slumbers I by thee have watch'd, And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars, Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed,

Cry 'Courage! to the field!' And thou hast talk'd

Of sallies and retires, of trenches, tents, Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets, Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin, Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain, And all the currents of a heady fight.

Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,

And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep, That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow. 61

Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream; And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,

Such as we see when men restrain their breath

On some great sudden hest. O! what portents are these?

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho!

Enter Servant.

Is Gilliams with the packet gone?

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriff? 70

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?

Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot. That roan shall be my throne. Well, I will back him straight: O Esperance! Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.

Exit Servant.

Lady P. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st thou, my lady?

Lady P. What is it carries you away?

Hot. Why, my horse, my love, my horse.

Lady P. Out, you mad-headed ape! 80
A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen

As you are toss'd with. In faith, I'll know your business, Harry, that I will.

I fear my brother Mortimer doth stir About his title, and hath sent for you

To line his enterprise. But if you go—
Hot. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

Lady P. Come, come, you paraquito, answer me

Directly unto this question that I ask. 89

In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry, An if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

Hot. Away, Away, you trifler! Love! I love thee not, I care not for thee, Kate: this is no world

To play with mammetts and to tilt with lips:

We must have bloody noses and crack'd crowns,

And pass them current too. God's me, my horse!

What say'st thou, Kate? what would'st thou have with me?

Lady P. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed?

Well, do not then; for since you love me not, 100

I will not love myself. Do you not love me? Nay, tell me if you speak in jest or no.

Hot. Come, wilt thou see me ride? And when I am o' horseback, I will swear

I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate; I must not have you henceforth question me

Whither I go, nor reason whereabout. Whither I must, I must; and, to conclude,

This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate. I know you wise; but yet no further wise

Than Harry Percy's wife: constant you are, But yet a woman; and for secrecy, 102

No lady closer; for I well believe Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know;

And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate.
Lady P. How! so far?

Hot. Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate;

Whither I go, thither shall you go too; To-day will I set forth, to-morrow you.

Will this content you, Kate?
Lady P. It must, of force. 120

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter the PRINCE and POINS.

Prince. Ned, prithee, come out of that fat room and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?

Prince. With three or four loggerheads amongst three or four score hogsheads. I have sounded the very base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can tell them all by their christen names, as Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy; and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff, but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, by the Lord, so they call me, and when I am king of England, I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call drinking deep, dyeing scarlet; and when you breathe in your watering, they cry 'hem!' and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapped even now into my hand by an under-skinker, one that never spake other English in his life than 'Eight shillings and sixpence,' and 'You are welcome'; with this shrill addition, 'Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon,' or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I prithee do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling 'Francis!' that his tale to me may be nothing but 'Anon.' Step aside, and I'll show thee a precedent.

Poins. Francis!

Prince. Thou art perfect.

Poins. Francis!

Exit. 40

Enter FRANCIS.

Fran. Anon, anon, sir. Look down into the Pomgarnet, Ralph.

Prince. Come hither, Francis.

Fran. My lord?

Prince. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth, five years, and as much as to—

Poins. Within. Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir. 49

Prince. Five years! by'r lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant as to play the coward with thy indenture and show it a fair pair of heels and run from it?

Fran. O Lord, sir! I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find in my heart—

Poins. Within. Francis!

Fran. Anon, sir.

Prince. How old art thou, Francis? 60

Fran. Let me see—about Michaelmas next I shall be—

Poins. Within. Francis!

Fran. Anon, sir. Pray you, stay a little, my lord.

Prince. Nay, but hark you, Francis. For the sugar thou gavest me, 't was a pennyworth, was 't not?

Fran. O Lord, sir! I would it had been two.

Prince. I will give thee for it a thousand pound: ask me when thou wilt and thou shalt have it. 70

Poins. Within. Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon.

Prince. Anon, Francis? No, Francis; but to-morrow, Francis; or, Francis, o' Thursday; or, indeed Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis!

Fran. My lord?

Prince. Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin, crystal-button, knot-pated, agate-ring, puke-stocking, caddis-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch,— 80

Fran. O Lord, sir, who do you mean?

Prince. Why then, your brown bastard is your only drink; for look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully. In Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fran. What, sir?

Poins. Within. Francis!

Prince. Away, you rogue! Dost thou not hear them call? 89

Here they both call him; the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What! standest thou still, and hearest such a calling? Look to the guests within. Exit FRANCIS.

My lord, old Sir John, with half-a-dozen more, are at the door: shall I let them in?

Prince. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. Exit Vintner.

Poins!

Re-enter POINS.

Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

Prince. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door: shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye; what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue? 103

Prince. I am now of all humours that have showed themselves humours since the old days of Goodman Adam to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight.

Re-enter FRANCIS.

What's o'clock, Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon, sir. Exit. 109

Prince. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is up-stairs and down-stairs; his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the North; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife 'Tie upon this quiet life! I want work.' 'O my sweet Harry,' says she, 'how many hast thou killed to-day?' 'Give my roan horse a drench,' says he, and answers 'Some fourteen,' an hour after; 'a trifle, a trifle.' I prithee, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play Dame Mortimer his wife. 'Rivo!' says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow. 125

Enter FALSTAFF, GADSHILL, BARDOLPH, PETO, and FRANCIS.

Poins. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen! Give me a cup of sack, boy. Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew nether-stocks and mend them and foot them too. A plague of all cowards! Give me a cup of sack, rogue. Is there no virtue extant? He drinks. 132

Prince. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter, pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun? if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too: there is nothing but roguery to be found in villanous man: yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it. A villanous coward! Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt. If manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unchanged in England, and one of them is fat and grows old; God help the while! a bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing. A plague of all cowards, I say still.

Prince. How now, wool-sack! what mutterest thou? 149

Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales!

Prince. Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that; and Poins there?

Poins. 'Zounds! ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, I'll stab thee. 169

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward; but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders; you care not who sees your back: call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me. Give me a cup of sack: I am a rogue if I drunk to-day. 169

Prince. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunkest last.

Fal. All's one for that. He drinks. A plague of all cowards, still say I.

Prince. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter! there be four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this day morning.

Prince. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Fal. Where is it! taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us. 180

Prince. What! a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scaped by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet, four through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw: ecce signum! I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards! Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains and the sons of darkness. 191

Prince. Speak, sirs; how was it?

Gads. We four set upon some dozen,—

Fal. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

Gads. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

Gads. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us,— 200

Fal. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

Prince. What! fought you with them all?

Fal. All! I know not what you call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish: if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legged creature.

Prince. Pray God you have not murdered some of them. 210

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: I have peppered two of them: two I am sure I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,—

Prince. What! four? thou said'st but two even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four. 220

Poins. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

Prince. Seven? why, there were but four even now.

Fal. In buckram?

Poins. Ay, four, in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else. 230

Prince. Prithee, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

Prince. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. These nine in buckram that I told thee of,—

Prince. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,—

Poins. Down fell their hose. 239

Fal. Began to give me ground; but I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and with a thought seven of the eleven I paid.

Prince. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two.

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves in Kendal-green came at my back and let drive at me; for it was so dark, Hal, that thou could'st not see thy hand. 248

Prince. These lies are like their father that begets them; gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts, thou knotty-pated fool, thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-ketch,—

Fal. What! art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth the truth?

Prince. Why, how could'st thou know these men in Kendal-green, when it was so dark thou could'st not see thy hand? come, tell us your reason: what sayest thou to this? 259

Poins. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What! upon compulsion? 'Zounds! an I were at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! if reasons were as plenty as blackberries I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

Prince. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin: this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horse-back-breaker, this huge hill of flesh;— 269

Fal. 'Sblood, you starveling, you eel-skin, you dried neat's-tongue, you bull's-pizzle, you stock-fish! O! for breath to utter what is like thee; you tailor's-yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tuck;—

Prince. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Poins. Mark, Jack. 278

Prince. We two saw you four set on four and bound them, and were masters of their wealth. Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down. Then did we two set on you four, and, with a word, out-faced you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house. And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard bull-calf. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Poins. Come, let's hear, Jack; what trick hast thou now? 294

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why, hear you, my masters: was it for me to kill the heir apparent? should I turn upon the true prince? why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct: the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter, I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money. Hostess, clap to the doors: watch to-night, pray to-morrow. Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What! shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

Prince. Content; and the argument shall be thy running away. 311

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me.

Enter Mistress QUICKLY.

Quick. O Jesu! My lord the prince!

Prince. How now, my lady the hostess! what sayest thou to me?

Quick. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door would speak with you: he says he comes from your father.

Prince. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother. 322

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Quick. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight? Shall I give him his answer?

Prince. Prithce, do, Jack.

Fal. Faith, and I'll send him packing. Exit.

Prince. Now, sirs: by'r lady, you fought fair; so did you, Peto; so did you, Bardolph: you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince, no; fie! 332

Bard. Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

Prince. Faith, tell me now in earnest, how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and said he would swear truth out of England but he would make you believe it was done in fight, and persuaded us to do the like. 338

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass to make them bleed, and then to beslobber our garments with it and swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven year before; I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

Prince. O villain! thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blushed extempore. Thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou rankest away. What instinct hadst thou for it? 350

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

Prince. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend?

Prince. Hot livers and cold purses.

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

Prince. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter FALSTAFF

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast! How long is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee? 361

Fal. My own knee! when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring. A plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad: here was Sir John Bracy from your father: you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy, and he of Wales, that gave Amamon the bastinado and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook—what a plague call you him? 373

Poins. O! Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen; the same; and his son-in-law Mortimer, and old Northumberland; and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular.

Prince. He that rides at high speed and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

Prince. So did he never the sparrow. 380

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run.

Prince. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running!

Fal. O' horseback, ye cuckoo! but afoot he will not budge a foot.

Prince. Yes, Jack, upon instinct. 389

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps more. Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's beard is turned white with the news; you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

Prince. Why then, it is like, if there come a hot June and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hobnails, by the hundreds. 399

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like we shall have good trading that way. But tell me, Hal, art thou not horrible afraid? thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

Prince. Not a whit, i' faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer. 412

Prince. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content: this chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

Prince. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful bald crown! 420

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved. Give me a cup of sack to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept: for

I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cambyases' vein.

Prince. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here is my speech. Stand aside, nobility.

Quick. O Jesu! this is excellent sport, i' faith.

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain. 431

Quick. O, the father! how he holds his countenance.

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my tristful queen,

For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Quick. O Jesu! he doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see. 437

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot! peace, good tickle-brain! Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied: for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villainous trick of thine eye and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If then thou be son to me, here lies the point; why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest; for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink but in tears, not in pleasure but in passion, not in words only, but in woes also. And yet there is a virtuous man whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name. 481

Prince. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. A goodly portly man, i' faith, and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by 'r lady, inclining to threescore; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be lewdly given, he deceiveth me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month? 475

Prince. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker or a poultier's hare. 481

Prince. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand. Judge, my masters.

Prince. Now, Harry! whence come you?

Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

Prince. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous. 487

Fal. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false: nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i' faith.

Prince. Swearest thou, ungracious boy? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee in the likeness of an old fat man; a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that bolting-hutch of beastliness, that swoln parcel of dropsies, that huge bombard of sack, that stuffed cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years? Wherein is he good but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning but in craft? wherein crafty but in villany? wherein villanous but in all things? wherein worthy but in nothing? 505

Fal. I would your grace would take me with you: whom means your grace?

Prince. That villanous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know. 510

Prince. I know thou dost.

Fal. But to say I know more harm in him than in myself were to say more than I know. That he is old, the more the pity, his white hairs do witness it: but that he is, saving your reverence, a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know is damned: if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord; banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company: banish plump Jack, and banish all the world. 527

Prince. I do, I will. A knocking heard.

Exeunt Mistress QUICKLY, FRANCIS, and BARDOLPH.

Re-enter BARDOLPH, running.

Bard. O! my lord, my lord, the sheriff with a most monstrous watch is at the door. 530

Fal. Out, ye rogue! Play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Mistress QUICKLY.

Quick. O Jesu! my lord, my lord!

Prince. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddle-stick: what's the matter?

Quick. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house. Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad without seeming so. 541

Prince. And thou a natural coward without instinct.

Fal. I deny your major. If you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope I shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.

Prince. Go, hide thee behind the arras: the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face and good conscience. 551

Fal. Both which I have had; but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

Prince. Call in the sheriff.

Exeunt all but the PRINCE and PETO.

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Now, Master sheriff, what's your will with me?

Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry

Hath follow'd certain men unto this house.

Prince. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious lord;

A gross fat man.

Car. As fat as butter. 560

Prince. The man, I do assure you, is not here,

For I myself at this time have employ'd him.

And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee,

That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time,

Send him to answer thee, or any man,

For any thing he shall be charg'd withal:

And so let me entreat you leave the house.

Sher. I will, my lord. There are two gentlemen

Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

Prince. It may be so: if he have robb'd these men, 570

He shall be answerable; and so farewell.

Sher. Good night, my noble lord.

Prince. I think it is good morrow, is it not?

Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock. Exeunt Sheriff and Carrier.

Prince. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's. Go, call him forth.

Peto. Falstaff! Fast asleep behind the arras, and snorting like a horse.

Prince. Hark, how hard he fetches breath. Search his pockets.

He searcheth his pockets, and findeth certain papers.

What hast thou found? 582

Peto. Nothing but papers, my lord.

Prince. Let's see what they be: read them.

Peto. Item, A capon . . . 2s. 2d.

Item, Sauce . . . 4d.

Item, Sack, two gallons . . . 5s. 8d.

Item, Anchovies and sack after supper . 2s. 6d.

Item, Bread . . . ob. 590

Prince. O monstrous! but one half-penny-worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack! What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage. There let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning. We must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honourable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and I know his death will be a march of twelvescore. The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so, good morrow, Peto. 601

Peto. Good morrow, good my lord.

Exeunt.

ACT III

SCENE I.—Bangor. A Room in the Archdeacon's House.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, MORTIMER, and GLENDOWER.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure,

And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower,

Will you sit down?

And uncle Worcester: a plague upon it! I have forgot the map.

Glend. No, here it is.
Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur;
For by that name as oft as Lancaster
Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale and with

A rising sigh he wisheth you in heaven. 10

Hot. And you in hell, as oft as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: at my nativity

The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
Of burning cressets; and at my birth

The frame and huge foundation of the earth

Shak'd like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done at the same season, if your mother's cat had but kittened, though yourself had never been born. 20

Glend. I say the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say the earth was not of my mind,

If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

Hot. O! then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,

And not in fear of your nativity.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions; oft the teeming earth

Is with a kind of colic pinch'd and vex'd
By the imprisoning of unruly wind 30

Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving,

Shakes the old beldam earth, and topples
down

Steeple and moss-grown towers. At your birth

Our grandam earth, having this distemperature,

In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men
I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave

To tell you once again that at my birth
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds

Were strangely clamorous to the frightened fields. 40

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary;
And all the courses of my life do show

I am not in the roll of common men.

Where is he living, clipp'd in with the sea
That chides the banks of England, Scotland,
Wales,

Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me?
And bring him out that is but woman's son
Can trace me in the tedious ways of art
And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hot. I think there's no man speaks better Welsh. 50

I'll to dinner.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy! you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

Hot. Why, so can I, or so can any man;
But will they come when you do call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command

The devil.

Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame
the devil

By telling truth: tell truth and shame the devil.

If thou have power to raise him, bring him
hither. 60

And I'll be sworn I have power to shame him hence.

O! while you live, tell truth and shame the devil.

Mort. Come, come;

No more of this unprofitable chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head

Against my power; thrice from the banks of Wye

And sandy-bottom'd Severn have I sent him
Bootless home and weather-beaten back.

Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too!

How'scapes he agues, in the devil's name?

Glend. Come, here's the map: shall we divide our right 70

According to our threefold order ta'en?

Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits very equally.

England, from Trent and Severn hitherto,

By south and east, is to my part assign'd:
All westward, Wales beyond the Severn

shore,

And all the fertile land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower: and, dear coz, to you

The remnant northward, lying off from Trent. 80

And our indentures tripartite are drawn,
Which being sealed interchangeably,
A business that this night may execute,
To-morrow, cousin Percy, you and I
And my good Lord of Worcester will set
forth

To meet your father and the Scottish power,
As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.
My father Glendower is not ready yet,
Nor shall we need his help these fourteen
days.

Within that space you may have drawn together

Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring
gentlemen. 91

Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords;

And in my conduct shall your ladies come,
From whom you now must steal and take no
leave;

For there will be a world of water shed
Upon the parting of your wives and you.

Hot. Methinks my moiety, north from Burton here,

In quantity equals not one of yours:
See how this river comes me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out.
I'll have the current in this place damm'd
up. 101

And here the smug and silver Trent shall run

In a new channel, fair and evenly:
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.

Glend. Not wind! it shall, it must; you see it doth.

Mort. Yea, but

Mark how he bears his course, and runs me
up

With like advantage on the other side;
Gelding the opposed continent as much 110
As on the other side it takes from you.

Wor. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here,

And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs straight and even.

Hot. I'll have it so; a little charge will do it.

Glend. I will not have it alter'd.

Hot. Will not you?

Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Hot. Who shall say me nay?

Glend. Why, that will I.

Hot. Let me not understand you then:
Speak it in Welsh. 120

Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well
as you,

For I was train'd up in the English court;
Where, being but young, I framed to the harp

Many an English ditty lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament;
A virtue that was never seen in you.

Hot. Marry, and I'm glad of it with all my heart.

I had rather be a kitten, and cry mew
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers; 130

I had rather hear a brazen canstick turn'd,
Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree;
And that would set my teeth nothing on
edge,

Nothing so much as mincing poetry:

'T is like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag.
Glend. Come, you shall have Trent
turn'd.

Hot. I do not care: I'll give thrice so much land

To any well-deserving friend;
But in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair. 140
Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?

Glend. The moon shines fair, you may away by night:

I'll haste the writer and withal
Break with your wives of your departure
hence:

I am afraid my daughter will run mad,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer. Exit.

Mort. Fie, cousin Percy! how you cross
my father!

Hot. I cannot choose: sometime he angers me

With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies,
And of a dragon, and a finless fish, 151
A clip-wing'd griffin, and a moulten raven,
A couching lion, and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skimble-skamble stuff
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what;
He held me last night at least nine hours
In reckoning up the several devils' names
That were his lackeys: I cried 'hum,' and
'well, go to.'

But mark'd him not a word. O! he's as tedious

As a tired horse, a railing wife; 160
Worse than a smoky house. I had rather live

With cheese and garlic in a windmill, far,
Than feed on cates and have him talk to me
In any summer-house in Christendom.

Mort. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman,
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange concealments, valiant as a lion
And wondrous affable, and as bountiful
As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect, 170
And curbs himself even of his natural scope
When you do cross his humour; faith, he does.

I warrant you, that man is not alive Might so have tempted him as you have
done,

Without the taste of danger and reproof:
But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.

Wor. In faith, my lord, you are too wilfulblame;

And since your coming hither have done enough

To put him quite beside his patience.
You must needs learn, lord, to amend this
fault; 180

Though sometimes it show greatness,
courage, blood,
And that's the dearest grace it renders you

Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain:
The least of which haunting a nobleman Loseth men's hearts and leaves behind a stain
Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation.
    Hot. Well, I am school'd; good manners be your speed! 190
Here come our wives, and let us take our
    leave.

Re-enter GLENDOWER with the Ladies.
    Mort. This is the deadly spite that angers
    me;
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.
    Glend. My daughter weeps; she will not part with you:
She 'll be a soldier too: she 'll to the wars.
    Mort. Good father, tell her that she and my aunt Percy
Shall follow in your conduct speedily.

GLENDOWER speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.
    Glend. She is desperate here; a peevish self-willed harlotry, one that no persuasion can do good upon. 200
    She speaks to MORTIMER in Welsh.
    Mort. I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh
Which thou down pourest from these swelling heavens
I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,
In such a parley should I answer thee.

She speaks again.
I understand thy kisses and thou mine,
And that 's a feeling disputation:
But I will never be a truant, love,
Till I have learn'd thy language; for thy
    tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division, to her lute. 211
    Glend. Nay, if you melt, then will she run
    mad.      She speaks again.
    Mort. O! I am ignorance itself in this.
    Glend. She bids you on the wanton rushes lay you down
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth
    you,
And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness, Making such difference 'twixt wake and
    sleep
As is the difference betwixt day and night
The hour before the heavenly-harness'd team 221
Begins his golden progress in the east.
    Mort. With all my heart I 'll sit and hear her sing:
By that time will our book, I think, be drawn.
    Glend. Do so;
And those musicians that shall play to you Hang in the air a thousand leagues from
    hence,

And straight they shall be here: sit, and
    attend.
    Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down: come, quick, quick, that I may lay my head in thy lap. 231
    Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose.

The music plays.
    Hot. Now I perceive the devil understands Welsh;
And 't is no marvel he is so humorous.
By 'r lady, he 's a good musician.
    Lady P. Then should you be nothing but musical, for you are altogether governed by humours. Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

Hot. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, howl in Irish. 241
    Lady P. Would'st have thy head broken?
    Hot. No.
    Lady P. Then be still.
    Hot. Neither; 't is a woman's fault.
    Lady P. Now God help thee!
    Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.
    Lady P. What's that?
    Hot. Peace! she sings.

A Welsh song sung by Lady MORTIMER.
    Hot. Come, Kate, I 'll have your song too.
    Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth. 251
    Hot. Not yours, 'in good sooth!' Heart!
you swear like a comfit-maker's wife. Not you, 'in good sooth'; and 'as true as I live';
and 'as God shall mend me'; and 'as sure as day';
And giv'st such sarcenet surety for thy
    oaths,
As if thou never walk'dst further than Fins-
    bury.
Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,
A good mouth-filling oath; and leave 'in sooth,'
And such protest of pepper-gingerbread, 260
To velvet-guards and Sunday-citizens.
Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing.
    Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor or be red-breast teacher. An the indentures be drawn, I 'll away within these two hours;
and so come in when ye will.      Exit.
    Glend. Come, come, Lord Mortimer;
    you are as slow
As hot Lord Percy is on fire to go.
By this our book is drawn; we will but
    seal,
And then to horse immediately. 271
    Mort. With all my heart.      Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King HENRY, the PRINCE, and Lords.
    K. Hen. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I Must have some private conference: but be near at hand,
For we shall presently have need of you.
    Exeunt Lords.
I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing service I have done,
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood

He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;

But thou dost in thy passages of life
Make me believe that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven 10

To punish my mistreadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts,

Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd withal and grafted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

Prince. So please your majesty, I would I could

Quit all offences with as clear excuse
As well as I am doubtless I can purge 20
Myself of many I am charg'd withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg,
As, in reproof of many tales devis'd,
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,

By smiling pick-thanks and base news-mongers,

I may, for some things true, wherein my youth

Hath faulty wander'd and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

K. Hen. God pardon thee! yet let me wonder, Harry,

At thy affections, which do hold a wing 30
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied,
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood.
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall.

Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men, 40
So stale and cheap to vulgar company,
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir
But like a comet I was wonder'd at;
That men would tell their children 'This is he';

Others would say 'Where? which is Bolingbroke?'

And then I stole all courtesy from heaven, 50
And dress'd myself in such humility
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,

Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,

Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen but wonder'd at: and so my state,

Seldom but sumptuous, showed like a feast,
And won by rareness such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down 60

With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,

Soon kindled and soon burnt; carded his state,

Mingled his royalty with capering fools,
Had his great name profaned with their scorns,

And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative;
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoff'd himself to popularity;
That, being daily swallow'd by men's eyes, 70
They surfeited with honey and began
To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little

More than a little is by much too much.
So when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes

As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes; 80
But rather drows'd and hung their eyelids down,

Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries,
Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full.

And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou;
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege
With vile participation: not an eye
But is aware of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;

Which now doth that I would not have it do, 90

Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

Prince. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious lord,
Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world
As thou art to this hour was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravens-purgh;

And even as I was then is Percy now.
Now, by my sceptre and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state
Than thou the shadow of succession;
For of no right, nor colour like to right, 100
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm,
Turns head against the lion's armed jaws,
And, being no more in debt to years than thou,

Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on
To bloody battles and to bruising arms.

What never-dying honour hath he got Against renowned Douglas! whose high deeds,

Whose hot incursions and great name in arms

Holds from all soldiers chief majority,
And military title capital, 110
Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ.

Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swathing clothes,

This infant warrior, in his enterprises
Discomfited great Douglas; ta'en him once,

Enlarged him and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defiance up
And shake the peace and safety of our throne.

And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,

The Archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,

Capitulate against us and are up. 120

But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?

Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,

Which art my near'st and dearest enemy?

Thou that art like enough, through vassal fear,

Base inclination, and the start of spleen,

To fight against me under Percy's pay,

To dog his heels and court'sy at his frowns,

To show how much thou art degenerate.

Prince. Do not think so; you shall not find it so:

And God forgive them that so much have sway'd 130

Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!

I will redeem all this on Percy's head,

And in the closing of some glorious day

Be bold to tell you that I am your son;

When I will wear a garment all of blood

And stain my favours in a bloody mask,

Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it:

And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights,

That this same child of honour and renown,

This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight, 140

And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet.

For every honour sitting on his helm,

Would they were multitudes, and on my head

My shames redoubled! for the time will come

That I shall make this northern youth exchange

His glorious deeds for my indignities.

Percy is but my factor, good my lord,

To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;

And I will call him to so strict account

That he shall render every glory up, 150

Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,

Or I will wear the reckoning from his heart.

This, in the name of God, I promise here:

The which if he be pleas'd I shall perform,

I do beseech your majesty may save

The long-grown wounds of my intemperance:

If not, the end of life cancels all bands,

And I will die a hundred thousand deaths

Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.

K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:

Thou shalt have charge and sovereign trust herein. 161

Enter BLUNT.

How now, good Blunt! thy looks are full of speed.

Blunt. So hath the business that I come to speak of.

Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word
That Douglas and the English rebels met
The eleventh of this month at Shrewsbury.
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
If promises be kept on every hand,
As ever offer'd foul play in a state.

K. Hen. The Earl of Westmoreland set forth to-day, 170

With him my son, Lord John of Lancaster;

For this advertisement is five days old.

On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set forward;

On Thursday we ourselves will march: our meeting

Is Bridgenorth; and, Harry, you shall march

Through Gloucestershire; by which account,

Our business valued, some twelve days hence

Our general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet.

Our hands are full of business: let's away;
Advantage feeds him fat while men delay. 180

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am withered like an old apple-john. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse: the inside of a church! Company, villanous company, hath been the spoil of me. 11

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it: come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough: swore little; diced not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed, three or four times; lived well and in good compass; and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass, out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lantern in the poop, but 't is in the nose of thee: thou art the Knight of the Burning Lamp. 30

Bard. Why, Sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a Death's-head or a memento mori. I never see thy face but I think upon hell-fire and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be, 'By this fire, that's God's angel.' But thou art altogether given over, and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou rankest up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O! thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light. Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern; but the sack that thou hast drunk me would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two-and-thirty years; God reward me for it! 55

Bard. 'Sblood! I would my face were in your belly.

Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned.

Enter Mistress QUICKLY.

How now, Dame Partlet the hen! have you inquired yet who picked my pocket? 61

Quick. Why, Sir John, what do you think, Sir John? Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. Yellie, hostess; Bardolph was shaved and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman; go. 70

Quick. Who, I? No; I defy thee: God's light! I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to, I know you well enough.

Quick. No, Sir John; you do not know me, Sir John: I know you, Sir John: you owe me money, Sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them. 81

Quick. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four-and-twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Quick. He! alas! he is poor: he hath nothing.

Fal. How! poor? look upon his face; what call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks. I'll not pay a denier. What! will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.

Quick. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him, I knew not how oft, that that ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup; 'sblood! an he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so. 100

Enter the PRINCE and POINS, marching.
FALSTAFF meets them, playing on his truncheon like a fife.

How now, lad! is the wind in that door, i' faith? must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.

Quick. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

Prince. What sayest thou, Mistress Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well, he is an honest man.

Quick. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Prithee, let her alone, and list to me.

Prince. What sayest thou, Jack? 111

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house; they pick pockets.

Prince. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

Prince. A trifle; some eight-penny matter. 119

Quick. So I told him, my lord; and I said I heard your grace say so: and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is, and said he would cudgel you.

Prince. What! he did not?

Quick. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox; and for womanhood, Maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go. 131

Quick. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing! why, a thing to thank God on.

Quick. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou should'st know it; I am an honest man's wife; and, setting thy knight-hood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise. 140

Quick. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

Fal. What beast! why, an otter.

Prince. An otter, Sir John! why an otter?

Fal. Why, she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Quick. Thou art an unjust man in saying so: thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou!

Prince. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly. 150

Quick. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day you ought him a thousand pound.

Prince. Sirrah! do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

Quick. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph? 160

Bard. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea; if he said my ring was copper.

Prince. I say 'tis copper: darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare; but as thou art a prince, I fear thee as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

Prince. And why not as the lion?

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion: dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God my girdle break! 171

Prince. O! if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees. But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty in this bosom of thine; it is all filled up with guts and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whore-son, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor pennyworth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded; if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it, you will not pocket up wrong. Art thou not ashamed? 184

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest in the state of innocence Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of villany? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty. You confess then, you picked my pocket? 190

Prince. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee. Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest I am pacified. Still! Nay, prithee, be gone. Exit Mistress QUICKLY.

Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad, how is that answered?

Prince. O! my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee: the money is paid back again. 223

Fal. O! I do not like that paying back; 'tis a double labour.

Prince. I am good friends with my father and may do any thing.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou dost, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

Prince. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot. 209

Fal. I would it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O! for a fine thief, of the age of two-and-twenty or thereabouts; I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels; they offend none but the virtuous: I laud them, I praise them.

Prince. Bardolph!

Bard. My lord?

Prince. Go bear this letter to Lord John of Lancaster,

To my brother John; this to my Lord of Westmoreland.

Go, Poins, to horse, to horse! for thou and I have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner-time.

Jack, meet me to-morrow in the Temple-hall

At two o'clock in the afternoon: 224

There shalt thou know thy charge, and there receive

Money and order for their furniture.

The land is burning; Percy stands on high; And either we or they must lower lie.

Exeunt the PRINCE, POINS, and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Rare words! brave world! Hostess, my breakfast; come!

O! I could wish this tavern were my drum. Exit.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, and DOUGLAS.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: if speaking truth

In this fine age were not thought flattery, Such attribution should the Douglas have, As not a soldier of this season's stamp Should go so general current through the world.

By God, I cannot flatter; I defy The tongues of soothers; but a braver place In my heart's love hath no man than yourself.

Nay, task me to my word; approve me, lord.

Doug. Thou art the king of honour: 10 No man so potent breathes upon the ground But I will beard him.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well.

Enter a Messenger, with Letters.

What letters hast thou there? I can but thank you.

Mess. These letters come from your father.

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

Mess. He cannot come, my lord: he's grievous sick.

Hot. 'Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick

In such a justling time? Who leads his power?

Under whose government come they along?

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord. 20

Wor. I prithee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?

Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth;

And at the time of my departure thence He was much fear'd by his physicians.

Wor. I would the state of time had first been whole

Ere he by sickness had been visited:

His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect

The very life-blood of our enterprise;

'Tis catching hither, even to our camp. 30

He writes me here, that inward sickness—

And that his friends by deputation could not

So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet

To lay so dangerous and dear a trust

On any soul remov'd but on his own.

Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,

That with our small conjunction we should on,

To see how fortune is dispos'd to us;

For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,

Because the king is certainly possess'd 40

Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your father's sickness is a maim to us.

Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp'd off;

And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want Seems more than we should find it. Were it good

To set the exact wealth of all our states

All at one cast? to set so rich a main

On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?

It were not good; for therein should we read

The very bottom and the soul of hope, 50

The very list, the very utmost bound

Of all our fortunes.

Doug. Faith, and so we should;

Where now remains a sweet reversion:

We may boldly spend upon the hope of what is to come in:

A comfort of retirement lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,

If that the devil and mischance look big

Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

Wor. But yet, I would your father had been here. 60

The quality and hair of our attempt

Brooks no division. It will be thought

By some that know not why he is away,

That wisdom, loyalty and mere dislike

Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence.

And think how such an apprehension

May turn the tide of fearful faction

And breed a kind of question in our cause;

For well you know we of the offering side

Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement, 70

And stop all sight-holes, every loop from whence

The eye of reason may pry in upon us:

This absence of your father's draws a curtain,

That shows the ignorant a kind of fear

Before not dreamt of.

Hot. You strain too far.

I rather of his absence make this use:

It lends a lustre and more great opinion,

A larger dare to our great enterprise,

Than if the earl were here; for men must think,

If we without his help can make a head 80

To push against a kingdom, with his help

We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.

Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word

Spoke of in Scotland as this term of fear.

Enter Sir RICHARD VERNON.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.

Ver. Pray God my news be worth a welcome, lord.

The Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,

Is marching hitherwards; with him Prince John.

Hot. No harm: what more?

Ver. And further, I have learn'd,

The king himself in person is set forth, 90

Or hitherwards intended speedily,

With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,

The nimble-footed madcap Prince of Wales,

And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside,

And bid it pass?

Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms,

All plum'd like estridges that wing the wind,

Baited like eagles having lately bath'd,

Glittering in golden coats, like images, 100

As full of spirit as the month of May,

And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;

Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,

His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,

Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,

And vaulted with such ease into his seat,

As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus

And witch the world with noble horseman-ship. 110

Hot. No more, no more: worse than the sun in March

This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come;

They come like sacrifices in their trim,

And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war

All hot and bleeding will we offer them:

The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit

Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire

To hear this rich reprisal is so high

And yet not ours. Come, let me taste my horse,

Who is to bear me like a thunderbolt 120

Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales:

Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,

Meet and ne'er part till one drop down a corse.

O! that Glendower were come.

Ver. There is more news: I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along,

He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.

Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.

Hot. What may the king's whole battle reach unto?

Ver. To thirty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be: 130

My father and Glendower being both away. The powers of us may serve so great a day. Come, let us take a muster speedily:

Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.

Doug. Talk not of dying: I am out of fear Of death or death's hand for this one half year.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A public Road near Coventry.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack: our soldiers shall march through; we'll to Sutton Co'fil' to-night.

Bard. Will you give me money, captain?

Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This bottle makes an angel.

Fal. An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all, I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.

Bard. I will, captain: farewell. Exit.

Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet. I have misused the king's press damnably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons; inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the banns; such a commodity of warm slaves, as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver worse than a struck fowl or a hurt wild-duck. I pressed me none but such toasts-and-butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores; and such as indeed were never soldiers, but discarded unjust servingmen, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters and ostlers trade-fallen, the cankers of a calm world and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old faced ancient: and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I have a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draff and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way and told me I had unloaded all the gibbets and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat: nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on; for indeed I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company; and the half shirt is two napkins tacked together and thrown over the shoulders like an herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Alban's, or the red-nose innkeeper of Daventry. But that's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter the PRINCE and WESTMORELAND.

Prince. How now, blown Jack! how now, quilt!

Fal. What, Hal! how now, mad wag! what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy: I thought your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already. The king, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away all to-night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

Prince. I think to steal cream indeed, for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack, whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

Prince. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, Sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly.

Fal. Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their bareness, I am sure they never learned that of me.

Prince. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs bare. But, sirrah, make haste: Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What! is the king encamped?

West. He is, Sir John: I fear we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well.

To the latter end of a fray and the beginning of a feast

Fits a dull fighter and a keen guest. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, DOUGLAS, and VERNON.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.

Doug. You give him then advantage.

Ver. Not a whit.

Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Ver. So do we.

Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

Wor. Good cousin, be advis'd: stir not to-night.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Doug. You do not counsel well: You speak it out of fear and cold heart.

Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life,

And I dare well maintain it with my life,
If well-respected honour bid me on, 10
I hold as little counsel with weak fear
As you, my lord, or any Scot that this day
lives:

Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle
Which of us fears.

Doug. Yea, or to-night.
Ver. Content.

Hot. To-night, say I.

Ver. Come, come, it may not be. I wonder much,

Being men of such great leading as you are,
That you foresee not what impediments
Drag back our expedition: certain horse
Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come
up: 20

Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day;

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and
dull,

That not a horse is half the half of himself.
Hot. So are the horses of the enemy

In general, journey-bated and brought low:
The better part of ours are full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth
ours:

For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.
The trumpet sounds a parley.

Enter Sir WALTER BLUNT.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from
the king, 30

If you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.

Hot. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; and would to God

You were of our determination!

Some of us love you well; and even those some

Envy your great deservings and good name,
Because you are not of our quality,
But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend but still I should stand so,

So long as out of limit and true rule
You stand against anointed majesty. 40

But to my charge. The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous
land

Audacious cruelty. If that the king
Have any way your good deserts forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your griefs; and with all speed

You shall have your desires with interest,
And pardon absolute for yourself and these Herein misled by your suggestion. 51

Hot. The king is kind; and well we know
the king

Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.
My father and my uncle and myself
Did give him that same royalty he wears;
And when he was not six-and twenty-strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and
low,

A poor unminded outlaw sneaking home,
My father gave him welcome to the shore;
And when he heard him swear and vow to
God 60

He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,
To sue his livery and beg his peace,
With tears of innocency and terms of zeal,
My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,
Swore him assistance and perform'd it too.
Now when the lords and barons of the realm

Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,
The more and less came in with cap and
knee;

Met him in boroughs, cities, villages,
Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes, 70 Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their
oaths,

Gave him their heirs as pages, follow'd him
Even at the heels in golden multitudes.
He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps me a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh;
And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts and some strait decrees
That lie too heavy on the commonwealth, 80
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
Over his country's wrongs; and by this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for;
Proceeded further; cut me off the heads
Of all the favourites that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.

Hot. Then to the point.

In short time after, he despos'd the king; 90
Soon after that, depriv'd him of his life;
And in the neck of that, task'd the whole
state;

To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman
March—

Who is if every owner were well plac'd,
Indeed his king—to be engag'd in Wales.
There without ransom to lie forfeited;
Disgrac'd me in my happy victories;
Sought to entrap me by intelligence;
Rated mine uncle from the council-board;
In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;
Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on
wrong; 101

And in conclusion drove us to seek out
This head of safety; and withal to pry
Into his title, the which we find Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the
king?

Hot. Not so, Sir Walter: we'll withdraw awhile.

Go to the king; and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again,
And in the morning early shall my uncle 110
Bring him our purposes; and so farewell.

Blunt. I would you would accept of grace and love.

Hot. And may be so we shall.

Blunt. Pray God, you do!
Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—York. A Room in the Archbishop's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of YORK and Sir MICHAEL.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michael; bear this sealed brief
With winged haste to the lord marshal;
This to my cousin Scroop, and all the rest
To whom they are directed. If you knew
How much they do import, you would make haste.

Sir M. My good lord,
I guess their tenour.

Arch. Like enough you do.
To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch; for, sir, at Shrewsbury,

As I am truly given to understand,
The king with mighty and quick-raised power

Meets with Lord Harry: and I fear, Sir Michael,
What with the sickness of Northumberland,

Whose power was in the first proportion,
And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,

Who with them was a rated sinew too,
And comes not in, o'er-rul'd by prophecies,

I fear the power of Percy is too weak
To wage an instant trial with the king. 20

Sir M. Why, my good lord, you need not fear:

There is Douglas and Lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir M. But there is Mordake, Vernon,
Lord Harry Percy,

And there's my Lord of Worcester, and a head

Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

Arch. And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn

The special head of all the land together:
The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,

The noble Westmoreland, and war-like Blunt, 30

And many more corrivals and dear men
Of estimation and command in arms.

Sir M. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well oppos'd.

Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 't is to
fear;

And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael,
speed:

For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the
king

Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,
For he hath heard of our confederacy,

And 't is but wisdom to make strong against
him:

Therefore make haste. I must go write
again 40

To other friends: and so farewell, Sir Michael. Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter King HENRY, the PRINCE, JOHN OF LANCASTER, Sir WALTER BLUNT, and Sir JOHN FALSTAFF.

K. Hen. How bloodily the sun begins to peer

Above yon busky hill! the day looks pale
At his distemperature.

Prince. The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest and a blustering day.

K. Hen. Then with the losers let it sympathize,

For nothing can seem foul to those that win.
Trumpet sounds.

Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

How now, my Lord of Worcester! 'tis not
well

That you and I should meet upon such terms 10

As now we meet. You have deceiv'd our trust,

And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel:

This is not well, my lord; this is not well.
What say you to it? will you again unknit

This churlish knot of all-abhorred war,
And move in that obedient orb again

Where you did give a fair and natural light,
And be no more an exhal'd meteor,

A prodigy of fear and a portent 20
Of broached mischief to the unborn times?

Wor. Hear me, my liege.

For mine own part, I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life

With quiet hours; for I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike.

K. Hen. You have not sought it! how comes it then?

Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

Prince. Peace, chewet, peace!

Wor. It pleas'd your majesty to turn your
looks 30

Of favour from myself and all our house;
And yet I must remember you, my lord,

We were the first and dearest of your
friends.

For you my staff of office did I break
In Richard's time; and posted day and night

To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place and in account

Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
It was myself, my brother, and his son,

That brought you home and boldly did out-dare 40

The dangers of the time. You swore to us,
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,

That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the
state,

Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n
right,

The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster.

To this we swore our aid: but in short space
It rain'd down fortune showering on your
head,

And such a flood of greatness fell on you,
What with our help, what with the absent
king,

What with the injuries of a wanton time, 50
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,

And the contrarious winds that held the
king

So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
That all in England did repute him dead:
And from this swarm of fair advantages

You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
To gripe the general sway into your hand;
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;

And being fed by us you us'd us so
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird, 60

Useth the sparrow: did oppress our nest,
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk

That even our love durst not come near your sight

For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing

We were enforc'd, for safety sake, to fly
Out of your sight and raise this present
head;

Whereby we stand opposed by such means
As you yourself have forc'd against yourself

By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth 70

Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.

K. Hen. These things indeed you have articulate,

Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches,

To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour that may please the eye

Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news

Of hurlyburly innovation:
And never yet did insurrection want

Such water-colours to impaint his cause; 80
Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pell-mell havoc and confusion.

Prince. In both our armies there is many a soul

Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,

The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world

In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,
This present enterprise set off his head,

I do not think a braver gentleman,
More active-valiant or more valiant-young,

More daring or more bold, is now alive 91
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry;

And so I hear he doth account me too;
Yet this before my father's majesty—

I am content that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation,

And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight. 100

K. Hen. And, Prince of Wales, so dare
we venture thee,

Albeit considerations infinite

Do make against it. No, good Worcester,
no,

We love our people well; even those we
love

That are misled upon your cousin's part;
And, will they take the offer of our grace,

Both he and they and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his.

So tell your cousin, and bring me word
What he will do; but if he will not yield, 110

Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. So, be gone:

We will not now be troubled with reply;
We offer fair, take it advisedly.

Exeunt WORCESTER and VERNON.

Prince. It will not be accepted, on my life.

The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms.

K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge;

For, on their answer, will we set on them;
And God befriend us, as our cause is just! 120

Exeunt King HENRY, BLUNT, and JOHN OF LANCASTER.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle, and bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.

Prince. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well. 125

Prince. Why, thou owest God a death.

Exit.

Fal. 'Tis not due yet: I would be loath to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me?

Well, 'tis no matter; honour pricks me on.
Yea, but how if honour prick me off when I come on? how then? Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery then? No. What is honour?

A word. What is that word honour? Air.
A trim reckoning! Who hath it? He that died o' Wednesday. Doth he feel it? No

Doth he hear it? No. Is it insensible then?
Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it. Therefore I'll none of it. Honour is a mere scutcheon; and so ends my catechism. 130

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Exit.

Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes;

For treason is but trusted like the fox,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd
up, 10

Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks,
And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
The better cherish'd, still the nearer death.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot,
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of
blood;

And an adopted name of privilege.
A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen.

All his offences live upon my head 20
And on his father's: we did train him on;
And, his corruption being ta'en from us,
We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know
In any case the offer of the king.

Ver. Deliver what you will, I'll say 't is so.
Here comes your cousin.

Enter HOTSPUR and DOUGLAS; Officers and Soldiers behind.

Hot. My uncle is return'd: deliver up My Lord of Westmoreland. Uncle, what news? 30

Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.

Doug. Defy him by the Lord of Westmoreland.

Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.
Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly. Exit.

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the
king.

Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid!
Wor. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of his oath-breaking; which he mended
thus,

By now forswearing that he is forsworn:
He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge
With haughty arms this hateful name in
us. 41

Re-enter DOUGLAS.

Doug. Arm, gentlemen! to arms! for I have thrown
A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engag'd, did bear it;

Which cannot choose but bring him quickly
on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales stepp'd forth
before the king,
And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Hot. O! would the quarrel lay upon our heads,
And that no man might draw short breath
to-day

But I and Harry Monmouth. Tell me, tell
me, 50
How show'd his tasking? seem'd it in contempt?

Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,

Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms.
He gave you all the duties of a man,
Trim'm'd up your praises with a princely
tongue.

Spoke your deservings like a chronicle,
Making you ever better than his praise
By still dispraising praise valu'd with you;
And, which became him like a prince indeed, 61

He made a blushing cital of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace
As if he master'd there a double spirit
Of teaching and of learning instantly.
There did he pause. But let me tell the
world,

If he outlive the envy of this day,
England did never owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstru'd in his wantonness.

Hot. Cousin, I think thou art enamoured
Upon his follies: never did I hear 71
Of any prince so wild a libertine.

But be he as he will, yet once ere night
I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy.
Arm, arm with speed! and, fellows, soldiers,
friends,

Better consider what you have to do,
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you.
Hot. I cannot read them now. 81

O gentlemen! the time of life is short;
To spend that shortness basely were too
long,

If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour.
An if we live, we live to tread on kings;
If die, brave death, when princes die with
us!

Now, for our consciences, the arms are fair,
When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare; the king comes on apace. 90

Hot. I thank him that he cuts me from my tale,

For I profess not talking. Only this,—
Let each man do his best; and here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal

In the adventure of this perilous day.
Now, Esperance! Percy! and set on.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy. 101

*The trumpets sound. They embrace, and
exeunt.*

SCENE III.—Between the Camps.

Excursions, and Parties fighting. Alarm to the battle. Then enter DOUGLAS and Sir WALTER BLUNT, meeting.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in the battle thus

Thou crossest me? what honour dost thou seek

Upon my head?

Doug. Know then, my name is Douglas; And I do haunt thee in the battle thus Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

Doug. The Lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought

Thy likeness; for instead of thee, King Harry,

This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee, Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner. 10

Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot;

And thou shalt find a king that will revenge Lord Stafford's death.

They fight, and BLUNT is slain.

Enter HOTSPUR.

Hot. O Douglas! hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,

I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.

Doug. All's done, all's won: here breathless lies the king.

Hot. Where?

Doug. Here.

Hot. This, Douglas? no: I know this face full well;

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt; 20

Sensibly furnish'd like the king himself. Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!

A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear: Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats.

Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;

I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece, Until I meet the king.

Hot. Up, and away!

Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. 29

Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here; here's no scoring but upon the pate. Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt: there's honour for you! here's no vanity! I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels. I have led my ragamuffins where they are peppered: there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive, and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here? 40

Enter the PRINCE.

Prince. What! stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy sword:

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies,

Whose deaths are unreveng'd: prithee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. O Hal! I prithee, give me leave to breathe awhile. Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

Prince. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee. I prithee, lend me thy sword. 50

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou gettest not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

Prince. Give it me. What! is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot: there's that will sack a city.

The PRINCE draws out a bottle of sack.

Prince. What! is't a time to jest and dally now? Throws it at him, and exit.

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a carbonado of me. I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: give me life; which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's an end. Exit. 65

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter King HENRY, the PRINCE, JOHN OF LANCASTER, and WESTMORELAND.

K. Hen. I prithee, Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much.

Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

Lanc. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

Prince. I beseech your majesty, make up, Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.

K. Hen. I will do so.

My Lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

West. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.

Prince. Lead me, my lord! I do not need your help. 10

And God forbid a shallow scratch should drive

The Prince of Wales from such a field as this, Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on,

And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

Lanc. We breathe too long: come, cousin Westmoreland,

Our duty this way lies: for God's sake, come.

Exeunt JOHN OF LANCASTER and WESTMORELAND.

Prince. By God, thou hast deceiv'd me, Lancaster;

I did not think thee lord of such a spirit: Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John;

But now, I do respect thee as my soul. 20

K. Hen. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point

With lustier maintenance than I did look for Of such an ungrown warrior.

Prince. O! this boy Lends mettle to us all. Exit.

Alarums. Enter DOUGLAS.

Doug. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads:

I am the Douglas, fatal to all those
That wear those colours on them: what art
thou,

That counterfeit'st the person of a king?

K. Hen. The king himself; who, Douglas, grieves at heart

So many of his shadows thou hast met 30
And not the very king. I have two boys
Seek Percy and thyself about the field:
But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee; so defend thyself.

Doug. I fear thou art another counterfeit;
And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a
king:

But mine I am sure thou art, whoe'er thou
be,

And thus I win thee.

They fight. King Henry being in danger.
re-enter the PRINCE.

Prince. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like

Never to hold it up again! the spirits 40
Of valiant Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms:

It is the prince of Wales that threatens thee,
Who never promiseth but he means to pay.

They fight: DOUGLAS flies.
Cheerly, my lord: how fares your grace?

Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton: I'll to Clifton straight.

K. Hen. Stay, and breathe awhile.
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion,
And show'd thou mak'st some tender of my
life,

In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me. 50

Prince. O God! they did me too much injury

That ever said I hearken'd for your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you;
Which would have been as speedy in your end

As all the poisonous potions in the world,
And sav'd the treacherous labour of your son.

K. Hen. Make up to Clifton: I'll to Sir Nicholas Gawsey. Exit.

Enter HOTSPUR.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

Prince. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name. 60

Hot. My name is Harry Percy.
Prince. Why, then I see

A very valiant rebel of that name.
I am the Prince of Wales; and think not,
Percy,

To share with me in glory any more:
Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere;

Nor can one England brook a double reign,
Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it, Harry; for the hour is
come

To end the one of us; and would to God Thy name in arms were now as great as
mine! 70

Prince. I'll make it greater ere I part from thee;

And all the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities.
They fight.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal! Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell
you.

Re-enter DOUGLAS; he fights with FAL-STAFF, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit DOUGLAS. HOTSPUR is wounded, and falls.

Hot. O Harry! thou hast robb'd me of my youth.

I better brook the loss of brittle life
Than those proud titles thou hast won of me;

They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh: 80

But thought's the slave of life, and life
time's fool;

And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. O! I could prophesy,

But that the earthy and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue. No, Percy, thou art
dust,

And food for— Dies.

Prince. For worms, brave Percy. Fare thee well, great heart!

Ill-weav'd ambition, how much art thou brunk!

When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound; 90

But now two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough: this earth, that bears thee
dead,

Bears not alive so stout a gentleman.
If thou wert sensible of courtesy,

I should not make so dear a show of zeal:
But let my favours hide thy mangled face,

And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself
For doing these fair rites of tenderness.

Adieu! and take thy praise with thee to
heaven,

Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave, 100
But not remember'd in thy epitaph!

He spies FALSTAFF on the ground.
What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh

Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell!
I could have better spar'd a better man.

O! I should have a heavy miss of thee
If I were much in love with vanity.

Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day,
Though many dearer, in this bloody fray.

Embowell'd will I see thee by and by:
Till then in blood by noble Percy lie. 110

Exit.

Fal. Rising. Embowell'd! if thou em-bowel me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me and eat me too to-morrow.

'Sblood! 't was time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie, I am no counterfeit: to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man; but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no

counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is discretion; in the which better part I have saved my life. 'Zounds! I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy though he be dead. How if he should counterfeit too and rise? By my faith I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me: therefore, sirrah, Stabbing him. with a new wound in your thigh come you along with me. 131

He takes HOTSPUR on his back.

Re-enter the PRINCE and JOHN OF LANCASTER.

Prince. Come, brother John; full bravely hast thou flesh'd Thy maiden sword.

Lanc. But, soft! whom have we here? Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

Prince. I did; I saw him dead,
Breathless and bleeding on the ground.
Art thou alive? or is it fantasy
That plays upon our eyesight? I prithee, speak;

We will not trust our eyes without our ears:
Thou art not what thou seem'st. 140

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man: but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy:

Throwing down the body.
If your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

Prince. Why, Percy I killed myself and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou? Lord, Lord! how this world is given to lying. I grant you I was down and out of breath, and so was he; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them that should reward valour bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: if the man were alive and would deny it, 'zounds! I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

Lanc. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

Prince. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back, 180

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

A retreat is sounded.
The trumpet sounds retreat; the day is ours.
Come, brother, let us to the highest of the field,

To see what friends are living, who are dead.

Exeunt the PRINCE and JOHN OF LANCASTER.

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward.
He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do. Exit.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

The trumpets sound. Enter King HENRY, the PRINCE, JOHN OF LANCASTER, WESTMORELAND, and Others, with WORCESTER and VERNON, prisoners.

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.

Ill-spirited Worcester! did we not send grace, Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?

And would'st thou turn our offers contrary? Misuse the tenour of thy kinsman's trust?

Three knights upon our party slain to-day,
A noble earl and many a creature else

Had been alive this hour,
If like a Christian thou hadst truly borne

Betwixt our armies true intelligence. 10

Wor. What I have done my safety urg'd me to;

And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death and Vernon too:

Other offenders we will pause upon.
Exeunt WORCESTER and VERNON, guarded.

How goes the field?
Prince. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas,

when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,

The noble Percy slain, and all his men
Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest; 20

And falling from a hill he was so bruised
That the pursuers took him. At my tent

The Douglas is, and I beseech your grace
I may dispose of him.

K. Hen. With all my heart.
Prince. Then, brother John of Lancaster,

to you
This honourable bounty shall belong.

Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free:

His valour shown upon our crests to-day
Hath taught us how to cherish such high

deeds, 30
Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

Lanc. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,

Which I shall give away immediately.

K. Hen. Then this remains, that we divide our power.

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest speed

To meet Northumberland and the prelate

Scroop,
Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:

Myself and you, son Harry, will towards
Wales;

To fight with Glendower and the Earl of March. 40

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Meeting the check of such another day:

And since this business so fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won.

Exeunt.

THE SECOND PART OF KING HENRY THE FOURTH

THE popular reception accorded to Falstaff in the First Part of Henry IV was doubtless in some ways a great surprise to Shakespeare. First of all, the character apparently overshadowed in interest all else in the play. How to rescue Prince Hal from the secondary position into which Falstaff's popularity was forcing him must have proved a problem the solution of which taxed the genius of even Shakespeare himself. Fortunately—or unfortunately, as he might have viewed it—the remaining portion of King Henry's reign supplied but little that was suitable for dramatic presentation. He had doubtless intended to use the Prince and Falstaff even more freely in the Second Part and draw even more than in the First Part upon his imagination to piece out his scant historical material. But how to do that without subordinating the Prince to Falstaff; or how to crown a close companion of Falstaff's without doing violence to his dignity as king; or how to break suddenly that companionship without offending the admirers of Falstaff—these were questions that Shakespeare was forced to decide. The results of his decision are seen in the Second Part of Henry IV.

A mere casual reading of the play will reveal the fact that it is little more than a series of scenes loosely strung together. It begins with the defeat of the rebels at Shrewsbury and ends with the coronation of Henry V. The only historic events that intervene are the dispersal through the vilest treachery—which Shakespeare doubtless thought sufficiently self-condemnatory—of the rebels under the Archbishop, and the death of the king. The comic scenes dominated by Falstaff occupy fully one half the play. It is interesting to observe, however, that there is but one scene in which Falstaff and Prince Hal appear together. The final words spoken by the Prince in that scene constitute the Prince's farewell to Falstaff:

"Give me my sword and cloak.—Falstaff, good night."

One can imagine Shakespeare's audience feeling an almost personal resentment at the harsh treatment accorded Falstaff by the Prince after his coronation as Henry V, but Shakespeare has done his best to soften the blow. The situation that developed was clearly not of Shakespeare's own choosing, but one into which he was forced by an unfortunate circumstance: The name originally given to the character was not Falstaff but Sir John Oldcastle, a name that he had found in an old play, The Famous Victories of Henry V. The name happened also to be that of an historic figure, Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, a Lollard leader and reformer who suffered martyrdom in 1417. A descendant of Oldcastle's, Lord Cobham, took exception to having his great ancestor thus presented on the stage, and Shakespeare, to avoid giving offence, readily changed the name to Sir John Falstaff. But the name of Oldcastle still stuck to the character. Apparently taking advantage of the publicity given to the name and to win the favor of Lord Cobham and his friends, the Admiral's Men, a rival of Shakespeare's company, put on a play in two parts called The True and Honourable Historie of the Life of Sir John Oldcastle, the Good Lord Cobham. In the prologue to that play these lines occur:

"It is no pampered glutton we present,
Nor aged Councillor to youthful sin."

Now these lines reveal the seriousness of the difficulty that confronted Shakespeare as the result of Falstaff's great popularity. A moral issue had been injected into the discussion. If the sum total of the impression created by the character was that he was a glutton and a corrupter of youth; and worse still, if among the less discerning his popularity was largely due to that impression, Shakespeare, to preserve the character of the Prince, must not only break off his companionship with Falstaff in his Second Part, but he must also, by some change in the First Part, prevent future audiences from taking too seriously the influence of Falstaff over Prince Hal. We cannot escape the belief that it was for this or some very similar reason that Shakespeare inserted the speech ascribed to Hal at the close of the second scene of Act I in the First Part, to which reference was made in our discussion of that play. It greatly weakens the play for us; but perhaps not so much for Shakespeare's audience, which did not, apparently, see that Falstaff's wit and humor lifted him above moral considerations and played largely around his irresponsibility for speaking literal truth or turning anything, however incredible, to his own advantage. This will account, too, for Shakespeare's letting the character of Falstaff deteriorate morally, if we may use the word, in the Second Part, thus lessening the force of the blow which Henry V must inevitably deal him at the last. Further to lessen the shock Shakespeare promises in the Epilogue to "continue the story with Sir John in it and make you merry with fair Katherine of France; where, for anything I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless he be already killed with your hard opinions, for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man." That he did not keep this promise was due to another unlooked-for circumstance: Queen Elizabeth was so delighted with the character that she commanded Shakespeare to write within fourteen days a play to be presented at Windsor showing Falstaff in love. The Merry Wives of Windsor was the result, although it must not be supposed that the fat man in that play who bears the name of Falstaff is even remotely related to the fat knight we have known in the two parts of Henry IV.

That Shakespeare was a little annoyed at the tendency to raise a moral question in connection with Falstaff seems to us to be indicated at the first appearance of Falstaff with his little page in the Second Part:

"Falstaff. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?"

"Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for."

"Falstaff. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me; the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent anything that tends to laughter, more than I invent or is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men."

Is it to consider too curiously to suppose that what Shakespeare really meant Falstaff to say was something like this: "What says the public to my wit?" "Why, the public says it is a good wit; but that you are yourself a very bad man—a glutton and a corrupter of youth." "Men who so reason,—and most men reason so," replies Falstaff, "seem incapable of inventing anything that tends to laughter. I must invent it for them, or else serve as the cause of their wit by giving them an opportunity to jibe at me."

Falstaff as we have seen him in these two parts will not appear again. We shall have a report of his death in Henry V, but it seems best to take our leave of him here. There are some overzealous moralists who like so to interpret Shakespeare as to support their contention that in his plays plausible sinners always come to a bad end. This, they say, is true of Falstaff. His death is reported by the Hostess who says, in reply to Bardolph's "Would I were with him, wheresome'er he is, either in heaven or in hell":

"Nay, sure, he 's not in hell: he 's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom. A' made a finer end and went away an it had been any christom child; a' parted even just between twelve and one, even at the turning of the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his fingers' ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and a' babbled of green fields. 'How now, Sir John,' quoth I: 'what, man! be o' good cheer.' So a' cried out 'God, God, God,' three or four times. Now I to comfort him, bid him a' should not think of God; I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet."

Now it does seem like straining a point to say that Shakespeare meant this to be regarded as a "bad end." If a man who at death fancies himself a child again playing in the fields and gathering flowers, is to be thought suffering the pangs of a guilty conscience because he cries out "God," then, as Falstaff himself once said, "God help the wicked." The thousands whose lives have been brightened by his wit will be glad to believe him in "Arthur's bosom." If he sinned, so have we; and that without the abundant frailty of his flesh. Most of those who have entered with Shakespeare into the joyous spirit of his creation will be content to venture with Bardolph: "Would I were with him, wheresome'er he is, either in heaven or in hell."

INDUCTION

Warkworth. Before NORTHUMBERLAND'S Castle.

Enter RUMOUR, painted full of tongues.

Open your ears; for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing when loud Rumour speaks?

I, from the orient to the drooping west,
Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongues continual slanders ride,
The which in every language I pronounce,
Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.
I speak of peace, while covert enmity Under the smile of safety wounds the
world: 10

And who but Rumour, who but only I,
Make fearful musters and prepar'd defence,
Whiles the big year, swoln with some other
grief,
Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
And no such matter? Rumour is a pipe
Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures,
And of so easy and so plain a stop
That the blunt monster with uncounted
heads,
The still-discordant wavering multitude,

Can play upon it. But what need I thus 20
My well-known body to anatomize
Among my household? Why is Rumour
here?

I run before King Harry's victory;
Who in a bloody field by Shrewsbury Hath beaten down young Hotspur and his troops,

Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebels' blood. But what mean I

To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad that Harry Monmouth fell Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's
sword, 30

And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death.
This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns

Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumber-
land,

Lies crafty-sick. The posts come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learn'd of me; from Rumour's tongues

They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs. Exit. 40

ACT I

SCENE I.—Warkworth. Before NORTHUMBERLAND'S Castle.

Enter Lord BARDOLPH.

L. Bard. Who keeps the gate here, ho?
The Porter opens the gate.
Where is the earl?

Port. What shall I say you are?

L. Bard. Tell thou the earl
That the Lord Bardolph doth attend him
here.

Port. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard:

Please it your honour knock but at the gate,
And he himself will answer.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

L. Bard. Here comes the earl.
Exit Porter.

North. What news, Lord Bardolph? every minute now
Should be the father of some stratagem.
The times are wild; contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose
And bears down all before him.

L. Bard. Noble earl,
I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an God will!

L. Bard. As good as heart can wish.
The king is almost wounded to the death;
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts

Kill'd by the hand of Douglas: young Prince John

And Westmoreland and Stafford fled the field:

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir
John,

Is prisoner to your son: O! such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times,
Since Cæsar's fortunes.

North. How is this deriv'd?
Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence;

A gentleman well bred and of good name,
That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant Travers, whom I sent

On Tuesday last to listen after news.

L. Bard. My lord, I over-rode him on the way;

And he is furnish'd with no certainties
More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter TRAVERS.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?

Tra. My lord, Sir John Umfreville turn'd me back

With joyful tidings; and, being better
hors'd,

Out-rode me. After him came spurring hard

A gentleman, almost forspent with speed,
That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodied
horse.

He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him
I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me that rebellion had ill luck, 41
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.
With that he gave his able horse the head,
And bending forward struck his armed heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel-head, and starting so,
He seem'd in running to devour the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Ha! Again:
Said he young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
Of Hotspur, Coldspur? that rebellion 50
Had met ill luck?

L. Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what:
If my young lord your son have not the
day,

Upon mine honour, for a silken point
I'll give my barony: never talk of it.

North. Why should that gentleman that rode by Travers
Give then such instances of loss?

L. Bard. Who, he?
He was some hiding fellow that had stolen
The horse he rode on, and, upon my life, Spoke at a venture. Look! here comes more news.

Enter MORTON.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf, 60

Foretells the nature of a tragic volume;
So looks the strand whereon the imperious flood

Hath left a witness'd usurpation.
Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble
lord,

Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask
To fright our party.

North. How doth my son and brother?
Thou tremblest, and the whiteness in thy
cheek

Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless, 70

So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burn'd;

But Priam found the fire ere he his tongue,
And I my Percy's death ere thou report'st it.
This thou would'st say, 'Your son did thus and thus;

Your brother thus; so fought the noble
Douglas';

Stopping my greedy ear with their bold
deeds;

But in the end, to stop mine ear indeed,
Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise, 80
Ending with 'Brother, son, and all are dead.'

Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother,
yet,

But for my lord your son—
North. Why, he is dead.

See what a ready tongue suspicion hath!

He that but fears the thing he would not
know
Hath by instinct knowledge from others'
eyes
That what he fear'd is chanced. Yet speak,
Morton:

Tell thou thy earl his divination lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great to be by me gain-
said;

Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.
North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.

I see a strange confession in thine eye:
Thou shak'st thy head, and hold'st it fear or sin

To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so;
The tongue offends not that reports his
death:

And he doth sin that doth belie the dead,
Not he which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news 100
Hath but a losing office, and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd knolling a departing friend.

L. Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son
is dead.

Mor. I am sorry I should force you to believe

That which I would to heaven I had not seen;
But these mine eyes saw him in bloody
state,

Rendering faint quittance, wearied and out-
breath'd,

To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath
beat down

The never-daunted Percy to the earth, 110
From whence with life he never more sprung
up.

In few, his death, whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp,
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best-temper'd courage in his troops;

For from his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead:

And as the thing that's heavy in itself, 119
Upon enforcement flies with greatest speed,
So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss, Lend to this weight such lightness with their
fear

That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field. Then was that noble
Worcester

Too soon ta'en prisoner; and that furious
Scott,

The bloody Douglas, whose well-labouring
sword

Had three times slain the appearance of the
king,

'Gan veil his stomach, and did grace the
shame

Of those that turn'd their backs; and in his flight, 130

Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all

Is that the king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster And Westmoreland. This is the news at full.

North. For this I shall have time enough to mourn.

In poison there is physic; and these news,
Having been well, that would have made me
sick,

Being sick, have in some measure made me
well:

And as the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd
joints, 140

Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire

Out of his keeper's arms, even so my limbs, Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd

with grief,
Are thrice themselves. Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch!

A scaly gauntlet now with joints of steel
Must glove this hand: and hence, thou sickly quoin!

Thou art a guard too wanton for the head
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit.

Now bind my brows with iron; and approach 150

The ragged'st hour that time and spite dare
bring

To frown upon the enrag'd Northumber-
land!

Let heaven kiss earth! now let not Nature's
hand

Keep the wild flood confin'd! let order die!
And let this world no longer be a stage

To feed contention in a lingering act;
But let one spirit of the first-born Cain

Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set

On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,
And darkness be the burier of the dead! 160

Tra. This trained passion doth you wrong,
my lord.

L. Bard. Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from your honour.

Mor. The lives of all your loving complices

Lean on your health; the which if you give o'er

To stormy passion must perforce decay.
You cast the event of war, my noble lord,

And summ'd the account of chance, before you said

'Let us make head.' It was your presumise
That in the dole of blows your son might drop:

You knew he walk'd o'er perils, on an
edge, 170

More likely to fall in than to get o'er;
You were advis'd his flesh was capable

Of wounds and scars, and that his forward
spirit

Would lift him where most trade of danger
rang'd:

Yet did you say 'Go forth'; and none of this,
Though strongly apprehended, could restrain

The stiff-borne action: what hath then befallen,
Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth,
More than that being which was like to be?

L. Bard. We all that are engaged to this loss 183

Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous seas

That if we wrought our life 't was ten to one;
And yet we ventur'd, for the gain propos'd
Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd;
And since we are o'er-set, venture again.
Come, we will all put forth, body and goods.

Mor. 'T is more than time: and, my most noble lord,

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle Archbishop of York is up
With well-appointed powers: he is a man
Who with a double surety binds his followers. 191

My lord your son had only but the corpse,
But shadows and the shows of men, to fight;
For the same word, rebellion, did divide
The action of their bodies from their souls;
And they did fight with queasiness, constrain'd,

As men drink potions, that their weapons only

Seem'd on our side: but, for their spirits and souls,

This word, rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond. But now the bishop
Turns insurrection to religion: 201
Suppos'd sincere and holy in his thoughts,
He's follow'd both with body and with mind,

And doth enlarge his rising with the blood
Of fair King Richard, scrap'd from Pomfret stones;

Derives from heaven his quarrel and his cause;

Tells them he doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke;
And more and less do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak truth, 210

This present grief had wip'd it from my mind.

Go in with me; and counsel every man
The aptest way for safety and revenge:

Get posts and letters, and make friends with speed:

Never so few, nor never yet more need.
Exeunt.

SCENE II — London. A Street.

Enter Sir JOHN FALSTAFF, with his Page bearing sword and buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for. 6

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels. I was never manned with an agate till now; but I will set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the jувenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say his face is a face-royal: God may finish it when he will, 't is not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he'll be crowing as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he's almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said Master Dombledon about the satin for my short cloak and my slops? 34

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph; he would not take his bond and yours: he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned like the glutton! pray God his tongue be hotter! A whoreson Achitophel! a rascally yea-forsooth knave! to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. The whoreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth as offer to stop it with security. I looked a' should have sent me two-and-twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it; and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him. Where's Bardolph? 55

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife in the stews, I were manned, horsed, and wived. 61

Enter the Lord Chief Justice and Servant.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close; I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Serv. Falstaff, an 't please your lordship.
Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery? 69

Serv. He, my lord; but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury, and, as

I hear, is now going with some charge to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Ch. Just. What! to York? Call him back again.

Serv. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder, my master is deaf. 79

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of anything good. Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Serv. Sir John!

Fal. What! a young knave, and beg! Is there not wars? is there not employment? doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels want soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it. 90

Serv. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

Serv. I pray you, sir, then set your knight-hood and your soldiership aside, and give me leave to tell you you lie in your throat if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me! If thou gettest any leave of me, hang me: if thou takest leave, thou wert better be hanged. You hunt-counter: hence! avaunt! 103

Serv. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord! God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad; I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship to have a reverent care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales. 119

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty. You would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, God mend him! I pray you, let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an't please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is. 130

Fal. It hath its original from much grief, from study and perturbation of the brain. I have read the cause of his effects in Galen: it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease, for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled withal. 140

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or indeed a scruple itself. 149

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come. 151

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, Sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise: I would my means were greater and my waist slenderer. 159

Ch. Just. You have misled the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath misled me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loath to gall a new-healed wound: your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gadshill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'er-posting that action. 171

Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wassail candle, my lord; all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth. 181

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravy, gravy, gravy.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light, but I hope he that looks upon me will take me without weighing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go, I cannot tell. Virtue is of so little regard in these costermonger times that true valour is turned bear-herd: pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings: all the other gifts appertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You that are old consider not the capacities of us that are young; you do measure the heat of our livers with the bitterness of your galls; and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too. 200

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye, a dry hand, a yellow cheek, a white beard, a decreasing leg, an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken, your wind short, your chin double, your wit single, and every part about you blasted with antiquity, and will you yet call yourself young? Fie, fie, fie, Sir John! 209

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice, I have lost it with hollaing and singing of anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not: the truth is I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him! For the box o' the ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it, and the young lion repents; marry, not in ashes and sackcloth, but in new silk and old sack. 222

Ch. Just. Well, God send the prince a better companion!

Fal. God send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the king hath severed you and Prince Harry. I hear you are going with Lord John of Lancaster against the archbishop and the Earl of Northumberland.

Fal. Yea; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look you pray, all you that kiss my lady Peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day; for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily; if it be a hot day, and I brandish any thing but a bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head but I am thrust upon it. Well, I cannot last ever. But it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If we will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is: I were better to be eaten to death with rust than to be scoured to nothing with perpetual motion. 247

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition!

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny; not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses. Fare you well: commend me to my cousin Westmoreland. 254

Exeunt Chief Justice and Servant.

Fal. If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. A man can no more separate age and covetousness than a' can part young limbs and lechery; but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other, and so both the degrees prevent my curses. Boy!

Page. Sir!

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. Go bear this letter to my Lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the Earl of Westmoreland; and this to old Mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin. About it: you know where to find me. Exit Page.

A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one or the other plays the rogue with my great toe. 'T is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. A good wit will make use of any thing; I will turn diseases to commodity. Exit. 278

SCENE III.—York. A Room in the Archbishop's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of YORK, the Lords HASTINGS, MOWBRAY, and BARDOLPH.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause and known our means;

And, my most noble friends, I pray you all, Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:

And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Mowb. I well allow the occasion of our arms;

But gladly would be better satisfied

How in our means we should advance ourselves

To look with forehead bold and big enough

Upon the power and puissance of the king.

Hast. Our present musters grow upon the file 10

To five-and-twenty thousand men of choice;

And our supplies live largely in the hope

Of great Northumberland, whose bosom

burns

With an incensed fire of injuries.

L. Bard. The question then, Lord Hastings, standeth thus:

Whether our present five-and-twenty thousand

May hold up head without Northumberland.

Hast. With him, we may.

L. Bard. Ay, marry, there 's the point:

But if without him we be thought too feeble,

My judgment is, we should not step too far

Till we had his assistance by the hand;

For in a theme so bloody-fac'd as this,

Conjecture, expectation, and surmise

Of aids uncertain should not be admitted.

Arch. 'T is very true, Lord Bardolph; for indeed

It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

L. Bard. It was, my lord; who lin'd himself with hope,

Eating the air on promise of supply,

Flattering himself with project of a power

Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts; 30

And so, with great imagination
Proper to madmen, led his powers to death,
And winking leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt
To lay down likelihoods and forms of hope.

L. Bard. Yes, if this present quality of war,

Indeed the instant action, a cause on foot,
Lives so in hope, as in an early spring
We see the appearing buds; which to prove fruit, 35

Hope gives not so much warrant as despair
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,

We first survey the plot, then draw the model;

And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection;
Which if we find outweighs ability,

What do we then but draw anew the model
In fewer offices, or at last desist

To build at all? Much more, in this great work,

Which is almost to pluck a kingdom down
And set another up, should we survey 50

The plot of situation and the model,
Consent upon a sure foundation,

Question surveyors, know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,

To weigh against his opposite; or else
We fortify in paper and in figures,

Using the names of men instead of men:
Like one that draws the model of a house

Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,

Gives o'er and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds, 61

And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be still-born, and that we now possess'd

The utmost man of expectation,
I think we are a body strong enough,

Even as we are, to equal with the king.

L. Bard. What! is the king but five-and-twenty thousand?

Hast. To us no more; nay, not so much, Lord Bardolph:

For his divisions, as the times do brawl, 70
Are in three heads: one power against the French,

And one against Glendower; perforce a third

Must take up us: so is the unfirm king
In three divided, and his coffers sound

With hollow poverty and emptiness.

Arch. That he should draw his several strengths together

And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so, He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh

Baying him at the heels: never fear that. 80

L. Bard. Who is it like should lead his forces hither?

Hast. The Duke of Lancaster and Westmoreland;

Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Monmouth:

But who is substituted 'gainst the French
I have no certain notice.

Arch. Let us on
And publish the occasion of our arms.

The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;

Their over-greedy love hath surfeited.
An habitation giddy and unsure

Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart. 90
O thou fond many! with what loud applause

Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke

Before he was what thou would'st have him be:

And being now trimm'd in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him

That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge

Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard,
And now thou would'st eat thy dead vomit

up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times? 100

They that, when Richard liv'd, would have him die,

Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that threw'st dust upon his goodly

head,
When through proud London he came sighing on

After the admired heels of Bolingbroke, Cry'st now, 'O earth! yield us that king

again,
And take thou this.' O thoughts of men

accurst!

Past and to come seems best; things present worst.

Mowb. Shall we go draw our numbers and set on?

Hast. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone. Exeunt. 110

ACT II

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Mistress QUICKLY, FANG, and his Boy, with her; and SNARE following.

Quick. Master Fang, have you entered the action?

Fang. It is entered.

Quick. Where's your yeoman? Is't a lusty yeoman? will a' stand to't?

Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?

Quick. O Lord, ay! good Master Snare.

Snare. Here, here.

Fang. Snare, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff.

Quick. Yea, good Master Snare; I have entered him and all. 11

Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.

Quick. Alas the day! take heed of him: he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly. In good faith, he cares not what mischief he doth if his weapon be out: he will foine like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him I care not for his thrust. 21

Quick. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.

Fang. An I but fist him once; an a' come but within my vice,—

Quick. I am undone with his going; I warrant you, he's an infinitive thing upon my score. Good Master Fang, hold him sure: good Master Snare, let him not 'scape. A' comes continually to Pie-corner—saving your manhoods—to buy a saddle; and he's indited to dinner to the Lubber's-head in Lumbert street, to Master Smooth's the silkman: I pray ye, since my exion is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long one for a poor lone woman to bear; and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been fubbed off, and fubbed off, and fubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong. Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmsey-nose knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices, Master Fang and Master Snare: do me, do me, do me your offices. 45

Fal. How now! whose mare's dead? what's the matter?

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of Mistress Quickly. 50

Fal. Away, varlets! Draw, Bardolph: cut me off the villain's head; throw the queen in the channel.

Quick. Throw me in the channel! I'll throw thee in the channel. Wilt thou? wilt thou? thou bastardly rogue! Murder, murder! Ah! thou honey-suckle villain! wilt thou kill God's officers and the king's? Ah! thou honey-seed rogue! thou art a honey-seed, a man-queller, and a woman-queller.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph. 60

Fang. A rescue! a rescue!

Quick. Good people, bring a rescue or two. Thou wo't, wo't thou? thou wo't, wo't ta? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scullion! you rampallian! you fustilarian! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What is the matter? keep the peace here, ho!

Quick. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me! 70

Ch. Just. How now, Sir John! what! are you brawling here?

Doth this become your place, your time and business?

You should have been well on your way to York.

Stand from him, fellow: wherefore hang'st upon him?

Quick. O my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Just. For what sum? 78

Quick. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, all I have. He hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his: but I will have some of it out again, or I will ride thee o' nights like the mare.

Fal. I think I am as like to ride the mare if I have any vantage of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir John? Fie! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation? Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own? 90

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

Quick. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Wheeson week, when the prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor, thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then and call me gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us she had a good dish of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some, whereby I told thee they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarity with such poor people; saying that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-oath: deny it if thou canst. 112

Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says up and down the town that her eldest son is like you. She hath been in good case, and the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you I may have redress against them. 118

Ch. Just. Sir John, Sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration; you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy-yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and person.

Quick. Yea, in troth, my lord. 128

Ch. Just. Prithee, peace. Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villany you have done with her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance.

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply. You call honourable boldness impudent sauciness; if a man will make court'sy and say nothing, he is virtuous. No, my lord, my humble duty remembered, I will not be your suitor: I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs. 140

Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong: but answer in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess.

Enter GOWER.

Ch. Just. Now, Master Gower! what news?

Gow. The king, my lord, and Harry Prince of Wales

Are near at hand: the rest the paper tells.

Fal. As I am a gentleman.

Quick. Nay, you said so before. 149

Fal. As I am a gentleman. Come, no more words of it.

Quick. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking: and for thy walls, a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the Prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound if thou canst. Come, an 'twere not for thy humours, there's not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action. Come, thou must not be in this humour with me. Dost not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

Quick. Prithee, Sir John, let it be but twenty nobles: i' faith, I am loath to pawn my plate, so God save me, la!

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still. 170

Quick. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope you'll come to supper. You'll pay me all together?

Fal. Will I live? To BARDOLPH. Go, with her, with her; hook on, hook on.

Quick. Will you have Doll Tearsheet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words; let's have her.

Ch. Just. I have heard better news.

Fal. What's the news, my good lord? 180

Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?

Gow. At Basingstoke, my lord.

Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: what is the news, my lord?

Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?

Gow. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse,

Are march'd up to my Lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland and the arch-bishop.

Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?

Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently. Come, go along with me, good Master Gower. 191

Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?

Gow. I must wait upon my good lord here; I thank you, good Sir John.

Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go. 200

Fal. Will you sup with me, Master Gower?

Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, Sir John?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me. This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair. 211

Ch. Just. Now the Lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Street.

Enter the PRINCE and POINS.

Prince. Before God, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is it come to that? I had thought weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

Prince. Faith, it does me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth it not show vilely in me to desire small beer? 8

Poins. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied as to remember so weak a composition.

Prince. Belike then my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me to remember thy name, or to know thy face to-morrow! or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz. these, and those that were thy peach-coloured ones! or to bear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superfluity, and one other for use! But that the tennis-court-keeper knows better than I, for it is a low ebb of linen with thee when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-countries have made a shift to eat up thy holland: and God knows whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen shall inherit his kingdom; but the midwives say the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened. 30

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

Prince. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Yes, faith, and let it be an excellent good thing.

Prince. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

Prince. Marry, I tell thee, it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me for fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hardly upon such a subject.

Prince. By this hand, thou thinkest me as far in the devil's book as thou and Falstaff for obduracy and persistency: let the end try the man. But I tell thee my heart bleeds inwardly that my father is so sick; and keeping such vile company as thou art hath in reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow.

Poins. The reason?

Prince. What would'st thou think of me if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

Prince. It would be every man's thought; and thou art a blessed fellow to think as every man thinks; never a man's thought in the world keeps the roadway better than thine; every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?

Poins. Why, because you have been so lewd and so much engrafted to Falstaff.

Prince. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoke on; I can hear it with mine own ears: the worst that they can say of me is that I am a second brother and that I am a proper fellow of my hands; and those two things I confess I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

Enter BARDOLPH and Page.

Prince. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: a' had him from me Christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.

Bard. God save your grace!

Prince. And yours, most noble Bardolph.

Bard. To the Page. Come, you virtuous ass, you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man-at-arms are you become! Is it such a matter to get a pottle-pot's maiden-head?

Page. A' calls me e'en now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window: at last I spied his eyes, and methought he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new petticoat, and peeped through.

Prince. Hath not the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabbit, away!

Page. Away, you rascally Althæa's dream, away!

Prince. Instruct us, boy; what dream, boy?

Page. Marry, my lord, Althæa dreamed she was delivered of a firebrand; and therefore I call him her dream.

Prince. A crown's worth of good interpretation. There 't is, boy.

Gives him money.

Poins. O! that this good blossom could be kept from cankers. Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

Prince. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town: there's a letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect. And how doth the martlemas, your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him: though that he sick, it dies not.

Prince. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place, for look you how he writes.

Poins. John Falstaff, knight,—every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself; even like those that are kin to the king, for they never prick their finger but they say 'There's some of the king's blood spilt.' 'How comes that?' says he that takes upon him not to conceive. The answer is as ready as a borrower's cap; 'I am the king's poor cousin, sir.'

Prince. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But to the letter:

Poins. Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting. Why, this is a certificate.

Prince. Peace!

Poins. I will imitate the honourable Romans in brevity: he sure means brevity in breath, short-winded. I commend me to thee, I commend thee and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou mayest, and so farewell.

Thine, by yea and no, which is as much as to say, as thou usest him, Jack Falstaff with my familiars, John with my brothers and sisters, and Sir John with all Europe.

My lord, I'll steep this letter in sack and make him eat it.

Prince. That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Poins. God send the wench no worse fortune! but I never said so.

Prince. Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us. Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

Prince. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank? 160

Bard. At the old place, my lord, in Eastcheap.

Prince. What company?

Page. Ephesians, my lord, of the old church.

Prince. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old Mistress Quickly and Mistress Doll Tearsheet.

Prince. What pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's. 170

Prince. Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper?

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

Prince. Sirrah, you boy, and Bardolph; no word to your master that I am yet come to town: there's for your silence.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir. 179

Page. And for mine, sir, I will govern it.

Prince. Fare ye well; go.

This Doll Tearsheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Alban's and London.

Prince. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen? 183

Poins. Put on two leathern jerkins and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

Prince. From a god to a bull! a heavy declension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice! a low transformation! that shall be mine; for in every thing the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me, Ned. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Warkworth. Before NORTH-UMBERLAND'S Castle.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, Lady NORTH-UMBERLAND, and Lady PERCY.

North. I pray thee, loving wife and gentle daughter,

Give even way unto my rough affairs:

Put not you on the visage of the times, And be like them to Percy troublesome.

Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more. Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas! sweet wife, my honour is at pawn;

And, but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lady P. O! yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars.

The time was, father, that you broke your word 10

When you were more endear'd to it than now;

When your own Percy, when my heart's dear Harry,

Threw many a northward look to see his father

Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain.

Who then persuaded you to stay at home? There were two honours lost, yours and your son's;

For yours, the God of heaven brighten it! For his, it stuck upon him as the sun In the grey vault of heaven; and by his light

Did all the chivalry of England move 20 To do brave acts: he was indeed the glass Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves:

He had no legs, that practised not his gait; And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant; For those that could speak low and tardily Would turn their own perfection to abuse. To seem like him: so that in speech, in gait, In diet, in affections of delight,

In military rules, humours of blood, 30 He was the mark and glass, copy and book. That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous him!

O miracle of men! him did you leave, Second to none, unseconded by you, To look upon the hideous god of war In disadvantage; to abide a field Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name

Did seem defensible: so you left him. Never, O! never, do his ghost the wrong To hold your honour more precise and nice 40

With others than with him: let them alone. The marshal and the archbishop are strong: Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,

To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck, Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beshrew your heart, Fair daughter! you do draw my spirits from me

With new lamenting ancient oversights. But I must go and meet with danger there, Or it will seek me in another place, And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O! fly to Scotland, 50 Till that the nobles and the armed commons Have of their puissance made a little taste.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the king,

Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,

To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves,

First let them try themselves. So did your son;

He was so suffer'd: so came I a widow; And never shall have length of life enough To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes, That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,

For recordation to my noble husband. 61

North. Come come, go in with me. 'T is with my mind

As with the tide swell'd up unto his height, That makes a still-stand, running neither way:

Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,

But many thousand reasons hold me back.
I will resolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company.
Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern in Eastcheap.

Enter two Drawers.

First Draw. What the devil hast thou brought there? apple-johns? thou knowest Sir John cannot endure an apple-john.

Second Draw. Mass, thou sayest true. The prince once set a dish of apple-johns before him, and told him there were five more Sir Johns; and, putting off his hat, said, 'I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, withered knights.' It angered him to the heart; but he hath forgot that.

First Draw. Why then, cover, and set them down: and see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise; Mistress Tearsheet would fain hear some music. Dispatch: the room where they supped is too hot; they'll come in straight.

Second Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince and Master Poin's anon; and they will put on two of our jerkins and aprons; and Sir John must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

First Draw. By the mass, here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem.

Second Draw. I'll see if I can find out Sneak. Exit.

Enter Mistress QUICKLY and DOLL TEARSHEET.

Quick. I' faith, sweetheart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperality: your pulside beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire; and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose, in good truth, la! But, i' faith, you have drunk too much canaries, and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say 'What's this?' How do you now?

Doll. Better than I was: hem!

Quick. Why, that's well said; a good heart's worth gold. Lo! here comes Sir John.

Enter FALSTAFF, singing.

Fal. When Arthur first in court—Empty the jordan.—And was a worthy king.

Exit First Drawer.

How now, Mistress Doll!

Quick. Sick of a calm: yea, good sooth. Fal. So is all her sect; an they be once in a calm they are sick.

Doll. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals, Mistress Doll.

Doll. I make them! gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

Doll. Ay, marry; our chains and our jewels.

Fal. 'Your brooches, pearls, and owches': for to serve bravely is to come halting off you know; to come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely,—

Doll. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Quick. By my troth, this is the old fashion; you two never meet but you fall to some discord: you are both, in good troth, as rheumatic as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's confimities. What the good-year! one must bear, and that must be you: you are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

Doll. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hogshead? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bordeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter First Drawer.

First Draw. Sir, Ancient Pistol's below, and would speak with you.

Doll. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul-mouthedest rogue in England.

Quick. If he swagger, let him not come here: no, by my faith; I must live among my neighbours; I'll no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very best. Shut the door; there comes no swaggerers here; I have not lived all this while to have swaggering now: shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?

Quick. Pray you, pacify yourself, Sir John: there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.

Quick. Tilly-fally. Sir John, never tell me: your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before Master Tisick, the deputy, t' other day; and, as he said to me, 't was no longer ago than Wednesday last, 'Neighbour Quickly,' says he; Master Dumbe, our minister, was by then; 'Neighbour Quickly,' says he, 'receive those that are civil; for,' said he, 'you are in an ill name;' now a' said so, I can tell where-upon; 'for,' says he, 'you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive: receive,' says he, 'no swaggering companions.' There comes none here: you would bless you to hear what he said. No, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater, i' faith; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance.

Call him up, drawer. 109

Exit First Drawer.

Quick. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater; but I do not love swaggering, by my troth; I am the worse, when one says swagger. Feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

Doll. So you do, hostess.

Quick. Do I? yea, in very truth do I, an 't were an aspen-leaf. I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Pist. God save you, Sir John! 119

Fal. Welcome, Ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon my hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, Sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her.

Quick. Come, I'll drink no proofs nor no bullets: I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I. 129

Pist. Then to you, Mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

Doll. Charge me! I scorn you, scurvy companion. What! you poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate! Away, you mouldy rogue, away! I am meat for your master.

Pist. I know you, Mistress Dorothy.

Doll. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! By this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps an you play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-hilt stale juggler, you! Since when, I pray you, sir? God's light! with two points on your shoulder? much! 143

Pist. God let me not live, but I will murder your ruff for this!

Fal. No more, Pistol: I would not have you go off here. Discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Quick. No, good Captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain. 150

Doll. Captain! thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called captain? An captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. * You a captain, you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house? He a captain! hang him, rogue! he lives upon mouldy-stewed prunes and dried cakes. A captain! God's light, these villains will make the word as odious as the word 'occupy,' which was an excellent good word before it was ill sorted: therefore captains had need look to 't. 163

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Hark thee hither, Mistress Doll.

Pist. Not I: I tell thee what, Corporal Bardolph; I could tear her. I'll be revenged of her.

Page. Pray thee, go down.

Pist. I'll see her damned first; to Pluto's damned lake, to the infernal deep, with Erebus and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down, down, dogs! down, fates! Have we not Hiren here? 173

Quick. Good Captain Peesel, be quiet; 't is very late, i' faith. I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed!

Shall pack-horses,
And hollow pamper'd jades of Asia,
Which cannot go but thirty miles a day, 179
Compare with Cæsars, and with Cannibals,
And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with

King Cerberus; and let the welkin roar.

Shall we fall foul for toys?

Quick. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl anon.

Pist. Die men like dogs! give crowns like pins! Have we not Hiren here?

Quick. O' my word, captain, there's none such here. 190

What the good-year! do you think I would deny her?

For God's sake! be quiet.

Pist. Then feed, and be fat, my fair Calipolis. Come, give's some sack.

Si fortune me tormente, sperato me contento.

Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire:

Give me some sack; and, sweetheart, lie thou there. Laying down his sword.

Come we to full points here, and are et ceteras nothing?

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif. What! we have seen the seven stars. 200

Doll. For God's sake, thrust him down stairs! I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.

Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Galloway nags?

Fal. Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat shilling: nay, an a' do nothing but speak nothing, a' shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we imbrue?

Snatching up his sword. 210
Then death rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days!

Why then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping
wounds

Untwine the Sisters Three! Come, Atropos,
I say!

Quick. Here's goodly stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Doll. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.

Fal. Get you down stairs. Drawing. 218

Quick. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, afore I'll be in these tirrits and frights. So; murder, I warrant now. Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons; put up your naked weapons.

Exeunt BARDOLPH and PISTOL.

Doll. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal's gone. Ah! you whoreson little valiant villain, you.

Quick. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought a' made a shrewd thrust at your belly. 228

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

Fal. Have you turned him out o' doors?

Bard. Yea, sir: the rascal's drunk. You have hurt him, sir, i' the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal, to brave me!

Doll. Ah! you sweet little rogue, you! Alas! poor ape, how thou sweatest. Come, let me wipe thy face; come on, you whoreson chops. Ah! rogue, i' faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the Nine Worthies. Ah! villain. 239

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Doll. Do, an thou darest for thy heart: an thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheets.

Enter Music.

Fal. Let them play. Play, sirs. Sit on my knee, Doll. A rascal bragging slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver. 248

Doll. I' faith, and thou follow'dst him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting o' days, and foining o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter behind, the PRINCE and POINS, disguised like Drawers.

Fals. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's-head: do not bid me remember mine end.

Doll. Sirrah, what humour's the prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow: a' would have made a good pantler, a' would ha' chipped bread well.

Doll. They say Poins has a good wit. 260

Fal. He a good wit! hang him, baboon! his wit's as thick as Tewksbury mustard: there's no more conceit in him than is in a mallet.

Doll. Why does the prince love him so, then?

Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness, and a' plays at quoits well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys, and jumps upon joint-stools, and swears with a good grace, and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg, and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories; and such other gambol faculties a' has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoirdupois.

Prince. Would not this nave of a wheel have his ears cut off? 279

Poins. Let's beat him before his whore.

Prince. Look, whether the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.

Poins. Is it not strange that desire should so many years outlive performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

Prince. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanac to that?

Poins. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not lisping to his master's old tables, his note-book, his counsel-keeper. 290

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.

Doll. By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Doll. I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? I shall receive money o' Thursday; shalt have a cap to-morrow. A merry song! come: it grows late; we'll to bed. Thou'lt forget me when I am gone. 300

Doll. By my troth, thou'lt set me a-weeping an thou sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return. Well, hearken at the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis!

Prince, Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

Coming forward.

Fal. Ha! a bastard son of the king's. And art thou not Poins his brother?

Prince. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead! 310

Fal. A better than thou: I am a gentleman; thou art a drawer.

Prince. Very true, sir; and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Quick. O! the Lord preserve thy good grace; by my troth, welcome to London. Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu! are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty, by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome. 321

Doll. How, you fat fool! I scorn you.

Poins. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

Prince. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how vilely did you speak of me even now, before this honest, virtuous civil gentlewoman!

Quick. God's blessing of your good heart! and so she is, by my troth. 330

Fal. Didst thou hear me?

Prince. Yea, and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gadshill: you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no; not so; I did not think thou wast within hearing.

Prince. I shall drive you then to confess the wilful abuse; and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, Hal, o' mine honour; no abuse. 340

Prince. Not to dispraise me, and call me pantler and bread-chipper and I know not what?

Fal. No abuse, Hal.

Poins. No abuse!

Fal. No abuse, Ned, i' the world; honest Ned, none. I dispraised him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him; in which doing I have done the part of a careful friend and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal; none, Ned, none: no, faith, boys, none. 351

Prince. See now, whether pure fear and entire cowardice doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us? Is she of the wicked? Is thine hostess here of the wicked? Or is the boy of the wicked? Or honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in his nose, of the wicked? 357

Poins. Answer, thou dead elm, answer.

Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph irrecoverable; and his face is Lucifer's privy-kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For the boy, there is a good angel about him; but the devil outbids him too.

Prince. For the women?

Fal. For one of them, she is in hell already, and burns poor souls. For the other, I owe her money, and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

Quick. No, I warrant you. 369

Fal. No, I think thou art not; I think thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law; for the which I think thou wilt howl.

Quick. All victuallers do so; what's a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lent?

Prince. You, gentlewoman,—

Doll. What says your grace?

Fal. His grace says that which his flesh rebels against. Knocking within. 380

Quick. Who knocks so loud at door? Look to the door there, Francis.

Enter PETO.

Prince. Peto, how now! what news?

Peto. The king your father is at Westminster;

And there are twenty weak and wearied posts

Come from the north: and, as I came along, I met and overtook a dozen captains,

Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns,

And asking every one for Sir John Falstaff.

Prince. By heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame, 390

So idly to profane the precious time, When tempest of commotion, like the south,

Borne with black vapour, doth begin to melt And drop upon our bare unarmed heads.

Give me my sword and cloak. Falstaff, good night.

Exeunt the PRINCE, POINS, PETO, and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence and leave it unpicked. Knocking within.

More knocking at the door!

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

How now! what's the matter? 400

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently;

A dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. To the Page. Pay the musicians, sirrah. Farewell, hostess; farewell, Doll.

You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after: the undeserver may sleep when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches. If I be not sent away post, I will see you again ere I go. 408

Doll. I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst,—well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, farewell.

Exeunt FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Quick. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peascod-time; but an honest and truer-hearted man,—well, fare thee well.

Bard. Within. Mistress Tearsheet!

Quick. What's the matter?

Bard. Within. Bid Mistress Tearsheet come to my master. 418

Quick. O! run, Doll, run; run, good Doll. Exeunt.

ACT III

SCENE I.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King HENRY in his nightgown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go call the earls of Surrey and of Warwick;

But, ere they come, bid them o'erread these letters,

And well consider of them. Make good speed. Exit Page.

How many thousand of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep! O Sleep! O gentle Sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee,

That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down

And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Why rather, Sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,

Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee, 10

And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber,

Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great, Under the canopies of costly state,

And lull'd with sound of sweetest melody? O thou dull god! why liest thou with the vile

In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch

A watch-case or a common larum bell? Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast

Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains

In cradle of the rude imperious surge, 20
And in the visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging
them
With deaf'ning clamour in the slippery clouds,
That with the hurly death itself awakes?
Canst thou, O partial Sleep! give thy repose
To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and most stillest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Then happy low, lie
down! 30
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter WARWICK and SURREY.

War. Many good morrows to your
majesty!
K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords?
War. 'T is 'one o'clock, and past.
K. Hen. Why then, good morrow to you all, my lords.
Have you read o'er the letters that I sent
you?
War. We have, my liege.
K. Hen. Then you perceive the body of our kingdom
How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger, near the heart of
it. 40
War. It is but as a body yet distemper'd, Which to his former strength may be restor'd
With good advice and little medicine:
My Lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.
K. Hen. O God! that one might read the book of fate,
And see the revolution of the times
Make mountains level, and the continent
Weary of solid firmness, melt itself
Into the sea! and, other times, to see
The beachy girdle of the ocean 50
Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances
mock,
And changes fill the cup of alteration
With divers liquors! O! if this were seen,
The happiest youth, viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book, and sit him down and
die.
'T is not ten years gone
Since Richard and Northumberland, great
friends,
Did feast together, and in two years after
Were they at wars: it is but eight years
since 60
This Percy was the man nearest my soul,
Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs
And laid his love and life under my foot;
Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of
Richard
Gave him defiance. But which of you was by.—
To WARWICK. You, cousin Nevil, as I may remember.—
When Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,

Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy? 69
'Northumberland, thou ladder by the which
My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne';
Though then, God knows, I had no such intent,
But that necessity so bow'd the state
That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:
'The time shall come,' thus did he follow it,
'The time will come, that foul sin, gathering
head,
Shall break into corruption': so went on,
Foretelling this same time's condition
And the division of our amity. 79
War. There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times decess'd;
The which observ'd a man may prophesy,
With a near aim of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings lie intreasur'd.
Such things become the hatch and brood of
time;
And by the necessary form of this
King Richard might create a perfect guess That great Northumberland, then false to
him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater false-
ness, 80
Which should not find a ground to root
upon,
Unless on you.
K. Hen. Are these things then necessities?
Then let us meet them like necessities;
And that same word even now cries out on
us.
They say the bishop and Northumberland
Are fifty thousand strong.
War. It cannot be, my lord;
Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo,
The numbers of the fear'd. Please it your
grace
To go to bed: upon my life, my lord,
The powers that you already have sent
forth 100
Shall bring this prize in very easily.
To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd
A certain instance that Glendower is dead.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add
Unto your sickness.
K. Hen. I will take your counsel:
And were these inward wars once out of
hand,
We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Court before Justice SHAL-LOW'S House in Gloucestershire.

*Enter SHALLOW and SILENCE, meeting;
MOULDY, SHADOW, WART, FEEBLE,
BULLCALE, and Servants, behind.*

Shal. Come on, come on, come on, sir;
give me your hand, sir, give me your hand,

sir: an early stirrer, by the rood! And how doth my good cousin Silence?

Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bed-fellow? and your fairest daughter and mine, my god-daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas! a black ousel, cousin Shallow.

Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say my cousin William is become a good scholar. He is at Oxford still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir, to my cost.

Shal. A' must then to the inns o' court shortly. I was once of Clement's Inn; where I think they will talk of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were called 'lusty Shallow' then, cousin.

Shal. By the mass, I was called any thing; and I would have done any thing indeed too, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Barnes, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele, a Cotswold man; you had not four such swinge-bucklers in all the inns o' court again; and I may say to you, we knew where the bona-robos were, and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now Sir John, a boy, and page to Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This Sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same. I saw him break Skogan's head at the court gate, when a' was a crack not thus high; and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's Inn. Jesu! Jesu! the mad days that I have spent; and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 't is certain; very sure, very sure: death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all; all shall die. How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain. Is old Double of your town living yet?

Sil. Dead, sir.

Shal. Jesu! Jesu! dead! a' drew a good bow; and dead! a' shot a fine shoot: John a Gaunt loved him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead! a' would have clapped i' the clout at twelve score; and carried you a forehead shaft at fourteen and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's heart good to see. How a score of ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Sil. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as I think.

Enter BARDOLPH, and One with him.

Bard. Good morrow, honest gentlemen: I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace; what is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you; my captain, Sir John Falstaff: a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir: I knew him a good backword man. How doth the good knight? may I ask how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated! it is good; yea, indeed, is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated! it comes of accommodo: very good; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word. 'Phrase' call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase; but I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command, by heaven. Accommodated; that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or when a man is, being, whereby a' may be thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Shal. It is very just. Look! here comes good Sir John. Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand. By my troth, you like well and bear your years very well: welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good Master Robert Shallow. Master Surecard, as I think?

Shal. No, Sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good Master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Fie! this is hot weather, gentlemen. Have you provided me here half-a-dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? where's the roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see: so, so, so, so, so, so, so: yea, marry, sir: Ralph Mouldy! Let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so. Let me see; where is Mouldy?

Moul. Here, an 't please you.

Shal. What think you, Sir John? a goodlimbed fellow; young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, an 't please you.

Fal. 'T is the more time thou wert used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, i' faith! things that are mouldy lack use: very singular good! In faith, well said, Sir John; very well said.

Fal. Prick him.

Moul. I was pricked well enough before, an you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery: you need not to have pricked me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Go to: peace, Mouldy! you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent!

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace! stand aside: know you where you are? for the other, Sir John: let me see. Simon Shadow! 132

Fal. Yea, marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shad. Here, sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Shad. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough. and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: it is often so, indeed; but much of the father's substance. 142

Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer; prick him, for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book.

Shal. Thomas Wart!

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart? 150

Wart. Yea, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.

Shal. Shall I prick him, Sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well. Francis Feeble!

Fee. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble? 160

Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may; but if he had been a man's tailor he'd ha' pricked you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

Fee. I will do my good will, sir: you can have no more.

Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove or most magnanimous mouse. Prick the woman's tailor: well, Master Shallow; deep, Master Shallow. 173

Fee. I would Wart might have gone, sir.

Fal. I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou might'st mend him and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier that is the leader of so many thousands: let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Fee. It shall suffice, sir. 180

Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble. Who is next?

Shal. Peter Bullcalf o' the green!

Fal. Yea, marry, let's see Bullcalf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. Fore God, a likely fellow! Come, prick me Bullcalf till he roar again.

Bull. O Lord! good my lord captain,—

Fal. What! dost thou roar before thou art pricked? 190

Bull. O Lord! sir, I am a diseased man.

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whoreson cold, sir; a cough, sir; which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation-day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order that thy friends shall ring for thee. Is here all? 199

Shal. Here is two more called than your number; you must have but four here, sir: and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, by my troth, Master Shallow.

Shal. O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's fields?

Fal. No more of that, good Master Shallow, no more of that.

Shal. Ha! 't was a merry night. And is Jane Nightwork alive? 211

Fal. She lives, Master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Fal. Never, never; she would always say she could not abide Master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bona-roba. Doth she hold her own well?

Fal. Old, old Master Shallow. 219

Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old; certain she's old; and had Robin Nightwork by old Nightwork before I came to Clement's Inn.

Sil. That's fifty-five year ago.

Shal. Ha! cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen that that this knight and I have seen. Ha! Sir John, said I well?

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, Master Shallow. 229

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, Sir John, we have. Our watchword was 'Hem, boys!' Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner: Jesu, the days that we have seen! Come, come.

Exeunt FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, and SILENCE.

Bull. Good Master Corporate Bardolph, stand my friend, and here's four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hanged, sir, as go: and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends: else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much. 242

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Moul. And good Master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nobody to do anything about her when I am gone; and she is old and cannot help herself. You shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go to; stand aside. 249

Fee. By my troth, I care not; a man can die but once; we owe God a death. I'll ne'er bear a base mind: an't be my destiny, so; an't be not, so. No man's too good to serve's prince; and let it go which way it will, he that dies this year is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.

Fee. Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

Re-enter FALSTAFF and the Justices.

Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Four, of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you: I have three pound to free Mouldy and Bullcalf. 251

Fal. Go to; well.

Shal. Come, Sir John, which four will you have?

Fal. Do you choose for me.

Shal. Marry, then, Mouldy, Bullcalf, Feeble, and Shadow.

Fal. Mouldy and Bullcalf: for you, Mouldy, stay at home till you are past service: and for your part, Bullcalf, grow till you come unto it: I will none of you. 271

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself wrong: they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thewes, the stature, bulk, and big assemblance of a man! Give me the spirit, Master Shallow. Here's Wart; you see what a ragged appearance it is: a' shall charge you and discharge you with the motion of a pewterer's hammer, come off and on swifter than he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket. And this same half-faced fellow, Shadow; give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. And for a retreat; how swiftly will this Feeble the woman's tailor run off! O! give me the spare men and spare me the great ones. Put me a caliver into Wart's hand, Bardolph. 290

Bard. Hold, Wart, traverse; thus, thus, thus.

Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So: very well: go to: very good, exceedingly good. Oh! give me always a little, lean, old, chapped, bald shot. Well said, i' faith, Wart; thou'rt a good scab: hold, there's a tester for thee.

Shal. He is not his craft's master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end Green, when I lay at Clement's Inn, I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show, there was a little quiver fellow, and a' would manage you his piece thus: and a' would about and about, and come you in, and come you in: 'rah, tah, tah,' would a' say; 'bounce' would a' say; and away again would a' go, and again would a' come: I shall ne'er see such a fellow. 306

Fal. These fellows will do well, Master Shallow. God keep you, Master Silence: I will not use many words with you. Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to-night. Bardolph, give the soldiers coats. 311

Shal. Sir John, the Lord bless you! God prosper your affairs! God send us peace!

At your return visit our house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure I will with ye to the court.

Fal. Fore God, I would you would, Master Shallow.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke at a word. God keep you.

Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen.

Exeunt SHALLOW and SILENCE.
On, Bardolph; lead the men away.

Exeunt BARDOLPH, Recruits, etc.
As I return I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of Justice Shallow. Lord, Lord! how subject we old men are to this vice of lying. This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth and the feats he hath done about Turnbull-street; and every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's Inn like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when a' was naked he was for all the world like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife: a' was so forlorn that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible: a' was the very genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him mandrake: a' came ever in the rearward of the fashion, and sung those tunes to the over-scuthed huswives that he heard the carmen whistle, and sware they were his fancies or his good-nights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire, and talks as familiarly of John a Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn a' ne'er saw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and then he burst his head for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it and told John a Gaunt he beat his own name; for you might have thrust him and all his apparel into an eel-skin; the case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him, a court; and now has he land and beeves. Well, I'll be acquainted with him if I return; and it shall go hard but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me. If the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason in the law of nature but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end. Exit. 357

ACT IV

SCENE I.—A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of YORK, MOW-BRAY, HASTINGS, and Others.

Arch. What is this forest called?

Hast. 'T is Gualtree Forest, an 't shall please your grace.

Arch. Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth.

To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'T is well done. My friends and brethren in these great affairs,

I must acquaint you that I have receiv'd

New-dated letters from Northumberland;
Their cold intent, tenour and substance,
thus:

Here doth he wish his person, with such powers 10

As might hold sortance with his quality;
The which he could not levy; whereupon
He is retir'd, to ripe his growing fortunes,
To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers

That your attempts may overlive the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Mowb. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground
And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news?

Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile,

In goodly form comes on the enemy; 20
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number

Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowb. The just proportion that we gave them out.

Let us sway on and face them in the field.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?

Enter WESTMORELAND.

Mowb. I think it is my Lord of Westmore-
land.

West. Health and fair greeting from our general,

The prince, Lord John and Duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my Lord of Westmoreland,
in peace,

What doth concern your coming.

West. Then, my lord,
Unto your grace do I in chief address 31

The substance of my speech. If that rebellion

Came like itself, in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rags,

And countenanc'd by boys and beggary;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,

In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords

Had not been here, to dress the ugly form
Of base and bloody insurrection 40

With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop,

Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath

touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,

Whose white investments figure innocence,

The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself

Out of the speech of peace that bears such
grace,

Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war;
Turning your books to graves, your ink to

blood, 50
Your pens to lances, and your tongue divine
To a loud trumpet and a point of war?

Arch. Wherefore do I this? so the question stands.

Briefly to this end: we are all diseas'd;
And with our surfeiting and wanton hours

Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must bleed for it: of which disease

Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.
But, my most noble Lord of Westmoreland,

I take not on me here as a physician, 60
Nor do I as an enemy to peace

Troop in the throngs of military men;
But rather show awhile like fearful war,

To diet rank minds sick of happiness
And purge the obstructions which begin to stop

Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly:

I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs

we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences.

We see which way the stream of time doth
run, 70

And are enforc'd from our most quiet sphere
By the rough torrent of occasion;

And have the summary of all our griefs,
When the time shall serve, to show in articles,

Which long ere this we offer'd to the king,
And might by no suit gain our audience.

When we are wrong'd and would unfold our
griefs,

We are denied access unto his person
Even by those men that most have done us

wrong.
The dangers of the days but newly gone, 80

Whose memory is written on the earth
With yet appearing blood, and the examples

Of every minute's instance, present now,
Have put us in these ill-beseeming arms;

Not to break peace or any branch of it,
But to establish here a peace indeed,

Concurring both in name and quality.
West. When ever yet was your appeal denied?

Wherein have you been galled by the king?

What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on
you, 90

That you should seal this lawless bloody book

Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine,
And consecrate commotion's bitter edge?

Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth,

To brother born an household cruelty,
I make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress;

Or if there were, it not belongs to you.
Mowb. Why not to him in part, and to us

all
That feel the bruises of the days before, 100

And suffer the condition of these times
To lay a heavy and unequal hand

Upon our honours?
West. O! my good Lord Mowbray,

Construe the times to their necessities,
And you shall see indeed, it is the time,

And not the king, that doth you injuries.
Yet for your part, it not appears to me
Either from the king or in the present time,
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on: were you not restor'd
To all the Duke of Norfolk's signiories, 111
Your noble and right well remember'd father's?

Mowb. What thing, in honour, had my father lost,

That need to be reviv'd and breath'd in me?
The king that lov'd him, as the state stood
then,

Was force perforce compell'd to banish
him:

And then that Harry Bolingbroke and he,
Being mounted and both roused in their seats,

Their neighing coursers daring of the spur,
Their armed staves in charge, their beavers
down, 120

Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights
of steel,

And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
Then, then, when there was nothing could have stay'd

My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O! when the king did throw his warder
down,

His own life hung upon the staff he threw;
Then threw he down himself and all their
lives

That by indictment and by dint of sword
Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.

West. You speak, Lord Mowbray, now you know not what. 130

The Earl of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant gentleman:
Who knows on whom fortune would then have smil'd?

But if your father had been victor there,
He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry;
For all the country in a general voice
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers
and love

Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on And bless'd and grac'd indeed, more than
the king.

But this is mere digression from my purpose.

Here come I from our princely general 141
To know your griefs; to tell you from his
grace

That he will give you audience; and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them; every thing set off
That might so much as think you enemies.

Mowb. But he hath forc'd us to compel this offer,

And it proceeds from policy, not love.

West. Mowbray, you overween to take
it so:

This offer comes from mercy, not from fear:
For, lo! within a ken our army lies, 151

Upon mine honour, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;

Then reason will our hearts should be as
good:

Say you not then our offer is compell'd.

Mowb. Well, by my will we shall admit no parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence: 160

A rotten cause abides no handling.

Hast. Hath the Prince John a full commission,

In very ample virtue of his father,
To hear and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?

West. That is intended in the general's name.

I muse you make so slight a question.

Arch. Then take, my Lord of Westmoreland, this schedule,

For this contains our general grievances:
Each several article herein redress'd; 170

All members of our cause, both here and
hence,

That are insinew'd to this action,
Acquitted by a true substantial form

And present execution of our wills
To us and to our purposes consign'd;

We come within our awful banks again
And knit our powers to the arm of peace.

West. This will I show the general.
Please you, lords,

In sight of both our battles we may meet;
And either end in peace, which God so
frame! 180

Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.

Arch. My lord, we will do so.

Exit WESTMORELAND.

Mowb. There is a thing within my bosom tells me

That no conditions of our peace can stahd.

Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace

Upon such large terms and so absolute
As our conditions shall consist upon,

Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

Mowb. Yea, but our valuation shall be such 189

That every slight and false-derived cause
Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton reason

Shall to the king taste of this action;
That, were our royal faiths martyrs in love,

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff

And good from bad find no partition.

Arch. No, no, my lord. Note this; the king is weary

Of dainty and such picking grievances:
For he hath found to end one doubt by death

Revives two greater in the heirs of life; 200
And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,

And keep no tell-tale to his memory
That may repeat and history his loss

To new remembrance; for full well he knows

He cannot so precisely weed this land
As his misdoubts present occasion:

His foes are so enrooted with his friends

That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend:
So that this land, like an offensive wife 210
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution.

Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods

On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Arch. 'Tis very true:
And therefore be assur'd, my good lord
marshal, 220

If we do not now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.

Mowb. Be it so.
Here is return'd my Lord of Westmoreland.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

West. The prince is here at hand;
pleaseth your lordship
To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies?

Mowb. Your grace of York, in God's name then, set forward.

Arch. Before, and greet his grace: my lord,
we come. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter, from one side, MOWBRAY, the Archbishop, HASTINGS, and others: from the other side, JOHN OF LANCASTER, WESTMORELAND, Officers, and Attendants.

Lanc. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray:

Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop;
And so to you, Lord Hastings, and to all.
My Lord of York, it better show'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,

Encircled you to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text
Than now to see you here an iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword and life to
death. 10

That man that sits within a monarch's heart
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
Alack! what mischiefs might he set abroad
In shadow of such greatness. With you, lord bishop,

It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken
How deep you were within the books of God?

To us the speaker in his parliament;
To us the imagin'd voice of God himself;
The very opener and intelligencer 20
Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven,
And our dull workings: O! who shall believe
But you misuse the reverence of your place, Employ the countenance and grace of
heaven,

As a false favourite doth his prince's name,
In deeds dishonourable? You have ta'en up,
Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father;
And both against the peace of heaven and
him

Have here upswarm'd them.

Arch. Good my Lord of Lancaster,
I am not here against your father's peace; 31
But, as I told my Lord of Westmoreland,
The time misorder'd doth, in common sense,
Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous
form.

To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
The parcels and particulars of our grief,
The which hath been with scorn shov'd
from the court.

Whereon this Hydra son of war is born;
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd
asleep

With grant of our most just and right desires. 40

And true obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

Mowb. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes

To the last man.

Hast. And though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt:
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them;
And so success of mischief shall be born,
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel
up

Whiles England shall have generation.

Lanc. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow. 50

To sound the bottom of the after-times.

West. Pleaseth your grace to answer them directly

How far forth you do like their articles?

Lanc. I like them all, and do allow them
well:

And swear here by the honour of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested this meaning and authority.

My lords, these griefs shall be with speed
redress'd;

Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please
you, 60

Discharge your powers unto their several counties,

As we will ours: and here between the armies

Let's drink together friendly and embrace,
That all their eyes may bear those tokens
home

Of our restored love and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redresses.

Lanc. I give it you, and will maintain my
word:

And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

Hast. Go, captain, and deliver to the army

This news of peace: let them have pay, and
part. 70

I know it will well please them: hie thee, captain. Exit Officer.

Arch. To you, my noble Lord of Westmoreland.

West. I pledge your grace: and if you knew what pains

I have bestow'd to breed this present peace, You would drink freely; but my love to you Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.

Health to my lord and gentle cousin Mowbray.

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;

For I am, on the sudden, something ill. 80

Arch. Against ill chances men are ever merry,

But heaviness foreruns the good event.

West. Therefore be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow

Serves to say thus, 'Some good thing comes to-morrow.'

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse if your own rule be true. Shouts within.

Lanc. The word of peace is render'd: hark, how they shout!

Mowb. This had been cheerful after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest;

For then both parties nobly are subdued, And neither party loser. 91

Lanc. Go, my lord,

And let our army be discharged too.

Exit WESTMORELAND.

And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains

March by us, that we may peruse the men We should have cop'd withal.

Arch. Go, good Lord Hastings,

And, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by. Exit HASTINGS.

Lanc. I trust, lords, we shall lie to-night together.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

West. The leaders, having charge from you to stand,

Will not go off until they hear you speak. 100

Lanc. They know their duties.

Re-enter HASTINGS.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispers'd already:

Like youthful steers unyok'd, they take their courses

East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up,

Each hurries toward his home and sporting-place.

West. Good tidings, my Lord Hastings; for the which

I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason: And you, lord archbishop, and you, Lord

Mowbray,

Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable? 110

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

Lanc. I pawn'd thee none.

I promis'd you redress of these same grievances

Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honour,

I will perform with a most Christian care.

But for you, rebels, look to taste the due

Meet for rebellion and such acts as yours.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,

Fondly brought here and foolishly sent hence.

Strike up our drums! pursue the scatter'd stray: 120

God, and not we, hath safely fought to-day.

Some guard these traitors to the block of death;

Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Forest.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter FALSTAFF and COLEVILE, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you, and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Coleville of the dale.

Fal. Well then, Coleville is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the dale: Coleville shall still be your name, a traitor your degree, and the dungeon your place, a place deep enough: so shall you be still Coleville of the dale. 10

Cole. Are not you Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, whoe'er I am. Do ye yield, sir, or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think you are Sir John Falstaff, and in that thought yield me. 19

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of any indifference, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: my womb, my womb, my womb undoes me. Here comes our general.

Enter JOHN OF LANCASTER, WESTMORELAND, BLUNT, and Others.

Lanc. The heat is past, follow no further now.

Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland. Exit WESTMORELAND.

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while? 29

When every thing is ended, then you come:

These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life,
One time or other break some gallows' back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet but rebuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility; I have foundered nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the dale, a most furious knight and valorous enemy. But what of that? he saw me, and yielded; that I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome, 'I came, saw, and overcame.'

Lanc. It was more of his courtesy than your deserving. 48

Fal. I know not: here he is, and here I yield him; and I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or, by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top on 't, Coleville kissing my foot. To the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all show like gilt two-pences to me, and I in the clear sky of fame o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the cinders of the element, which show like pins' heads to her, believe not the word of the noble. Therefore let me have right, and let desert mount. 61

Lanc. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine then.

Lanc. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

Lanc. Is thy name Coleville?

Cole. It is, my lord. 68

Lanc. A famous rebel art thou, Coleville.

Fal. And a famous true subject took him.

Cole. I am, my lord, but as my betters are That led me hither: had they been rul'd by me

You should have won them dearer than you have.

Fal. I know not how they sold themselves: but thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. 76

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

Lanc. Now, have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made and execution stay'd.

Lanc. Send Coleville with his confederates To York, to present execution. 80

Blunt, lead him hence, and see you guard him sure. Exeunt BLUNT and Others

with COLEVILLE, guarded.

And now dispatch we toward the court, my lords.

I hear the king my father is sore sick:
Our news shall go before us to his majesty,

Which, cousin, you shall bear to comfort him;

And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go Through Gloucestershire; and when you come to court

Stand my good lord, pray, in your good report.

Lanc. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition, 90

Shall better speak of you than you deserve.

Exeunt all but FALSTAFF.

Fal. I would you had but the wit: 't were better than your dukedom. Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me; nor a man cannot make him laugh; but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never none of these demure boys come to any proof: for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness; and then, when they marry, they get wenches. They are generally fools and cowards, which some of us should be too but for inflammation. A good sherris-sack hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish and dull and crudy vapours which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery and delectable shapes; which, delivered o'er to the voice, the tongue, which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is, the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherris warms it and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. It illumineth the face, which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm; and then the vital commoners and inland petty spirits muster me all to their captain, the heart, who, great and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a-work; and learning, a mere board of gold kept by a devil till sack commences it and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them should be, to forswear thin potations and to addict themselves to sack. 131

Enter BARDOLPH.

How now, Bardolph!

Bard. The army is discharged all and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I'll through Gloucestershire; and there will I visit Master

Robert Shallow, esquire: I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away. Exeunt. 142

SCENE IV.—Westminster. The Jerusalem Chamber.

Enter King HENRY, CLARENCE, GLOUCESTER, WARWICK, and Others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if God doth give successful end

To this debate that bleedeth at our doors
We will our youth lead on to higher fields
And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Our navy is address'd, our power collected,
Our substitutes in absence well invested,
And every thing lies level to our wish:
Only, we want a little personal strength;
And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot,
Come underneath the yoke of government. 10

War. Both which we doubt not but your majesty shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Gloucester,

Where is the prince your brother?

Glou. I think he's gone to hunt, my lord, at Windsor.

K. Hen. And how accompanied?

Glou. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

Glou. No, my good lord; he is in presence here.

Clar. What would my lord and father?

K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? 20

He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas.

Thou hast a better place in his affection
Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy,
And noble offices thou may'st effect
Of mediation, after I am dead,

Between his greatness and thy other brethren:

Therefore omit him not; blunt not his love,
Nor lose the good advantage of his grace
By seeming cold or careless of his will;

For he is gracious, if he be observ'd: 30
He hath a tear for pity and a hand
Open as day for melting charity;

Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint,

As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed in the spring of day.
His temper therefore must be well observ'd:
Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth;

But, being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,

Confound themselves with working. Learn this, Thomas, 41

And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,

A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood,
Mingled with venom of suggestion,
As, force perforce, the age will pour it in,
Shall never leak, though it do work as strong
As aconitum or rash gunpowder.

Clar. I shall observe him with all care and love.

K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him, Thomas? 50

Clar. He is not there to-day; he dines in London.

K. Hen. And how accompanied? canst thou tell that?

Clar. With Poinis and other his continual followers.

K. Hen. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;

And he, the noble image of my youth,
Is overspread with them: therefore my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death:
The blood weeps from my heart when I do shape

In forms imaginary the unguided days
And rotten times that you shall look upon 60
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.

For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counselors,

When means and lavish manners meet together,

O! with what wings shall his affections fly
Towards fronting peril and oppos'd decay.

War. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite:

The prince but studies his companions
Like a strange tongue, wherein, to gain the language,

'T is needful that the most immodest word
Be look'd upon and learn'd; which once attain'd, 71

Your highness knows, comes to no further use

But to be known and hated. So, like gross terms,

The prince will in the perfectness of time
Cast off his followers; and their memory
Shall as a pattern or a measure live,

By which his grace must mete the lives of others,

Turning past evils to advantages.

K. Hen. 'T is seldom when the bee doth leave her comb

In the dead carrion.

Enter WESTMORELAND.

Who's here? Westmoreland!

West. Health to my sovereign, and new happiness 81

Added to that that I am to deliver!
Prince John your son doth kiss your grace's hand;

Mowbray, the Bishop Scroop, Hastings and all

Are brought to the correction of your law.
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd,
But peace puts forth her olive everywhere.
The manner how this action hath been borne

Here at more leisure may your highness read,

With every course in his particular. 90

K. Hen. O Westmoreland! thou art a summer bird,

Which ever in the haunch of winter sings
The lifting up of day.

Enter HARCOURT.

Look! here's more news.
Har. From enemies heaven keep your majesty;

And, when they stand against you, may they fall

As those that I am come to tell you of!

The Earl Northumberland and the Lord Bardolph,

With a great power of English and of Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown.
The manner and true order of the fight 100
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?

Will fortune never come with both hands full

But write her fair words still in foulest letters?

She either gives a stomach and no food;
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast
And takes away the stomach; such are the rich,

That have abundance and enjoy it not.

I should rejoice now at this happy news,

And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy.

O me! come near me, now I am much ill. 111

Glou. Comfort, your majesty!

Clar. O my royal father!
West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself: look up!

War. Be patient, princes: you do know these fits

Are with his highness very ordinary:

Stand from him, give him air; he'll straight be well.

Clar. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs:

The incessant care and labour of his mind
Hath wrought the mure that should confine it in

So thin that life looks through and will break out. 120

Glou. The people fear me; for they do observe

Unfather'd heirs and loathly births of nature:
The seasons change their manners, as the year

Had found some months asleep and leap'd them over.

Clar. The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between;

And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before

That our great-grandsire, Edward, sick'd and died.

War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.

Glou. This apoplexy will certain be his end.

K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence 131

Into some other chamber: softly, pray.
Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Chamber.

King HENRY lying on a bed: CLARENCE, GLOUCESTER, WARWICK, and Others, in attendance.

K. Hen. Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;

Unless some dull and favourable hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.

K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.

Clar. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War. Less noise, less noise!

Enter the PRINCE.

Prince. Who saw the Duke of Clarence?

Clar. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

Prince. How now! rain within doors, and none abroad!

How doth the king? 10

Glou. Exceeding ill.

Prince. Heard he the good news yet? Tell it him.

Glou. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.

Prince. If he be sick with joy, he'll recover without physic.

War. Not so much noise, my lords.
Sweet prince, speak low;

The king your father is dispos'd to sleep.

Clar. Let us withdraw into the other room.

War. Will't please your grace to go along with us? 19

Prince. No; I will sit and watch here by the king. Exeunt all but the PRINCE.

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,

Being so troublesome a bedfellow?

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!

That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night! sleep with it now!

Yet not so sound and half so deeply sweet
As he whose brow with homely biggin bound

SnORES out the watch of night. O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit

Like a rich armour worn in heat of day, 30
That scalds with safety. By his gates of breath

There lies a downy feather which stirs not:
Did he suspire, that light and weightless down

Perforce must move. My gracious lord!

my father!

This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep
That from this golden rigol hath divorc'd

So many English kings. Thy due from me
Is tears and heavy sorrows of the blood,

Which nature, love, and filial tenderness

Shall, O dear father! pay thee plentifully: 40

My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,

Derives itself to me. Lo! here it sits,
Putting it on his head.

Which heaven shall guard; and put the world's whole strength

Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This lineal honour from me. This from thee
Will I to mine leave, as 't is left to me.

Exit.
K. Hen. Warwick! Gloucester! Clarence!

Re-enter WARWICK, GLOUCESTER, CLARENCE, and the rest.

Clar. Doth the king call?

War. What would your majesty? How fares your grace? 50

K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?

Clar. We left the prince my brother here, my liege,

Who undertook to sit and watch by you.

K. Hen. The Prince of Wales! Where is he? let me see him:

He is not here.

War. This door is open; he is gone this way.

Clou. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.

K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?

War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.

K. Hen. The prince hath ta'en it hence: go, seek him out. 60

Is he so hasty that he doth suppose

My sleep my death?

Find him, my Lord of Warwick; chide him hither. Exit WARWICK.

This part of his conjoins with my disease,
And helps to end me. See, sons, what things you are!

How quickly nature falls into revolt

When gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish over-careful fathers

Have broke their sleep with thoughts,
Their brains with care, their bones with industry; 70

For this they have engrossed and pil'd up
The canker'd heaps of strange-achieved gold;

For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises:
When, like the bee, culling from every flower

The virtuous sweets,

Our thighs packed with wax, our mouths
with honey,

We bring it to the hive, and like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste 79

Yield his engrossments to the ending father.

Re-enter WARWICK.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long

Till his friend sickness hath determin'd me?

War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room.

Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks,
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow

That tyranny, which never quaff'd but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife

With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.

K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter the PRINCE.

Lo! where he comes. Come hither to me, Harry. 90

Depart the chamber, leave us here alone. Exeunt WARWICK and the rest.

Prince. I never thought to hear you speak again.

K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought:

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.

Dost thou so hunger for mine empty chair
That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honours

Before thy hour is ripe? O foolish youth!
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.

Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind 100

That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.
Thou hast stol'n that which after some few hours

Were thine without offence; and at my death

Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:

Thy life did manifest thou lov'd'st me not

And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,

Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life.

What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour? 110

Then get thee gone and dig my grave thyself,

And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.

Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse

Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head:

Only compound me with forgotten dust;

Give that which gave thee life unto the worms.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form.

Harry the Fifth is crown'd! Up, vanity! 120

Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors,
hence!

And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!

Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your scum:

Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance,

Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit

The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
 Be happy, he will trouble you no more:
 England shall double gild his treble guilt,
 England shall give him office, honour,
 might; 130
 For the fifth Harry from curb'd license plucks

The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
 Shall flesh his tooth on every innocent.
 O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
 When that my care could not withhold thy riots,

What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
 O! thou wilt be a wilderness again,
 Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants.

Prince. O! pardon me, my liege; but for my tears,

The moist impediments unto my speech, 140
 I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke Ere you with grief had spoke and I had heard

The course of it so far. There is your
 crown;

And he that wears the crown immortally
 Long guard it yours! If I affect it more Than as your honour and as your renown,
 Let me no more from this obedience rise,
 Which my most true and inward deuteous
 spirit

Teacheth, this prostrate and exterior bend-
 ing.

God witness with me, when I here came in,
 And found no course of breath within your
 majesty. 151

How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
 O! let me in my present wildness die
 And never live to show the incredulous
 world

The noble change that I have purposed.
 Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
 And dead almost, my liege, to think you
 were,

I spake unto this crown as having sense,
 And thus upbraided it: 'The care on thee depending

Hath fed upon the body of my father: 160
 Therefore, thou best of gold art worst of
 gold:

Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,
 Preserving life in medicine potable:

But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,

Hast eat thy bearer up.' Thus, my most royal liege,

Accusing it, I put it on my head,
 To try with it, as with an enemy
 That had before my face murder'd my
 father,

The quarrel of a true inheritor.
 But if it did infect my blood with joy, 170

Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;
 If any rebel or vain spirit of mine

Did with the least affection of a welcome
 Give entertainment to the might of it,

Let God for ever keep it from my head,
 And make me as the poorest vassal is

That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!
K. Hen. O my son!

God put it in thy mind to take it hence,

That thou might'st win the more thy father's
 love, 180

Pleading so wisely in excuse of it.
 Come hither, Harry: sit thou by my bed;
 And hear, I think, the very latest counsel That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my
 son,

By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways
 I met this crown; and I myself know well
 How troublesome it sat upon my head:

To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
 Better opinion, better confirmation;

For all the soil of the achievement goes 190
 With me into the earth. It seem'd in me

But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous
 hand,

And I had many living to upbraid
 My gain of it by their assistances;

Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed,

Wounding supposed peace. All these bold fears

Thou seest with peril I have answered;
 For all my reign hath been but as a scene

Acting that argument; and now my death Changes the mode: for what in me was

purchas'd, 200
 Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort,

So thou the garland wear'st successively.
 Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,

 Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are

green;
 And all my friends, which thou must make

thy friends,
 Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en

out;
 By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,

And by whose power I well might lodge a
 fear

To be again displac'd: which to avoid,
 I cut them off; and had a purpose now 210

To lead out many to the Holy Land,
 Lest rest and lying still might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,

 Be it thy course to busy giddy minds

With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out,

May waste the memory of the former days.
 More would I, but my lungs are wasted so

That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
 How I came by the crown, O God forgive!

And grant it may with thee in true peace
 live. 220

Prince. My gracious liege.
 You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;

Then plain and right must my possession be:
 Which I with more than with a common pain

 'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter JOHN OF LANCASTER.

K. Hen. Look, look! here comes my
 John of Lancaster.

Lanc. Health, peace, and happiness to my royal father!

K. Hen. Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John;
But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare wither'd trunk: upon thy sight
My worldly business makes a period. 230
Where is my Lord of Warwick?
Prince. My Lord of Warwick!

Re-enter WARWICK with Others.

K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong
Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?
War. 'T is call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.
K. Hen. Laud be to God! even there my life must end.
It hath been prophesied to me many years
I should not die but in Jerusalem,
Which vainly I suppos'd the Holy Land.
But bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie:
In that Jerusalem shall Harry die. Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—Gloucestershire. A Hall in SHALLOW'S House.

Enter SHALLOW, FALSTAFF, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pie, sir, you shall not away to-night. What! Davy, I say.

Fal. You must excuse me, Master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused: excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused. Why, Davy!

Enter DAVY.

Davy. Here, sir. 9

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, Davy, let me see, Davy; let me see: yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus; those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir, shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook: are there no young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir. Here is now the smith's note for shoeing and plough-irons. 20

Shal. Let it be cast and paid. Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had: and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. A' shall answer it. Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kick-shaws, tell William cook. 30

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yea, Davy. I will use him well. A friend i' the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy, for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are backbitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy: about thy business, Davy. 40

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wincot against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor: that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge. 46

Davy. I grant your worship that he is a knave, sir; but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced. 57

Shal. Go to; I say he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. Exit DAVY.

Where are you, Sir John? Come, come, come; off with your boots. Give me your hand, Master Bardolph. 62

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind Master Bardolph: To the Page. And welcome, my tall fellow. Come, Sir John.

Fal. I'll follow you, good Master Robert Shallow. Exit SHALLOW.

Bardolph, look to our horses. Exeunt BARDOLPH and Page.

If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermits' staves as Master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: they, by observing of him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like servingman. Their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. If I had a suit to Master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with Master Shallow that no man could better command his servants. It is certain that either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter the wearing out of six fashions, which is four terms, or two actions, and a' shall laugh without intervallums. O! it is much that a lie with a slight oath and a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders. O! you shall see him laugh till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up. 95

Shal. Within. Sir John!

Fal. I come, Master Shallow: I come, Master Shallow. Exit.

SCENE II.—Westminster. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter WARWICK and the Lord Chief Justice.

War. How now, my lord chief justice! whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king?

War. Exceeding well: his cares are now all ended.

Ch. Just. I hope not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature; And to our purposes he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would his majesty had call'd me with him:

The service that I truly did his life Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed I think the young king loves you not.

Ch. Just. I know he doth not, and do arm myself 10

To overcome the condition of the time; Which cannot look more hideously upon me

Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter LANCASTER, CLARENCE, GLOUCESTER, WESTMORELAND, and Others.

War. Here comes the heavy issue of dead Harry:

O! that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen. How many nobles then should hold their places,

That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort!

Ch. Just. O God! I fear all will be overturn'd.

Lanc. Good morrow, cousin Warwick, good morrow. 20

Glou., Clar. Good morrow, cousin.

Lanc. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument

Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

Lanc. Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy!

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier!

Glou. O! good my lord, you have lost a friend indeed;

And I dare swear you borrow not that face

Of seeming sorrow; it is sure your own.

Lanc. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, 30

You stand in coldest expectation.

I am the sorrier; would 't were otherwise.

Clar. Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair,

Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honour,

Led by the impartial conduct of my soul; And never shall you see that I will beg

A ragged and forstall'd remission. If truth and upright innocence fail me,

I'll to the king my master that is dead, And tell him who hath sent me after him.

War. Here comes the prince.

Enter King HENRY the Fifth, attended.

Ch. Just. Good morrow, and God save your majesty!

K. Hen. V. This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,

Sits not so easy on me as you think. Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear:

This is the English, not the Turkish court; Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds,

But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers,

For, by my faith, it very well becomes you: Sorrow so royally in you appears 51

That I will deeply put the fashion on And wear it in my heart. Why then, be sad;

But entertain no more of it, good brothers, Than a joint burden laid upon us all.

For me, by heaven, I bid you be assur'd, I'll be your father and your brother too;

Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares:

Yet weep that Harry's dead, and so will I; But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears 60

By number into hours of happiness.

Lanc., etc. We hope no other from your majesty.

K. Hen. V. You all look strangely on me: To the Chief Justice. And you must;

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.

Ch. Just. I am assur'd, if I be measur'd rightly,

Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

K. Hen. V. No? How might a prince of my great hopes forget

So great indignities you laid upon me? What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison 70

The immediate heir of England! Was this easy?

May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your father;

The image of his power lay then in me: And, in the administration of his law,

Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth, Your highness pleased to forget my place,

The majesty and power of law and justice, The image of the king whom I presented,

And struck me in my very seat of judgment; Whereon, as an offender to your father, 81

I gave bold way to my authority, And did commit you. If the deed were ill,

Be you contented, wearing now the garland, To have a son set your decrees at nought,

To pluck down justice from your awful bench,

To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword

That guards the peace and safety of your person:

Nay, more, to spurn at your most royal image And mock your workings in a second body.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours; 91

Be now the father and propose a son, Hear your own dignity so much profan'd,

See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,

Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your power soft silencing your son:
After this cold consideration, sentence me;
And, as you are a king, speak in your state

What I have done that misbecame my place,
My person, or my liege's sovereignty. 101

K. Hen. V. You are right, justice; and you weigh this well;

Therefore still bear the balance and the sword:

And I do wish your honours may increase
Till you do live to see a son of mine
Offend you and obey you, as I did.

So shall I live to speak my father's words:
'Happy am I, that have a man so bold
That dares do justice on my proper son:
And not less happy, having such a son, 110
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hands of justice.' You did commit me:

For which, I do commit into your hand
The unstained sword that you have used to bear;

With this remembrance, that you use the same

With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit

As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand:

You shall be as a father to my youth;
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear,

And I will stoop and humble my intents 120
To your well-practis'd wise directions.

And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you;

My father is gone wild into his grave,
For in his tomb lie my affections;

And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectation of the world,

To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down

After my seeming. The tide of blood in me
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now: 130

Now doth it turn and ebb back to the sea,
Where it shall mingle with the state of floods

And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
Now call we our high court of parliament;

And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel,

That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best govern'd nation;

That war, or peace, or both at once, may be

As things acquainted and familiar to us;
In which you, father, shall have foremost hand. 140

Our coronation done, we will accite,
As I before remember'd, all our state:

And, God consigning to my good intents,
No prince nor peer shall have just cause to say,

God shorten Harry's happy life one day.

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Gloucestershire. The Garden of SHALLOW'S House.

Enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, SILENCE, DAVY, BARDOLPH, and the Page.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of caraways, and so forth; come, cousin Silence; and then to bed.

Fal. Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, Sir John: marry, good air. Spread, Davy; spread, Davy: well said, Davy. 10

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses: he is your servingman and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John: by the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper: a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down. Come, cousin.

Sil. Ah! sirrah, quoth a', we shall

Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, And praise heaven for the merry year;

When flesh is cheap and females dear, 20 And lusty lads roam here and there,

So merrily, And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart! Good Master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give Master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Sweet sir, sit; I'll be with you anon: most sweet sir, sit. Master page, good Master page, sit. Proface! What you want in meat we'll have in drink: but you must bear; the heart's all. Exit. 32

Shal. Be merry, Master Bardolph; and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all; For women are shrews, both short and tall:

'T is merry in hall when beards wag all,

And welcome merry Shrove-tide.

Be merry, be merry. 39

Fal. I did not think Master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who, I? I have been merry twice and once ere now.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. There's a dish of leather-coats for you. Setting them before BARDOLPH.

Shal. Davy!

Davy. Your worship! I'll be with you straight. A cup of wine, sir?

Sil. A cup of wine that's brisk and fine, And drink unto the leman mine; 49 And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well said, Master Silence.

Sil. An we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet o' the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, Master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come;
I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wantest any thing and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart. To the Page. Welcome, my little tiny thief; and welcome indeed, too. I'll drink to Master Bardolph and to all the cavaleros about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—
Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together: ha! will you not, Master Bardolph?

Bard. Yea, sir, in a pottle-pot.

Shal. By God's liggers, I thank thee. The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: a' will not out: he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry.

Knocking within. Look who's at door there. Ho! who knocks?

Fal. To SILENCE, who drinks a bumper. Why, now you have done me right.

Sil. Do me right,
And dub me knight:
Samingo.

Is 't not so? 80
Fal. 'T is so.
Sil. Is 't so? Why then, say an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. An't please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court! let him come in.

Enter PISTOL.

How now, Pistol!

Pist. Sir John, God save you! sir. 88

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good. Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in this realm.

Sil. By 'r lady, I think a' be, but Goodman Puff of Barson.

Pist. Puff!
Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base!

Sir John, I am thy Pistol and thy friend, And helter-skelter have I rode to thee, And tidings do I bring and lucky joys And golden times and happy news of price.

Fal. I prithee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A foutra for the world and worldlings base! 101

I speak of Africa and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news?

Let King Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John.

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicons?

And shall good news be baffled?

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap. 110
Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then, lament therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir: if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it there's but two ways, either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, Bezonian? speak, or die.

Shal. Under King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth? or Fifth?

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A foutra for thine office!
Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king; 122
Harry the Fifth's the man. I speak the truth:

When Pistol lies, do this; and fig me, like The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. What! is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door: the things I speak are just.

Fal. Away, Bardolph! saddle my horse. Master Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt in the land, 't is thine. Pistol, I will double-charge thee with dignities. 131

Bard. O joyful day!
I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.

Pist. What! I do bring good news.

Fal. Carry Master Silence to bed. Master Shallow, my Lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots: we'll ride all night. O sweet Pistol!

Away, Bardolph. Exit BARDOLPH.
Come, Pistol, utter more to me; and withal devise something to do thyself good. Boot, boot, Master Shallow: I know the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Blessed are they which have been my friends, and woe unto my lord chief justice! 145

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also!

'Where is the life that late I led?' say they: Why, here it is: welcome these pleasant days! Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Street.

Enter Beadles, dragging in Mistress QUICKLY and DOLL TEARSHEET

Quick. No, thou arrant knave: I would to God that I might die that I might have thee hanged; thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

First Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me, and she shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her: there hath been a man or two lately killed about her.

Doll. Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come on; I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-visaged rascal. An the child I now go with do miscarry, thou hadst better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper-faced villain. 12

Quick. O the Lord! that Sir John were come; he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!

First Bead. If it do, you shall have a dozen of cushions again; you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both go with me; for the man is dead that you and Pistol beat among you. 19

Doll. I'll tell thee what, thou thin man in a censer, I will have you as soundly swung for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished correctioner! if you be not swung, I'll forswear half-kirtles.

First Bead. Come, come, you she knight-errant, come.

Quick. O God! that right should thus overcome might. Well, of sufferance comes ease.

Doll. Come, you rogue, come: bring me to a justice. 30

Quick. Ay; come, you starved blood-hound.

Doll. Goodman death! goodman bones!

Quick. Thou atomy, thou!

Doll. Come, you thin thing; come, you rascal!

First Bead. Very well. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A public Place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms strewing rushes.

First Groom. More rushes, more rushes! Second Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice.

First Groom. 'T will be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation. Dispatch, dispatch. Exeunt.

Enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and the Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, Master Robert Shallow; I will make the king do you grace. I will leer upon him as 'a comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God bless thy lungs, good knight. 9

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me. O! if I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But 't is no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. It shows my earnestness of affection.

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion.

Shal. It doth, it doth, it doth. 20

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me.

Shal. It is most certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else; putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

Pist. 'T is semper idem, for obsque hoc nihil est. 'T is all in every part.

Shal. 'T is so, indeed. 31

Pist. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver,

And make thee rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, Is in base durance and contagious prison; Haul'd thither

By most mechanical and dirty hand; Rouse up revenge from ebon den with fell Alecto's snake,

For Doll is in: Pistol speaks nought but truth.

Fal. I will deliver her. 41

Shouts within, and trumpets sound.

Pist. There roar'd the sea, and trumpet-clangor sounds.

Enter King HENRY the Fifth and his Train, the Lord Chief Justice among them.

Fal. God save thy grace, King Hal! my royal Hal!

Pist. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal imp of fame!

Fal. God save thee, my sweet boy!

K. Hen. V. My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what 't is you speak?

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart! 50

K. Hen. V. I know thee not, old man: fall to thy prayers;

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester! I have long dream'd of such a kind of man, So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so profane; But, being awak'd, I do despise my dream. Make less thy body hence, and more thy grace;

Leave gormandizing; know the grave doth gape

For thee thrice wider than for other men.

Reply not to me with a fool-born jest;

Presume not that I am the thing I was; 60

For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,

That I have turn'd away my former self;

So will I those that kept me company.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been, Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast, The tutor and the feeder of my riots:

Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,

As I have done the rest of my misleaders,

Not to come near our person by ten mile.

For competence of life I will allow you, 70

That lack of means enforce you not to evil:

And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,

We will, according to your strength and qualities,

Give you advancement. Be it your charge, my lord,

To see perform'd the tenour of our word.

Set on. Exeunt King HENRY V. and his Train.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Ay, marry, Sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me. 80

Fal. That can hardly be, Master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this: I shall be sent for in private to him. Look you, he must seem thus to the world. Fear not your advancements; I will be the man yet that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot well perceive how, unless you should give me your doublet and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a colour. 91

Shal. A colour that I fear you will die in, Sir John.

Fal. Fear no colours: go with me to dinner. Come, Lieutenant Pistol; come Bardolph: I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter JOHN OF LANCASTER, the Lord Chief Justice; Officers with them.

Ch. Just. Go carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;

Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord!

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon. 100

Take them away.

Pist. Si fortune me tormente, sperato, me contento.

Lanc. I like this fair proceeding of the king's.

He hath intent his wonted followers

Shall all be very well provided for;

But all are banish'd till their conversations
Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

Lanc. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord.

Ch. Just. He hath. 110

Lanc. I will lay odds that, ere this year expire,

We bear our civil swords and native fire

As far as France. I heard a bird so sing.

Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.

Come, will you hence?

Exeunt.

EPILOGUE

SPOKEN BY A DANCER.

First my fear; then my courtesy; last my speech. My fear is your displeasure, my courtesy my duty, and my speech to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me; for what I have to say is of mine own making; and what indeed I should say will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture. Be it known to you, as it is very well, I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it and to promise you a better. I did mean indeed to pay you with this; which, if like an ill venture it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here I promised you I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me some and I will pay you some; and as most debtors do, promise you infinitely. 18

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment, to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me: if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly. 26

One word more I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France: where, for anything I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already a' be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night: and so kneel down before you; but, indeed, to pray for the queen. 38

THE LIFE OF KING HENRY THE FIFTH

SHAKESPEARE arrives at last at the treatment of the great epic theme toward which all his work in this second group of history plays has been tending—the glorious deeds of Henry V, his ideal English king. We have already discussed at some length the difficulties that confronted Shakespeare in making a true transition from the character of the Prince as it was developed in the two parts of Henry IV, to that of the King; and we are not surprised in the present play to find that change so marked that it constitutes the subject for conversation during the greater part of the opening scene. The means which Ely and Canterbury admit, however, to account for this change were apparently no more satisfactory to Shakespeare than they are to us, for he seems at last to have unloosed the Gordian knot by creating in Henry an essentially new character. There is still an outward resemblance between him and the princely companion of Falstaff and his crew as is seen, for instance, in Henry's night visit to his soldiers, his personal and familiar talks with them, the incident of the glove, his broad humanity, his freedom from affectation and his contempt for ceremony. But there is an intellectual chasm between the two characters that has not been, and cannot be, bridged. Moral and religious changes do not trouble us; they are among the most common experiences of life and can be readily accounted for; but the change from the brilliant wit and the scintillating intellect of Prince Hal to the sober humor and the solid intellect of Henry V can be explained on no other ground than by admitting that the latter is a new creation.

That the purposes of the poet transcend here the limits of the drama is evidenced by the introduction of the Chorus, whose office is clearly defined at the outset:

“Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth;
For 't is your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there, jumping o'er times,
Turning the accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass: for the which supply,
Admit me Chorus to this history.”

This appeal to the hearer to stretch the imagination, “Minding true things by what their mockeries be” is repeated in some form in every Chorus: “Force a play”; “Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy”; “Work, work your thoughts”; “Entertain conjecture of a time.” It is this appeal as well as the narrative of the Chorus that helps to bind together these scenes, widely separated both in time and space, and that gives to the whole an epic grandeur in praise of the warlike deeds of him who in life assumed “the port of Mars.”

It is significant, however, that in this war with France, culminating in the battle of Agincourt, King Henry does not lightly follow the dying advice of his father to “busy giddy minds With foreign quarrels.” He appeals to Canterbury whether he in “right and conscience” has a just claim to France, and bids him “in the name of God” to take heed “how you awake our sleeping sword of war.” He alone, of all in the presence-chamber, seems to sense the awful responsibility of a decision which must inevitably involve the loss of human life. We already know what Canterbury's answer will be, and we know why he is so insistent that Henry shall unwind his bloody flag. It is because war with France will divert attention from the bill pending in parliament which, if passed, will drink deep into the property of the church. It was not, of course, necessary that Shakespeare should bring out that fact, but by giving it a prominent place in the narrative he has sounded a warning for all time to scrutinize minutely the motives which lead men, even those in high and holy offices, to raise the cry for war. There is no sign, however, that Henry suspects their motive. He is fully convinced of the justice of his claim, and being resolved, admits the ambassadors from the Dauphin. He bids them speak “with frank and uncurbed plainness” assuring them that he is “no tyrant, but a Christian king” whose passion is subject to his grace. Their message is offensive as is the gift of the tennis-balls. The incident seems to be used here for the double purpose of showing Henry's frailty with the rest of common humanity, and also how slight a thing, when war is in question, will stir the blood of even well-governed men and distort their perspective. Henry's anger increases as he proceeds with his reply, until at last he tells them that the Dauphin's mock

"Hath turned his balls to gun-stones; and his soul
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them; for many a thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down;
And some are yet ungotten and unborn
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn."

Was ever such an unmasking of the crime and folly of a "just war" as is revealed in this first Act of a play written ostensibly to glorify war? An Archbishop, with almost divine eloquence, but with covert and selfish purpose, urging a conscientious, humane, and Christian king to war; and that same "mirror of all Christian kings" once resolved on war, setting over against the offence involved in the gift of a few tennis-balls the lives of thousands of husbands and sons as well as those of an unborn generation. Objection may be made that Shakespeare did not intend us to see this; but it is there, and we may rest assured that he saw it—and that he thought none the less of King Henry for all that. For throughout the play he has pictured Henry as one who fights only with a clear conscience.

It is this fine conscience of his warrior king that affords Shakespeare his best opportunity for inquiring somewhat closely into the ethics of war. That he fully understood its horrors is seen in Henry's appeal to the governor of Harfleur and his warning of what will follow resistance: The hot and forcing violation of pure maidens; old men's heads dashed to the wall; naked infants spitted upon pikes; mothers running mad and howling like the wives of Jewry at Herod's slaughter. Against all this Henry confesses himself helpless when once the dogs of war are unloosed.

On the eve of Agincourt Henry, incognito, moves among his soldiers. In his talk with Williams and Bates the discussion turns on war. "I am afeard," says Williams, "there are few that die well that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument?" In the long homily that Henry reads him in reply it is remarkable that he makes no attempt to answer that question; he confines his answer to relieving the king of all responsibility for the souls of his soldiers. Williams' question is that of a Christian: How can one obey the great commandment to be charitably (lovingly) disposed toward all men, when blood is the subject of one's thoughts and actions? That, more than ever, is the Christian's question to-day about war. Shakespeare asked it through the mouth of a common soldier, and in Henry's failure to answer it implied that no answer is possible which admits the existence of war.

One cannot fail to be impressed with the close connection of Henry's humanity with his religion. Form and ceremony are not enough. Pardon comes, not from building chantries or singing masses, but from penitence. That which binds humanity together is not governments or force, but trust. There is no more profound moral lesson to be found in Shakespeare than that conveyed in Henry's speech condemning Lord Scroop. Scroop's crime of treason is one committed, not merely against the person of his king but against humanity. His fall is "another fall of man." Having the appearance before all men of being dutiful, learned, noble, religious, self-controlled, and constant, he has by his treason betrayed mankind. If we would purge public office of corruption, we could do no better than to fasten this stigma upon the betrayer of public trust:

"How hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance!"

ACT I

Enter CHORUS.

O! for a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention;
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene.
Then should the war-like Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine,
sword, and fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentlemen all,
The flat unraised spirits that have dar'd
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth 10
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O the very casques
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
Attest in little place a million;
And let us, ciphers to this great accompt,
On your imaginary forces work.
Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies, 20
Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder:
Piece out our imperfections with your
thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance;

Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth;
For 't is your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there, jumping o'er times,
Turning the accomplishment of many years

Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.
Exit.

SCENE I.—London. An Antechamber in the KING'S Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of CANTERBURY and the Bishop of ELY.

Cant. My Lord, I'll tell you; that self bill is urg'd,
Which in the eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scrambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of further question.
Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?

Can. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,

We lose the better half of our possession;
For all the temporal lands which men devout
By testament have given to the church . . . 10
Would they strip from us; being valued thus:
As much as would maintain, to the king's
honour,

Full fifteen earls and fifteen hundred knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;

And, to relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred almshouses right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year. Thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Can. 'T would drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention? . . . 21

Can. The king is full of grace and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Can. The courses of his youth promis'd
it not.

The breath no sooner left his father's body
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too; yea, at that very mo-
ment,

Consideration like an angel came,
And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him,
Leaving his body as a paradise, . . . 30
To envelop and contain celestial spirits.

Never was such a sudden scholar made;
Never came reformation in a flood,
With such a heady currance, scouring faults;
Nor never Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat and all at once
As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Can. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate: . . . 40

Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
You would say it hath been all in all his study:

List his discourse of war, and you shall
hear

A fearful battle render'd you in music:
Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose, Familiar as his garter; that, when he
speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears
To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences; 50
So that the art and practic part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoric:
Which is a wonder how his grace should glean it,

Since his addiction was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shal-
low;

His hours filled up with riots, banquets,
sports;

And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle, . . . 60

And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:

And so the prince obscur'd his contemplation

Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer grass, fastest by
night,

Unseen, yet crescive in his faculty.

Can. It must be so; for miracles are ceas'd;

And therefore we must needs admit the
means

How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill . . . 70

Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

Can. He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part

Than cherishing the exhibitors against us;
For I have made an offer to his majesty,

Upon our spiritual convocation,
And in regard of causes now in hand,

Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As touching France, to give a greater sum

Than ever at one time the clergy yet . . . 80
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my
lord?

Can. With good acceptance of his majesty;

Save that there was not time enough to
hear,

As I perceiv'd his grace would fain have
done,

The severals and unhidden passages
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms,

And generally to the crown and seat of
France,

Deriv'd from Edward, his great-grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off? . . . 90

Can. The French ambassador upon that instant

Crav'd audience; and the hour I think is
come

To give him hearing: is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.

Can. Then go we in to know his embassy;

Which I could with a ready guess declare
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you, and I long to hear it. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. The Presence Chamber.

Enter King HENRY, GLOUCESTER, BED-FORD, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORE-LAND, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious lord of Canterbury?

Exe. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle.

West. Shall we call in the ambassador,
my liege?

K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin: we would be resolv'd,
Before we hear him, of some things of weight
That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of CANTERBURY and the Bishop of ELY.

Cant. God and his angels guard your sacred throne,
And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.
My learned lord, we pray you to proceed,
And justly and religiously unfold
Why the law Salique that they have in France
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.

And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,

Or nicely charge your understanding soul
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth;
For God doth know how many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,

How you awake our sleeping sword of war:
We charge you, in the name of God, take heed;

For never two such kingdoms did contend
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops

Are every one a woe, a sore complaint
'Gainst him whose wrongs give edge unto the swords

That make such waste in brief mortality.
Under this conjuration speak, my lord,
And we will hear, note, and believe in heart

That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd

As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign,
and you peers,

That owe yourselves, your lives and services

To this imperial throne. There is no bar
To make against your highness' claim to France

But this, which they produce from Pharamond,

In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant,
'No woman shall succeed in Salique land.'
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze

To be the realm of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this law and female bar.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm
That the land Salique is in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe;
Where Charles the Great, having subdued the Saxons,

There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women
For some dishonest manners of their life.

Establish'd then this law; to wit, no female
Should be inheritor in Salique land;
Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,

Is at this day in Germany call'd Meisen.
Then doth it well appear the Salique law
Was not devised for the realm of France;
Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly suppos'd the founder of this law;
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the Great

Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala, in the year
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,

King Pepin, which deposed Childeric,
Did, as heir general, being descended
Of Blithild, which was daughter to King Clothair,

Make claim and title to the crown of France.
Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown
Of Charles the Duke of Lorraine, sole heir male

Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,

To find his title with some shows of truth,
Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,

Convey'd himself as heir to the Lady Lingare,

Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son
Of Charles the Great. Also King Lewis the Tenth,

Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied
That fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother,

Was lineal of the Lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid Duke of Lorraine:

By the which marriage the line of Charles the Great

Was re-united to the crown of France.
So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,

King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim,
King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear

To hold in right and title of the female:
So do the kings of France unto this day;

Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law

To bar your highness' claiming from the female;

And rather choose to hide them in a net
Than amply to imbar their crooked titles
Usurp'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. May I with right and conscience make this claim?

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!

For in the book of Numbers is it writ:
'When the man dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter.' Gracious lord,
Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag;

Look back into your mighty ancestors;
Go, my dread lord, to your great-grandsire's
tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his war-like
spirit,
And your great-uncle's, Edward the Black
Prince,
Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy,
Making defeat on the full power of France;
Whiles his most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility. 110
O noble English! that could entertain
With half their forces the full pride of
France,

And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action.

Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,

And with your puissant arm renew their feats:

You are their heir, you sit upon their throne,
The blood and courage that renowned them
Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant
liege

Is in the very May-morn of his youth, 120
Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

Exe. Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth

Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know your grace hath cause and means and might;

So hath your highness; never king of Eng-
land

Had nobles richer, and more loyal subjects,
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England

And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Conf. O! let their bodies follow, my dear
liege, 130

With blood and sword and fire to win your
right;

In aid whereof we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum

As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade
the French,

But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot, who will make road upon
us

With all advantages.

Conf. They of those marches, gracious
sovereign, 140

Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,

But fear the main intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to
us;

For you shall read that my great-grandfather
Never went with his forces into France

But that the Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom

Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fulness of his force, 150

Galling the gleaned land with hot essays,

Girding with grievous siege castles and
towns;

That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.

Conf. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege;

For hear her but exemplified by herself:
When all her chivalry hath been in France

And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended,

But taken and impounded as a stray 160
The King of Scots; whom she did send to
France,

To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner
kings,

And make her chronicles as rich with praise
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea

With sunken wreck and sumless treasures.
West. But there's a saying very old and
true;

*If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin:*

For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot 170
Comes sneaking and so sucks her princely eggs,

Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and havoc more than she can eat.

Exe. It follows then the cat must stay at
home:

Yet that is but a crush'd necessity,
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries

And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad

The advised head defends itself at home:
For government, though high and low and lower, 180

Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and natural close,

Like music.

Conf. Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,

Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,

Obedience: for so work the honey-bees,
Creatures that by a rule in nature teach

The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king and officers of sorts; 190
Where some, like magistrates, correct at
home,

Others, like merchants, venture trade
abroad,

Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds;

Which pillage they with merry march bring
home

To the tent-royal of their emperor:
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys

The singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey,

The poor mechanic porters crowding in 200
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,

Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,

That many things, having full reference

To one consent, may work contrariously;
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Come to one mark; as many ways meet in
one town;

As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea;
As many lines close in the dial's centre; 200
So many a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege.

Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried and our nation lose
The name of hardness and policy. 220

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin. Exit an Attendant.
Now are we well resolv'd; and by God's help,

And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe
Or break it all to pieces: or there we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery
O'er France and all her almost kingly dukedoms,

Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall with full mouth 230
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless
mouth,

Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure

Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for we hear
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.

First Amb. May't please your majesty to give us leave

Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off 239
The Dauphin's meaning and our embassy?

K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king;

Unto whose grace our passion is as subject
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons:
Therefore with frank and with uncurbed
plainness

Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

First Amb. Thus then, in few.
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the
right

Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third.

In answer of which claim, the prince our
master 249

Says that you savour too much of your youth,
And bids you be advis'd there's nought in
France

That can be with a nimble galliard won;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.

He therefore sends you, meeter for your
spirit,

This tun of treasure; and, in lieu of this,
Desires you let the dukedoms that you claim

Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin
speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?

Exe. Tennis-balls, my liege.

K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant with us; 259

His present and your pains we thank you for:

When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,

We will in France, by God's grace, play a set Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.

Tell him he hath made a match with such a wrangler

That all the courts of France will be disturb'd

With chases. And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never valu'd this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give our-
self 270

To barbarous license; as't is ever common That men are merriest when they are from
home.

But tell the Dauphin I will keep my state,
Be like a king and show my sail of greatness
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty
And plodded like a man for working-days,
But I will rise there with so full a glory
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France, Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on
us. 280

And tell the pleasant prince this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones; and his soul

Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance

That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows

Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands;

Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles
down;

And some are yet ungotten and unborn
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.

But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name

Tell you the Dauphin I am coming on, Exe.
To venge me as I may and to put forth

My rightful hand in a well-hallow'd cause.
So get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin

His jest will savour but of shallow wit
When thousands weep more than did laugh at it.

Convey them with safe conduct. Fare you well. Exeunt Ambassadors.

Exe. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.

Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour 300
That may give furtherance to our expedition;

For we have now no thought in us but
France,

Save those to God, that run before our business.

Therefore let our proportions for these wars Be soon collected, and all things thought upon

That may with reasonable swiftness add More feathers to our wings; for, God before, We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.

Therefore let every man now task his thought,

That this fair action may on foot be brought.
Exeunt. Flourish.

ACT II

Enter CHORUS.

Now all the youth of England are on fire
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies;
Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought

Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now to buy the horse,
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercuries.
For now sits Expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilts unto the point
With crowns imperial, crowns and coronets, 10

Promised to Harry and his followers.
The French advis'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear, and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What might'st thou do, that honour would thee do,

Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out 20

A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted men,

One, Richard Earl of Cambridge, and the second,

Henry Lord Scroop of Masham, and the third,

Sir Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland,

Have, for the guilt of France,—O guilt indeed!—

Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France;
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,

If hell and treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton. 31

Linger your patience on; and well digest
The abuse of distance; force a play.

The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene

Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton:

There is the playhouse now, there you must sit:

And thence to France shall we convey you safe,

And bring you back, charming the narrow seas

To give you gentle pass; for if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play. 40

But, till the king come forth and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.
Exit.

SCENE I.—London. Eastcheap.

Enter NYM and BARDOLPH.

Bard. Well met, Corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are Ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; but when time shall serve there shall be smiles; but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink and hold out mine iron. It is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's an end. 11

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends, and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good Corporal Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly; and certainly she did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her. 21

Nym. I cannot tell; things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter PISTOL and Hostess.

Bard. Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife. Good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host Pistol! 30

Pist. Base tike, call'st thou me host? Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term; Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Host. No, by my troth, not long; for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight.

NYM and PISTOL draw.
O well-a-day, Lady! if he be not drawn now: we shall see wilful adultery and murder committed. 40

Bard. Good lieutenant! good corporal! offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish!

Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-ear'd cur of Iceland!

Host. Good Corporal Nym, show thy valour and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.

Pist. Solus, egregious dog! O viper vile!
The solus in thy most mervailous face; 50
The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea in thy maw,
perdy;

And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retort the solus in thy bowels;
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason; you cannot conjure me. I have an humour to knock you indifferently well. If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humour
of it. 63

Pist. O braggart vile and damned furious
wight!

The grave doth gape, and doting death is near;

Therefore exhale.

Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say: he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier. Draws.

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate. 70

Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give;
Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humour of it.

Pist. 'Couple a gorge!' 70
That is the word. I thee defy again.

O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?

No; to the spital go,

And from the powdering-tub of infamy 79
Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind, Doll Tearsheet she by name, and her
esponse;

I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly
For the only she; and—pauca, there's enough.

Go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host, Pistol, you must come to my master, and you, hostess: he is very sick, and would to bed. Good Bardolph, put thy face between his sheets and do the office of a warming-pan. Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue! 90

Host. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days. The king has killed his heart. Good husband, come home presently. Exeunt Hostess and Boy.

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together. Why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. Let floods o'erswell, and fiends for food howl on!

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. Base is the slave that pays. 100

Nym. That now I will have; that's the humour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound: push home. They draw.

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I
will.

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why then, be enemies with me too. Prithee, put up.

Nym. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at betting? 111

Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present
pay;

And liquor likewise will I give to thee,
And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:

I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me.
Is not this just? for I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.
Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?

Pist. In cash most justly paid. 120

Nym. Well then, that's the humour of 't.

Re-enter Hostess.

Host. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John. Ah! poor heart, he is so shaken of a burning quotidian tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight; that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right;
His heart is fractured and corroborate. 130

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may; he passes some humours and careers.

Pist. Let us condole the knight: for,
lambkins, we will live. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Southampton. A Council
Chamber.

*Enter EXETER, BEDFORD, and WESTMORE-
LAND.*

Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold to trust
these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and
by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves!

As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,
Crowned with faith and constant loyalty.

Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend,

By interception which they dream not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bed-
fellow,

Whom he hath dull'd and cloy'd with gracious favours,

That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell 10
His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Trumpets sound. Enter King HENRY, SCROOP, CAMBRIDGE, GREY, Lords and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.

My Lord of Cambridge, and my kind Lord
of Masham,

And you, my gentle knight, give me your
thoughts:

Think you not that the powers we bear with
us

Will cut their passage through the force of
France,

Doing the execution and the act

For which we have in head assembled
them?

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man
do his best.

K. Hen. I doubt not that; since we are well persuaded 20

We carry not a heart with us from hence
That grows not in a fair consent with ours;
Nor leave not one behind that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was monarch better fear'd and lov'd

Than is your majesty: there's not, I think,
a subject

That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. True: those that were your father's enemies

Have steep'd their galls in honey, and do serve you 30

With hearts create of duty and of zeal.

K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thankfulness,

And shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit

According to the weight and worthiness.

Scroop. So service shall with steeled
sinews toil,

And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.

K. Hen. We judge no less. Uncle of Exeter,

Enlarge the man committed yesterday 40
That rail'd against our person: we consider
It was excess of wine that set him on;

And on his more advice we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security:

Let him be punish'd, sovereign, lest example
Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.

K. Hen. O! let us yet be merciful.

Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.

Grey. Sir,
You show great mercy, if you give him life, 50
After the taste of much correction.

K. Hen. Alas! your too much love and care of me

Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch.
If little faults, proceeding on distemper,

Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch
our eye

When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd,
and digested,

Appear before us? We'll yet enlarge that
man,

Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey, in their dear care

And tender preservation of our person,

Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes: 25

Who are the late commissioners?

Cam. I one, my lord:
Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scroop. So did you me, my liege.

Grey. And I, my royal sovereign.

K. Hen. Then, Richard Earl of Cambridge, there is yours;

There yours, Lord Scroop of Masham; and,
sir knight,

Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:
Read them; and know, I know your worthi-
ness.

My Lord of Westmoreland, and uncle
Exeter,

We will aboard to-night. Why, how now,
gentlemen! 71

What see you in those papers that you lose
So much complexion? Look ye, how they change!

Their cheeks are paper. Why, what read
you there,

That hath so cowarded and chas'd your
blood

Out of appearance?

Cam. I do confess my fault,
And do submit me to your highness' mercy.

Grey, Scroop. To which we all appeal.

K. Hen. The mercy that was quick in us but late

By your own counsel is suppress'd and
kill'd: 80

You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;

For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.

See you, my princes and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My Lord of Cambridge here,

You know how apt our love was to accord
To furnish him with all appertinents

Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly con-spir'd,

And sworn unto the practices of France, 90
To kill us here in Hampton; to the which This knight, no less for bounty bound to us

Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn.

But O!

What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop? thou cruel,

Ingrateful, savage and inhuman creature!
Thou that didst bear the key of all my coun-
sels,

That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
That almost might'st have coin'd me into
gold

Would'st thou have practis'd on me for thy use!

May it be possible that foreign hire 100
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil
That might annoy my finger? 't is so strange That, though the truth of it stands off as gross

As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.

Treason and murder ever kept together,

As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
 Working so grossly in a natural cause
 That admiration did not whoop at them:
 But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in
 Wonder to wait on treason and on murder:
 And whatsoever cunning fiend it was 111
 That wrought upon thee so preposterously
 Hath got the voice in hell for excellence:
 All other devils that suggest by treasons
 Do botch and bungle up damnation
 With patches, colours, and with forms, being fetch'd
 From glistering semblances of piety;
 But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand
 up,
 Gave thee no instance why thou should'st
 do treason, 119
 Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.
 If that same demon that hath gull'd thee
 thus
 Should with his lion gait walk the whole
 world,
 He might return to vasty Tartar back,
 And tell the legions: 'I can never win
 A soul so easy as that Englishman's.'
 O! how hast thou with jealousy infected
 The sweetness of affiance. Show men dutiful?
 Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
 Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
 Why, so didst thou: seem they religious? 130
 Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet,
 Free from gross passion or of mirth or anger, Constant in spirit, not swerving with the
 blood,
 Garnish'd and deck'd in modest compli-
 ment,
 Not working with the eye without the ear,
 And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
 Such and so finely bolted didst thou seem:
 And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
 To mark the full-fraught man and best indued
 With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;
 For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like 141
 Another fall of man. Their faults are open:
 Arrest them to the answer of the law;
 And God acquit them of their practices!
Exe. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard Earl of Cambridge.
 I arrest thee of high treason, by the name
 of Henry
 Lord Scroop of Masham.
 I arrest thee of high treason, by the name
 of
 Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumber-
 land. 150
Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath dis-cover'd,
 And I repent my fault more than my death;
 Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
 Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
 Although I did admit it as a motive
 The sooner to effect what I intended:
 But God be thanked for prevention;
 Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoice,
 Beseeching God and you to pardon me. 160
Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice
 At the discovery of most dangerous treason
 Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
 Prevented from a damned enterprise.
 My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.
K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy!
 Hear your sentence.
 You have conspir'd against our royal person, Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers.
 Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death:
 Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter, 170
 His princes and his peers to servitude,
 His subjects to oppression and contempt,
 And his whole kingdom into desolation.
 Touching our person seek we no revenge;
 But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
 Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
 We do deliver you. Get you therefore,
 hence,
 Poor miserable wretches, to your death;
 The taste whereof, God of his mercy give
 you
 Patience to endure, and true repentance 180
 Of all your dear offences! Bear them hence.
Exeunt CAMBRIDGE, SCROOP, and
GREY, guarded.
 Now, lords, for France; the enterprise
 whereof
 Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.
 We doubt not of a fair and lucky war,
 Since God so graciously hath brought to light
 This dangerous treason lurking in our
 way
 To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not
 now
 But every rub is smoothed on our way.
 Then forth, dear countrymen: let us deliver
 Our puissance into the hand of God, 190
 Putting it straight in expedition.
 Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
 No king of England, if not king of France.
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—London. Before a Tavern in Eastcheap.
Enter PISTOL, HOSTESS, NYM, BARDOLPH
and Boy.
Host. Prithee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.
Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.
 Bardolph, be blithe; Nym, rouse thy vaunt-
 ing veins:
 Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he
 is dead,
 And we must yearn therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, wheresom'er he is, either in heaven or in hell! 8

Host. Nay, sure, he's not in hell: he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom. A' made a finer end and went away an it had been any christom child; a' parted even just between twelve and one, even at the turning o' the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets and play with flowers and smile upon his fingers' ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and a' babbled of green fields. 'How now, Sir John?'
quoth I: 'what, man! be o' good cheer.'
So a' cried out 'God, God, God!' three or four times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a' should not think of God, I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So a' bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say he cried out of sack.

Host. Ay, that a' did. 30

Bard. And of women.

Host. Nay, that a' did not.

Boy. Yes, that a' did; and said they were devils incarnate.

Host. A' could never abide carnation;
't was a colour he never liked.

Boy. A' said once, the devil would have him about women.

Host. A' did in some sort, indeed, handle women; but then he was rheumatic, and talked of the whore of Babylon. 41

Boy. Do you not remember a' saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose, and a' said it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away. My love, give me thy lips.

Look to my chattels and my moveables: 50
Let senses rule, the word is 'Pitch and
pay.'

Trust none;

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-
cakes,

And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck:

Therefore, caveto be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystals. Yoke-fellows in
arms,

Let us to France; like horse-leeches, my boys,

To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

Boy. And that's but unwholesome food,
they say. 60

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess. Kisses her.

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but adieu.

Pist. Let housewifery appear: keep close,
' I thee command.

Host. Farewell; adieu.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—France. An Apartment in the French King's Palace.

Enter the French King, attended; the DAUPHIN, the Dukes of BERRI and BRE-TAGNE, the Constable, and Others.

Fr. King. Thus comes the English with full power upon us;

And more than carefully it us concerns

To answer royally in our defences.

Therefore the Dukes of Berri and of Bre-
tagne,

Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make
forth,

And you, Prince Dauphin, with all swift dispatch,

To line and new repair our towns of war
With men of courage and with means defendant;

For England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. 10

It fits us then to be as provident
As fear may teach us out of late examples

Left by the fatal and neglected English
Upon our fields.

Dau. My most redoubted father,
It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe;

For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,

Though war nor no known quarrel were in
question,

But that defences, musters, preparations,
Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected,

As were a war in expectation. 20

Therefore, I say, 't is meet we all go forth
To view the sick and feeble parts of France:

And let us do it with no show of fear;
No, with no more than if we heard that

England
Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance:

For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne

By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, Prince Dauphin!
You are too much mistaken in this king. 30

Question your grace the late ambassadors,
With what great state he heard their embassy,

How well supplied with noble counsellors,
How modest in exception, and withal

How terrible in constant resolution,
And you shall find his vanities forespent

Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly;

As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, 't is not so, my lord high constable; 41

But though we think it so, it is no matter:
In cases of defence 't is best to weigh

The enemy more mighty than he seems:
So the proportions of defence are fill'd;

Which of a weak and niggardly projection
Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat with scant-
ing

A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we King Harry strong;

And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him.

The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us,

And he is bred out of that bloody strain 51
That haunted us in our familiar paths:
Witness our too much memorable shame
When Cressy battle fatally was struck,
And all our princes captiv'd by the hand
Of that black name, Edward, Black Prince of Wales;

Whiles that his mountain sire, on mountain
standing,

Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,
Saw his heroidal seed, and smil'd to see him,
Mangle the work of nature, and deface 60
The patterns that by God and by French
fathers

Had twenty years been made. This is a stem

Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Harry King of England

Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them.

Exeunt Messenger and certain Lords.
You see this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dau. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward dogs

Most spend their mouths when what they seem to threaten 70

Runs far before them. Good my sovereign, Take up the English short, and let them
know

Of what a monarchy you are the head:

Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin

As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with EXETER and Train.

Fr. King. From our brother England?

Exe. From him; and thus he greets your majesty.

He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart

The borrowed glories that by gift of heaven,
By law of nature and of nations, 'long 80

To him and to his heirs; namely, the crown
And all wide-stretched honours that pertain

By custom and the ordinance of times Unto the crown of France. That you may know

'Tis no sinister nor no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd
days,

Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd,
He sends you this most memorable line,

Gives a pedigree.

In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you overlook this pedigree; 90

And when you find him evenly deriv'd
From his most fam'd of famous ancestors,

Edward the Third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held

From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide
the crown

Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it:
Therefore in fierce tempest is he coming.

In thunder and in earthquake like a Jove,
That, if requiring fail, he will compel; 101

And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown, and to take mercy

On the poor souls for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head

Turning the widows' tears, the orphans'
cries,

The dead men's blood, the pining maidens'
groans,

For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.

This is his claim, his threat'ning, and my message; 110

Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further:

To-morrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother England.

Dau. For the Dauphin,
I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorn and defiance; slight regard,
contempt,

And anything that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.

Thus says my king: an if your father's high-
ness

Do not, in grant of all demands at large, 121
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his maj-
esty,

He'll call you to so hot an answer of it,
That caves and womby vaultages of France

Shall chide your trespass and return your mock

In second accent of his ordinance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair return,
It is against my will; for I desire

Nothing but odds with England: to that
end,

As matching to his youth and vanity, 130
I did present him with the Paris balls.

Exe. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake
for it,

Were it the mistress-court of mighty Europe:
And, be assur'd, you'll find a difference,

As we his subjects have in wonder found,
Between the promise of his greener days

And these he masters now. Now he weighs
time

Even to the utmost grain; that you shall read

In your own losses, if he stay in France.

Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full. 140

Exe. Dispatch us with all speed, lest that our king

Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already.

Fr. King. You shall be soon dispatch'd with fair conditions:

A night is but small breath and little pause
To answer matters of this consequence.

Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT III

Enter CHORUS.

Thus with imagin'd wing our swift scene flies

In motion of no less celerity

Than that of thought. Suppose that you have seen

*The well-appointed king at Hampton pier
Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phœbus fanning:*

*Play with your fancies, and in them behold
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give*

To sounds confus'd; behold the threaten sails,

*Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,*

*Breasting the lofty surge. O! do but think
You stand upon the rivage and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow!*

*Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England, as dead midnight still,*

Guarded with grandsires, babies, and old women,

Either past or not arriv'd to pith and puissance:

*For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?*

Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a siege;

*Behold the ordnance on their carriages,
With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harfleur.*

Suppose the ambassador from the French comes back;

*Tells Harry that the king doth offer him
Katharine his daughter; and with her, to dowry,*

*Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms: 31
The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner*

With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,

*Alarum, and chambers go off.
And down goes all before them. Still be kind,*

And eke out our performance with your mind. Exit.

SCENE I.—France. Before Harfleur.

Alarums. Enter King HENRY, EXETER, BEDFORD, GLOUCESTER, and Soldiers, with scaling-ladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;

*Or close the wall up with our English dead.
In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
As modest stillness and humility:*

*But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage;*

*Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it*

*As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.*

Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril wide,

Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit

To his full height! On, on, you noble English!

Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof;

*Fathers that, like so many Alexanders, 19
Have in these parts from morn till even fought,*

And sheathe'd their swords for lack of argument.

*Dishonour not your mothers; now attest
That those whom you call'd fathers did beget you.*

*Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war. And you, good yeomen,*

Whose limbs were made in England, show us here

*The mettle of your pasture; let us swear
That you are worth your breeding; which I doubt not;*

*For there is none of you so mean and base
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes. 30*

I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips, Straining upon the start. The game's afoot:

*Follow your spirit; and upon this charge
Cry 'God for Harry! England and Saint George!'*

Exeunt. Alarum, and chambers go off.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter NYM, BARDOLPH, PISTOL, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knocks are too hot; and for mine own part,

I have not a case of lives: the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is most just, for humours do abound:

Knocks go and come, God's vassals drop and die;

*And sword and shield,
In bloody field,*

Doth win immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.

Pist. And I:

*If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I hie.*

Boy. *As duly,
But not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.*

Enter FLUELLEN.

Flu. Up to the breach, you dogs! avaunt, you cullions! Driving them forward.

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!

Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage;

Abate thy rage, great duke!

Good bawcock, bate thy rage; use lenity, sweet chuck!

Nym. These be good humours! your honour wins bad humours.

Exeunt NYM, PISTOL, and BARDOLPH, followed by FLUELLEN.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for indeed three such anticks do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof a' faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue and a quiet sword; by the means whereof a' breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest a' should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are matched with as few good deeds; for a' never broke any man's head but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal anything and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching, and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel; I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchers: which makes much against my manhood if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them and seek some better service: their villany goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up. Exit.

Re-enter FLUELLEN, GOWER following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the Duke of Gloucester would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke it is not so good to come to the mines. For look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war; the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' athversary, you may discuss unto the duke, look you, is digt himself four yard under the countermines. By Cheshu, I think a' will plow up all if there is not better directions.

Gow. The duke of Gloucester, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman, a very valiant gentleman, i' faith.

Flu. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world: I will verify as much in his peard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

Enter MACMORRIS and JAMY, at a distance.

Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, Captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous valorous gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition and knowledge in th' aunchient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say gud day, Captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, good Captain James.

Gow. How now, Captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish, la! tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blowed up the town, so Chrish save me, la! in an hour: O! tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I peseech you now, will you youtsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly to satisfy my opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline: that is the point.

Jamy. It sall be vary gud, gud feith, gud captains bath: and I sall quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that sall I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me: the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes: it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet call us to the breach; and we talk, and, be Chrish, do nothing: 't is shame for us all; so God sa' me, 't is shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand; and there is throats to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa' me, la!

Jamy. By the mess, ere theise eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, aile do gud service, or aile lig i' the grund for it; ay, or go to death; and aile pay it as valorously as I may, that sall I surely do, that is the breff and the long. Marry, I wad full fain hear some question 'tween you tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

Mac. Of my nation! What ish my nation? Ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal. What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmorris, peradventure I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as good a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of wars, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities. 142

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen, both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. A! that's a foul fault.

A parley sounded.

Gow. The town sounds a parley. 149

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you I know the disciplines of wars; and there is an end. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before the Gates of Harfleur.

The Governor and some Citizens on the walls; the English Forces below. Enter KING HENRY and his Train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the latest parle we will admit: Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves; Or like to men proud of destruction Defy us to our worst: for, as I am a soldier, A name that in my thoughts becomes me best,

If I begin the battery once again, I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur Till in her ashes she lies buried.

The gates of mercy shall be all shut up, 10 And the flesh'd soldier, rough and hard of heart,

In liberty of bloody hand shall range With conscience wide as hell, mowing like grass

Your fresh-fair virgins and your flowering infants.

What is it then to me, if impious war, Array'd in flames like to the prince of fiends,

Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats

Enlink'd to waste and desolation?

What is 't to me, when you yourselves are cause,

If your pure maidens fall into the hand 20 Of hot and forcing violation?

What rein can hold licentious wickedness When down the hill he holds his fierce career?

We may as bootless spend our vain command

Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil As send precepts to the leviathan

To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,

Take pity of your town and of your people, Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command; Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace 30

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds Of heady murder, spoil, and villany.

If not, why, in a moment look to see

The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;

Your fathers taken by the silver beards, And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls;

Your naked infants spitted upon pikes, Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confus'd

Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry 40

At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen. What say you? will you yield, and this avoid?

Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Gov. Our expectation hath this day an end.

The Dauphin, whom of succour we entreated,

Returns us that his powers are yet not ready

To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king,

We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy.

Enter our gates; dispose of us and ours; For we no longer are defensible. 50

K. Hen. Open your gates! Come, uncle Exeter,

Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain, And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:

Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle, The winter coming on and sickness growing

Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais. To-night in Harfleur we will be your guest;

To-morrow for the march are we address'd. Flourish. KING HENRY and his train enter the town.

SCENE IV.—Rouen. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KATHARINE and ALICE.

Kath. Alice, tu as esté en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame.

Kath. Je te prie, m'enseignes; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez vous la main en Anglois?

Alice. La main? elle est appelée de hand.

Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?

Alice. Les doigts? ma foy, je oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendray. Les doigts? je pense qu'ils sont appelés de fingers; ouy, de fingers. 11

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingers. Je pense que je suis le bon escolier. J'ai gagné deux mots d'Anglois vistement. Comment appelez vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles? nous les appellons de nails.

Kath. De nails. Escoutez; dites moy si je parle bien: de hand, de fingres, et de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dict, madame; il est fort bon Anglois. 20

Kath. Dites moy l'Anglois pour le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude?

Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fais la répétition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris dès à présent.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Excusez moy, Alice; escoutez: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arma, de bilbow. 31

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu! je m'en oublie; de elbow. Comment appelez vous le col?

Alice. De nick, madame.

Kath. De nick. Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sin. Le col, de nick; le menton, de sin. 39

Alice. Ouy. Sauf vostre honneur, en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les natifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez vous déjà oublié ce que je vous ay enseigné?

Kath. Non, je reciteray à vous promptement. De hand, de fingre, de mails,—

Alice. De nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arme, de ilbow. 40

Alice. Sauf vostre honneur, d'elbow.

Kath. Ainsi dis je; d'elbow, de nick, et de sin. Comment appelez vous le pied et la robe?

Alice. Le foot, madame; et le coun.

Kath. Le foot, et le coun? O Seigneur Dieu! ils sont les mots de son mauvais, corruptible, gros, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user. Je ne voudrois prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde. Foh! le foot et le coun! Néant-moins je reciteray une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: d'hand, de fingre, de nails, d'arm, d'elbow, de nick, de sin, de foot, le coun. 63

Alice. Excellent madame!

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois: allons nous à diner. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. Another Room in the Same.

Enter the French King, the DAUPHIN, the Duke of BOURBON, the Constable of France, and Others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain he hath pass'd the river Somme.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord,

Let us not live in France; let us quit all, And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Dau. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays of us,

The emptying of our fathers' luxury, Our scions, put in wild and savage stock, Spirit up so suddenly into the clouds, And overlook their grafters?

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards! 10

Mort de mai vie! if they march along Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom,

To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle?

Is not their climate foggy, raw and dull, On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale, Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water,

A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley-broth,

Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? 20

And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,

Seem frosty? O! for honour of our land, Let us not hang like roping icicles

Upon our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people

Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields;

Poor we may call them in their native lords.

Dau. By faith and honour, Our madams mock at us, and plainly say

Our mettle is bred out; and they will give Their bodies to the lust of English youth 30

To new-store France with bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us to the English dancing-schools,

And teach lavolts high and swift corantos; Saying our grace is only in our heels,

And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy the herald? speed him hence;

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.

Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour edg'd

More sharper than your swords, hie to the field;

Charles Delabreth, high constable of France;

You Dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berri,

Alençon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy; 42

Jaques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont, Beaumont, Grandpré, Roussi, and Fauconberg,

Foix, Lestrale, Bouciqualt, and Charolois; High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights, For your great seats now quit you of great shames,

Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land

With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur:

Rush on his host as doth the melted snow 50 Upon the valleys, whose low vassal seat

The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon :
Go down upon him, you have power enough,
And in a captive chariot into Roan
Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great.
Sorry am I his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick and famish'd in their
march,

For I am sure when he shall see our
army

He 'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,
And for achievement offer us his ransom. 60

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy,

And let him say to England that we send
To know what willing ransom he will give.
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Roan.

Dau. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.
Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us.

Now forth, lord constable and princes all,
And quickly bring us word of England's fall.

Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The English Camp in Picardy.

Enter GOWER and FLUELLEN.

Gow. How now, Captain Fluellen! come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you there is very excellent services committed at the pridge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living,
and my uttermost power: he is not, God be praised and blessed! any hurt in the world, but keeps the pridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an aunchient lieutenant there at the pridge; I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the world; but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called Aunchient Pistol.

Gow. I know him not. 20

Enter PISTOL.

Flu. Here is the man.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours: The Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise God; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier firm and sound
of heart,

And of buxom valour, hath, by cruel fate
And giddy Fortune's furious fickle wheel,
That goddess blind, 29

That stands upon the rolling restless
stone,—

Flu. By your patience, Aunchient Pistol.
Fortune is painted blind, with a muffler afore her eyes, to signify to you that Fortune is blind: and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant,

and mutability, and variation: and her foot,
look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls: in good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it: Fortune is an excellent moral. 40

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him;

For he hath stol'n a pax, and hanged must a' be.

A damned death!

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free

And let not hemp his wind-pipe suffocate.

But Exeter hath given the doom of death

For pax of little price.

Therefore, go speak; the duke will hear thy voice;

And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord and vile reproach:

Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee
requite. 51

Flu. Aunchient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then, rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, aunchient, it is not a thing to rejoice at; for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure and put him to execution;
for discipline ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damn'd; and figo for thy friendship! 60

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain! Exit.

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal: I remember him now; a bawd, a cut-purse.

Flu. I'll assure you a' uttered as prave words at the pridge as you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve. 69

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue, that now and then goes to the wars to grace himself at his return into London under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names, and they will learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on;
and this they con perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-tuned oaths: and what a beard of the general's cut and a horrid suit of the camp will do among foaming bottles and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mis-
took. 85

Flu. I tell you what, Captain Gower; I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the world he is: if I find a hole in his coat I will tell him my mind. Drum heard.

Hark you, the king is coming, and I must speak with him from the pridge. 91

Enter King HENRY, GLOUCESTER, and Soldiers.

Flu. God bless your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen! cam'st thou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge: the French is gone off, look you, and there is gallant and most prave passages. Marry, th' athversary was have possession of the pridge, but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pridge. I can tell your majesty the duke is a prave man. 101

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th' athversary hath been very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church; one Bar-dolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames o' fire; and his lips blows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plue and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire's out. 112

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off: and we give express charge that in our marches through the country there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for, none of the French upbraided or abused in disdainful language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner. 120

Tucket. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. You know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well then I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it. 124

Mont. Thus says my king: Say thou to Harry of England: Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep: advantage is a better soldier than rashness. Tell him we could have rebuked him at Harfleur, but that we thought not good to bruise an injury till it were full ripe: now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him therefore consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master, so much my office. 145

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mont. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back,

And tell thy king I do not seek him now, But could be willing to march on to Calais Without impeachment; for, to say the sooth,

Though 't is no wisdom to confess so much Unto an enemy of craft and vantage, 153 My people are with sickness much enfeebled,

My numbers lessen'd, and those few I have Almost no better than so many French; Who when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,

I thought upon one pair of English legs Did march three Frenchmen. Yet, forgive me, God, 159

That I do brag thus! this your air of France Hath blown that vice in me: I must repent.

Go therefore, tell thy master here I am; My ransom is this frail and worthless trunk, My army but a weak and sickly guard; Yet, God before, tell him we will come on, Though France himself and such another neighbour

Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy.

Go bid thy master well advise himself: If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood 170

Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well. The sum of all our answer is but this:

We would not seek a battle as we are; Nor, as we are, we say we will not shun it: So tell your master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness. Exit.

Glou. I hope they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.

March to the bridge; it now draws toward night:

Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves, 180 And on to-morrow bid them march away. Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord RAMBURES, the Duke of ORLEANS, the DAUPHIN, and Others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armour of the world. Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armour—

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world. 19

Dau. What a long night is this! I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns. Ca, ha! He bounds from the earth as if his entrails were hairs; le chevel volant, the Pegasus, qui a les narines de feu! When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk: he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg. 20

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him: he is indeed a horse: and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch; and his countenance enforces homage. 31

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all. 'Tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world, familiar to us and unknown, to lay apart their particular functions and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise and began thus: 'Wonder of nature!'— 43

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser; for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress. 50

Con. Nay, for methought yesterday your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So perhaps did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O! then belike she was old and gentle; and you rode, like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait strossers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship. 59

Dau. Be warned by me, then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au boubrière thou makest use of any thing. 70

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such proverb so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars or suns upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluously, and 't were more honour some were away. 81

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well were some of your brags dismounted.

Dau. Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so for fear I should be faced out of my way. But I would it were morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English. 92

Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight; I'll go arm myself. Exit.

Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Ram. He longs to eat the English.

Con. I think he will eat all he kills. 100

Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Orl. He is simply the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity, and he will still be doing.

Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Con. Nor will do none to-morrow: he will keep that good name still. 111

Orl. I know him to be valiant.

Con. I was told that by one that knows him better than you.

Orl. What's he?

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not; it is no hidden virtue in him. 119

Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour; and when it appears, it will bate.

Orl. 'Til will never said well.'

Con. I will cap that proverb with 'There is flattery in friendship.'

Orl. And I will take up that with 'Give the devil his due.'

Con. Well placed: there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb with 'A pox of the devil.' 130

Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by how much 'A fool's bolt is soon shot.'

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpré. 138

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman. Would it were day! Alas! poor Harry of England, he longs not for the dawning as we do.

Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge!

Con. If the English had any apprehension they would run away. 143

Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage. 152

Orl. Foolish curs! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear and have their heads crushed like rotten apples. You may as well say that's a valiant flea that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives; and then give them great meals of beef and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves and fight like devils. 162

Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Con. Then shall we find to-morrow they have only stomachs to eat and none to fight. Now is it time to arm; come, shall we about it?

Orl. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see, by ten.

We shall have each a hundred Englishmen. Exeunt.

ACT IV

Enter CHORUS.

*Now entertain conjecture of a time
When creeping murmur and the poring dark
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb
of night,*

*The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix'd sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:
Fire answers fire, and through their palmy flames*

*Each battle sees the other's umber'd face;
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful
neighs* 10

Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents

*The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.
The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,*

*And the third hour of drowsy morning
name.*

*Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice,
And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night 20
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned
English,*

*Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The morning's danger, and their gesture sad*

Investing lank-lean cheeks and war-worn coats

*Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O! now, who will behold*

The royal captain of this ruin'd band Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent, 30

*Let him cry 'Praise and glory on his head!'
For forth he goes and visits all his host,
Bids them good morrow with a modest smile,*

And calls them brothers, friends and countrymen.

*Upon his royal face there is no note
How dread an army hath enrouned him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night;
But freshly looks and overbears attaint
With cheerful semblance and sweet maj-
esty;* 40

*That every wretch, pining and pale before, Beholding him, plucks comfort from his
looks.*

*A largess universal like the sun
His liberal eye doth give to every one, Thawing cold fear. Then mean and gentle all,*

*Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night.
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where, O for pity! we shall much disgrace
With four or five most vile and ragged
foils,* 50

*Right ill-dispos'd in brawl ridiculous,
The name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see;
Minding true things by what their mockeries be.* Exit.

SCENE I.—The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter King HENRY, BEDFORD, and GLOUCESTER.

K. Hen. Gloucester, 't is true that we are in great danger;
The greater therefore should our courage
be.

Good morrow, brother Bedford. God Almighty!

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,

*Would men observingly distil it out;
For our bad neighbors makes us early stir-
rers,*

Which is both healthful and good husbandry:

*Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all; admonishing*

That we should dress us fairly for our end.<sup>10</sup>
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a churlish turf of France.

Erp. Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me better,

Since I may say 'Now lie I like a king.'

K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present pains

Upon example; so the spirit is eased:
And when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,<sup>20</sup>

The organs though defunct and dead before, Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move

With casted slough and fresh legerity.

Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas. Brothers
both,

Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good morrow to them; and anon
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glow. We shall, my liege.

Exeunt GLOUCESTER and BEDFORD.

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of Eng-
land;

I and my bosom must debate awhile,<sup>31</sup>
And then I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speakest cheerfully.

Enter PISTOL.

Pist. Qui va là?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me; art thou officer?
Or art thou base, common and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trail'st thou the puissant pike?<sup>40</sup>

K. Hen. Even so. What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the
king.

Pist. The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold.

A lad of life, an imp of fame;

Of parents good, of fist most valiant:

I kiss his dirty shoe and from heart-string
I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

K. Hen. Harry le Roy.

Pist. Le Roy! A Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?<sup>50</sup>

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate

Upon Saint Davy's day.

K. Hen. Do you not wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The figo for thee then!<sup>60</sup>

K. Hen. I thank you. God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called. Exit.

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierce-
ness.

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So! in the name of Chesu Christ,<sup>64</sup> speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and aunchient prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept. If you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle nor pibble pabble in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.<sup>75</sup>

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb? in your own conscience now?

Gow. I will speak lower.<sup>81</sup>

Flu. I pray you and peseech you that you
will.

Exeunt GOWER and FLUELLEN.

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion,
There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter JOHN BATES, ALEXANDER COURT, and MICHAEL WILLIAMS.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be; but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.<sup>90</sup>

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day but I think we shall never see the end of it. Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

K. Hen. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Will. A good old commander and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.<sup>101</sup>

Bates. He hath not told his thought to
the king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should. For, though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing.
Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army. 117

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will, but I believe, as cold a night as 't is, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck, and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then I would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved. 123

K. Hen. I dare say you love him not so ill to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this to feel other men's minds. Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough if we know we are the king's subjects. If his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us. 139

Will. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make; when all those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all 'We died at such a place;' some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it, whom to disobey were against all proportion of subjection. 153

K. Hen. So, if a son that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers and die in many irreconcilable iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation. But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death when they purpose their services. Besides there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery.

Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for before-breach of the king's laws in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death they have borne life away, and where they would be safe they perish. Then, if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience; and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost wherein such preparation was gained: and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think that, making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare. 196

Will. 'T is certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head; the king is not to answer it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him. 201

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say he would not be ransomed.

Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully; but when our throats are cut he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after. 208

Will. You pay him then. That's a perilous shot out of an elder-gun, that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch. You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 't is a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with you if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live. 220

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou darest acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove: give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say after to-morrow, 'This is my glove,' by this hand I will take thee a box on the ear. 232

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou darest as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon. 241

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: but it is no English treason to cut French crowns, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper. Exeunt Soldiers.

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls, Our debts, our careful wives, Our children, and our sins lay on the king! We must bear all. O hard condition! 250 Twin-born with greatness, subject to the breath

Of every fool, whose sense no more can feel But his own wringing. What infinite heart's ease

Must kings neglect that private men enjoy! And what have kings that privates have not too,

Save ceremony, save general ceremony? And what art thou, thou idol ceremony? What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more

Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers? What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in? 260

O ceremony! show me but thy worth: What is thy soul of adoration? Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form, Creating awe and fear in other men? Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd, Than they in fearing.

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,

But poison'd flattery? O! be sick, great greatness,

And bid thy ceremony give thee cure. Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out 270 With titles blown from adulation? Will it give place to flexure and low-bending?

Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee,

Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream,

That play'st so subtly with a king's repose; I am a king that find thee; and I know 'T is not the balm, the sceptre and the ball, The sword, the mace, the crown imperial, The intertissued robe of gold and pearl, The farced title running fore the king, 280 The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp That beats upon the high shore of this world,

No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony, Not all these, laid in bed majestic, Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave, Who with a body fill'd and vacant mind Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread;

Never sees horrid night, the child of hell, But, like a lackey, from the rise to set 289 Sweats in the eye of Phoebus, and all night Sleeps in Elysium; next day after dawn, Doth rise and help Hyperion to his horse, And follows so the ever-running year

With profitable labour to his grave: And, but for ceremony, such a wretch, Winding up days with toil and nights with sleep,

Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king. The slave, a member of the country's peace, Enjoys it; but in gross brain little wots What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace, 300 Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence, Seek through your camp to find you.

K. Hen. Good old knight, Collect them all together at my tent: I'll be before thee.

Erp. I shall do 't my lord. Exit.
K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts;

Possess them not with fear; take from them now The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers

Pluck their hearts from them. Not to-day, O Lord!

O! not to-day, think not upon the fault 310 My father made in compassing the crown. I Richard's body have interred new, And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears Than from it issued forced drops of blood. Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay, Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up

Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built

Two chantries, where the sad and solemn priests

Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do; Though all that I can do is nothing worth, 320 Since that my penitence comes after all, Imploping pardon.

Enter GLOUCESTER.

Glou. My liege!

K. Hen. My brother Gloucester's voice! Ay!

I know thy errand, I will go with thee: The day, my friends, and all things stay for me. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The French Camp.

Enter the DAUPHIN, ORLEANS, RAMBURES and Others.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour: up, my lords!

Dau. Montez à cheval! My horse! valet! lacquais! ha!

Orl. O brave spirit!

Dau. Via! les eaux et la terre!

Orl. Rien puis? l'air et le feu!

Dau. Ciel! cousin Orleans.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,
That their hot blood may spin in English eyes, 10
And dout them with superfluous courage, ha!
Ram. What! will you have them weep our horses' blood?
How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattail'd, you French peers.

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!

Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.

There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins

To give each naked curtal-axe a stain, 21
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,

And sheathe for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,

The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,

Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe,
Though we upon this mountain's basis by 30
Took stand for idle speculation:

But that our honours must not. What's to say?

A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound

The tucket sonance and the note to mount:
For our approach shall so much dare the field

That England shall couch down in fear, and yield.

Enter GRANDPRÉ.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?

Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,

Ill-favour'dly become the morning field: 40
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully:

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,

And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,

The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,

And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel bit

Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless; 50

And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dau. Shall we go send them dinners and fresh suits,

And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Con. I stay but for my guidon: to the field! 60

I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come,

away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day.

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The English Camp.

Enter the English Host: GLOUCESTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, SALISBURY, and WESTMORELAND.

Glou. Where is the king?

Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full three-score thousand.

Exe. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.

Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.

God be wi' you, princes all; I'll to my charge:

If we no more meet till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully, my noble Lord of Bedford,

My dear Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord Exeter,

And my kind kinsman, warriors all, adieu! 10

Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Exe. Farewell, kind lord. Fight valiantly to-day:

And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it,
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

Bed. He is as full of valour as of kindness;

Princely in both.

Enter King HENRY.

West. O! that we now had here
But one ten thousand of those men in England

That do no work to-day.

K. Hen. What's he that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland? No, my fair cousin:

If we are mark'd to die, we are enow 20
To do our country loss; and if to live,

The fewer men, the greater share of honour.
God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.

By Jove, I am not covetous for gold,
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;

It yearns me not if men my garments wear;

Such outward things dwell not in my desires:

But if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive.
No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from Eng-
land;

God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour;

As one man more, methinks, would share from me,

For the best hope I have. O! do not wish one more:

Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,

That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,

And crowns for convoy put into his purse:
We would not die in that man's company
That fears his fellowship to die with us.

This day is called the feast of Crispian: 40
He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,

Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.

He that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say 'To-morrow is Saint Crispian':

Then will he strip his sleeve and show his scars,

And say 'These wounds I had on Crispin's day.'

Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he'll remember with advantages 50
What feats he did that day. Then shall our names,

Familiar in his mouth as household words,
Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester,

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.

This story shall the good man teach his son;
And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,

But we in it shall be remembered; 59
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he to-day that sheds his blood with me
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile
This day shall gentle his condition:

And gentlemen in England now a-bed Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not here,

And hold their manhoods cheap whiles any
speaks

That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

Re-enter SALISBURY.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:

The French are bravely in their battles set,
And will with all expedience charge on us. 70

K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.

West. Perish the man whose mind is backward now!

K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England, coz?

West. God's will! my liege, would you and I alone,

Without more help, could fight this royal battle!

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;

Which likes me better than to wish us one.
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, King Harry,

If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound, 80
Before thy most assured overthrow:
For certainly thou art so near the gulf
Thou needs must be englutted. Besides,
in mercy,
The constable desires thee thou wilt mind
Thy followers of repentance; that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies
Must lie and fester.

K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?
Mont. The Constable of France.

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer back: 90
Bid them achieve me and then sell my bones.

Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?

The man that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him.

A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find natives graves; upon the which, I
trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work:

And those that leave their valiant bones in
France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dung-
hills,
They shall be fam'd; for there the sun shall
greet them, 100
And draw their honours reeking up to
heaven,
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your
clime,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in
France.

Mark then abounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.

Let me speak proudly: tell the constable
We are but warriors for the working-day;
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field; 111
There's not a piece of feather in our host—
Good argument, I hope, we will not fly—
And time hath worn us into slovenry:
But, by the mass, our hearts are in the
trim;

And my poor soldiers tell me, yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes, or they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads,
And turn them out of service. If they do
this,

Without more help, could fight this royal battle!

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;

Which likes me better than to wish us one.
You know your places: God be with you all!

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer back: 90
Bid them achieve me and then sell my bones.

Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?

The man that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him.

A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find natives graves; upon the which, I
trust,

Shall witness live in brass of this day's
work:

And those that leave their valiant bones in
France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dung-
hills,

They shall be fam'd; for there the sun shall
greet them, 100
And draw their honours reeking up to
heaven,
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your
clime,

The smell whereof shall breed a plague in
France.

Mark then abounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.

Let me speak proudly: tell the constable
We are but warriors for the working-day;
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field; 111
There's not a piece of feather in our host—
Good argument, I hope, we will not fly—
And time hath worn us into slovenry:
But, by the mass, our hearts are in the
trim;

And my poor soldiers tell me, yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes, or they will
pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads,
And turn them out of service. If they do
this,

As, if God please, they shall, my ransom then
Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour; 121

Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald:

They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints;

Which if they have as I will leave 'em them, Shall yield them little, tell the constable.

Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well:

Thou never shalt hear herald any more.

K. Hen. I fear thou 'lt once more come again for ransom.

Enter YORK.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg

The leading of the vaward. 130

K. Hen. Take it, brave York. Now, soldiers, march away:

And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day! Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Field of Battle.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter French Soldier, PISTOL, and Boy.

Pist. Yield, cur!

Fr. Sold. Je pense que vous estes gentil-homme de bonne qualité.

Pist. Quality? Calen o custure me! Art thou a gentleman?

What is thy name? discuss.

Fr. Sold. O Seigneur Dieu!

Pist. O, Signieur Dew should be a gentleman:

Perpend my words, O Signieur Dew, and mark:

O Signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox, Except, O signieur, thou do give me 10
Egregious ransom.

Fr. Sold. O, prenez misericorde! avez pitié de moy!

Pist. Moy shall not serve; I will have forty moys;

Or I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat In drops of crimson blood.

Fr. Sold. Est il impossible d'eschapper la force de ton bras?

Pist. Brass, cur!

Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat, 20

Offer'st me brass?

Fr. Sold. O pardonnez moy!

Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys?

Come hither, boy: ask me this slave in French

What is his name.

Boy. Escoutez: comment estes vous appelé?

Fr. Sold. Monsieur le Fer.

Boy. He says his name is Master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and fir him, and ferret him. Discuss the same in French unto him. 31

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and fir.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

Fr. Sold. Que dit-il, monsieur?

Boy. Il me commande à vous dire que vous faites vous prest; car ce soldat icy est disposé tout à cette heure de couper vostre gorge.

Pist. Ouy, cuppele gorge, permafoy,

Peasant, unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns; 40

Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword.

Fr. Sold. O! je vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonner. Je suis gentil-homme de bonne maison: gardez ma vie, et je vous donneray deux cents escus.

Pist. What are his words?

Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and for his ransom he will give you two hundred crowns.

Pist. Tell him my fury shall abate, and I The crowns will take. 51

Fr. Sold. Petit monsieur, que dit-il?

Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son jurement de pardonner aucun prisonnier; neantmoins, pour les escus que vous l'avez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchisement.

Fr. Sold. Sur mes genoux je vous donne mille remerciemens; et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, vaillant, et très-distingué seigneur d'Angleterre. 61

Pist. Expound unto me boy.

Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks; and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of one, as he thinks, the most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy signieur of England.

Pist. As I suck the blood, I will some mercy show. Follow me!

Boy. Suivez vous le grand capitaine. 70

Exeunt PISTOL and French Soldier.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the saying is true, 'The empty vessel makes the greatest sound.' Bardolph and Nym had ten times more valour than this roaring devil i' the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger; and they are both hanged; and so would this be if he durst steal anything adventurously. I must stay with the lackeys, with the luggage of our camp: the French might have a good prey of us if he knew of it; for there is none to guard it but boys. 82

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter the DAUPHIN, ORLEANS, BOURBON, Constable, RAMBURES, and Others.

Con. O diable!

Orl. O seigneur! le jour est perdu! tout est perdu!

Dau. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!

Reproach and everlasting shame

Sit mocking in our plumes. O meschante fortune!

Do not run away. A short alarum.
Con. Why, all our ranks are broke.

Dau. O perdurable shame! let's stab ourselves.

Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice for?

Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?

Bour. Shame, and eternal shame, nothing but shame!

Let us die in honour! Once more back again;

And he that will not follow Bourbon now, Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand, Like a base pandar, hold the chamber-door Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog, His fairest daughter is contaminated.

Con. Disorder, that hath spoil'd us, friend us now!

Let us on heaps go offer up our lives.

Orl. We are enough yet living in the field To smother up the English in our throngs, 20 If any order might be thought upon.

Bour. The devil take order now! I'll to the throng:

Let life be short, else shame will be too long.
Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter King HENRY and Forces; EXETER, and Others.

K. Hen. Well have we done, thrice-valiant countrymen:

But all's not done; yet keep the French the field.

Exe. The Duke of York commends him to your majesty.

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thrice within this hour

I saw him down, thrice up again and fighting;

From helmet to the spur all blood he was.

Exe. In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie,

Larding the plain; and by his bloody side, Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds, The noble Earl of Suffolk also lies. 10 Suffolk first died; and York, all haggled over,

Comes to him, where in gore he lay in-steep'd,

And takes him by the beard, kisses the gashes

That bloodily did yawn upon his face;

And cries aloud, 'Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk! My soul shall thine keep company to heaven;

Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast, As in this glorious and well-foughten field We kept together in our chivalry!' 19 Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up;

He smil'd me in the face, raught me his hand,

And, with a feeble gripe, says 'Dear my lord,

Commend my service to my sovereign.' So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips;

And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd

A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd Those waters from me which I would have stopp'd;

But I had not so much of man in me, 30

And all my mother came into mine eyes And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen.

I blame you not; For, hearing this, I must perforce compound With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.

Alarum.

But, hark! what new alarum is this same?

The French have reforc'd their scatter'd men:

Then every soldier kill his prisoners!

Give the word through. Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

Flu. Kill the boys and the luggage! 't is expressly against the law of arms: 't is as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offer'd; in your conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'T is certain there's not a boy left alive; and the cowardly rascals that ran from the battle have done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king most worthily hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O! 't is a gallant king. 11

Flu. Ay, he was porn at Monmouth, Captain Gower. What call you the town's name where Alexander the Pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig great? the pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations. 19

Gow. I think Alexander the Great was born in Macedon: his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedon where Alexander is porn. I tell you, captain, if you look in the maps of the 'orld, I warrant you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon, and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth; it is called Wye at Monmouth; but it is out of my prains what is the name of the other river; but 't is all one, 't is alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander, God knows, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeas-ures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicated in his prains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his pest friend, Cleitus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that: he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: as Alexander killed his friend Cleitus, being in his ales and his cups, so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, turned away the fat knight with the great belly-doublet: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveries, and mocks; I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he, I'll tell you there is good men porn at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter King HENRY, with a Part of the English Forces; WARWICK, GLOUCESTER, EXETER, and Others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France

Until this instant. Take a trumpet, herald; Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill: so If they will fight with us, bid them come down.

Or void the field; they do offend our sight. If they'll do neither, we will come to them. And make them skirr away, as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have,

And not a man of them that we shall take Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter MONTJOY.

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glou. His eyes are humbler than they us'd to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald? know'st thou not That I have fin'd these bones of mine for ransom?

Com'st thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king: I come to thee for charitable license,

That we may wander o'er this bloody field To look our dead, and then to bury them;

To sort our nobles from our common men; For many of our princes, woe the while!

Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood; So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs

In blood of princes; and their wounded steeds

Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,

Killing them twice. O! give us leave, great king,

To view the field in safety and dispose Of their dead bodies.

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald, I know not if the day be ours or no;

For yet a many of your horsemen peer And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours. K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength for it!

What is this castle call'd that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it Agincourt.

K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agincourt,

Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the Plack Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most prave pattle here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true. If your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty know, to this hour is an honourable badge of the service; and I do believe your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour;

For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh plood out of your pody. I can tell you that: God pless it and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Cheshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be God, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so! Our heralds go with him:

Bring me just notice of the numbers dead On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

Points to WILLIAMS. Exeunt MONTJOY and Others.

Exe. Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, why wearest thou that glove in thy cap?

Will. An't please your majesty, 't is the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if a' live and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear: or if I can see my glove in his cap, which he swore as he was a soldier he would wear if alive, I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, Captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven and a villain, else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a gentleman as the devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath. If he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain and a Jacksauce as ever his black shoe trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la! 150

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meetest the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain, and is good knowledge, and literated in the wars.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege. Exit. 159

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me and stick it in thy cap. When Alençon and myself were down together I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend of Alençon, and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost me love.

Flu. Your grace does me as great honours as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man that has but two legs that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once, and please God of his grace that I might see. 172

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an't please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. Exit.

K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick, and my brother Gloucester, Follow Fluellen closely at the heels.

The glove which I have given him for a favour 180

May haply purchase him a box o' the ear; it is the soldier's; I by bargain should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:

If that the soldier strike him, as I judge By his blunt bearing he will keep his word;

Some sudden mischief may arise of it; For I do know Fluellen valiant,

And touch'd with choler, hot as gunpowder, And quickly will return an injury:

Follow and see there be no harm between them. 190

Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Before King HENRY'S Pavilion.

Enter GOWER and WILLIAMS.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter FLUELLEN.

Flu. God's will and his pleasure, captain, I peseech you now come apace to the king:

there is more good toward you peradventure than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove! I know the glove is a glove.

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it. Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblood! an arrant traitor as any's in the universal 'orld, or in France, or in England. 11

Gow. How now, sir! you villian!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, Captain Gower: I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat. I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he's a friend of the Duke Alençon's.

Enter WARWICK and GLOUCESTER.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, here is, praised be God for it! a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King HENRY and EXETER.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon. 28

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to in change promised to wear it in his cap: I promised to strike him if he did. I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty's manhood, what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lousy knave it is. I hope your majesty is pear me testimony and witness, and will avouchment that this is the glove of Alençon that your majesty is give me; in your conscience now? 40

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it.

'T was I, indeed, thou promised'st to strike; And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An't please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the 'orld.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine that might offend your majesty. 51

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you, take it for your own fault and not mine: for had you been as I took you for I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me. 60

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,

And give it to this fellow. Keep it, fellow; And wear it for an honour in thy cap Till I do challenge it. Give him the crowns. And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly. Hold, there is twelve pence for you, and I pray you to serve God, and keep you out of prawls, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the petter for you. 71

Will. I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a good will; I can tell you it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, wherefore should you be so pashful? your shoes is not so good: 't is a good silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald, are the dead numbered?

Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French. Delivers a paper.

K. Hen. What prisoners of good sort are taken uncle? 80

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleans, nephew to the king;

John Duke of Bourbon, and Lord Bouciquart;

Of other lords and barons, knights and squires,

Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French

That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number,

And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead One hundred twenty-six: added to these.

Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,

Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which 90

Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights:

So that, in these ten thousand they have lost,

There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries; The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires, And gentlemen of blood and quality.

The names of those their nobles that lie dead:

Charles Delabreth, high constable of France; Jaques of Chatillon, admiral of France;

The master of the cross-bows, Lord Ram-bures;

Great-master of France, the brave Sir Guis-chard Dauphin; 100

John Duke of Alençon; Anthony Duke of Brabant,

The brother to the Duke of Burgundy; And Edward Duke of Bar: of lusty earls, Grandpré and Roussi, Fauconberg and Foix, Beaumont and Marle, Vaudemont and Les- traie.

Here was a royal fellowship of death! Where is the number of our English dead?

Herald presents another paper.

Edward the Duke of York, the Earl of Suffolk,

Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam, esquire: None else of name; and of all other men 110

But five-and-twenty. O God! thy arm was here;

And not to us, but to thy arm alone, Ascribe we all. When, without stratagem,

But in plain shock and even play of battle, Was ever known so great and little loss

On one part and on the other? Take it, God, For it is none but thine!

Exe. 'T is wonderful!

K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village:

And be it death proclaimed through our host To boast of this or take that praise from God

Which is his only. 121

Flu. Is it not lawful, an't please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgment,

That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites: Let there be sung Non nobis and Te Deum;

The dead with charity enclos'd in clay. And then to Calais; and to England then; 130

Where ne'er from France arriv'd more happy men. Exeunt.

ACT V

Enter CHORUS.

Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,

That I may prompt them: and of such as have,

I humbly pray them to admit the excuse Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,

Which cannot in their huge and proper life Be here presented. Now we bear the king

Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen,

Heave him away upon your winged thoughts Athwart the sea. Behold, the English beach

Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys, 10

Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,

Which, like a mighty whiffier, fore the king Seems to prepare his way: so let him land,

And solemnly see him set on to London. So swift a pace hath thought that even now

You may imagine him upon Blackheath; Where that his lords desire him to have

borne

His bruised helmet and his bended sword Before him through the city: he forbids it,

Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;

Giving full trophy, signal and ostent, Quite from himself to God. But now be-

hold,

*In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens.
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Cæsar in;*

*As, by a lower but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,*

As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,

*Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit
To welcome him! much more, and much more cause,*

Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;

*As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of England's stay at home;
The emperor coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them; and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chanc'd, 40
Till Harry's back-return again to France:
There must we bring him; and myself have play'd*

*The interm, by remembering you 't is past.
Then brook abridgement, and your eyes advance,*

After your thoughts, straight back again to France. Exit.

SCENE I.—France. An English Court of Guard.

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, asse my friend, Captain Gower. The rascally, scald, beggarly, lousy, praging knave, Pistol, which you and yourself and all the 'orld know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits, he is come to me and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and pid me eat my leek. It was in a place where I could not preed no contention with him; but I will be so sold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires. 14

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Enter PISTOL.

Flu. 'T is no matter for his swellings nor his turkey-cocks. God pless you, Aunchient Pistol! you scurvy, lousy knave, God pless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou bedlam? dost thou thirst, base Troyan, 20

To have me fold up Parca's fatal web? Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I peseech you heartily, scurvy lousy knave, at my desires and my requests and my petitions to eat, look you, this leek; pe-cause, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections and your appetites and your digestions does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you.

Strikes him.

Will you be so good, scald knave, as eat it?

Pist. Base Troyan, thou shalt die. 32

Flu. You say very true, scald knave, when God's will is. I will desire you to live in the mean time and eat your victuals: come, there is sauce for it.

Strikes him again.

You called me yesterday mountain-squire, but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain: you have astonished him. 41

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days. Bite, I pray you; it is good for your green wound and your ploody coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge. I eat and yet I swear— 50

Flu. Eat, I pray you. Will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see I eat.

Flu. Much good do you, scald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is good for your proken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pist. Good. 60

Flu. Ay, leeks is good. Hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a groat!

Flu. Yes, verily and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy groatin earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God be wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. Exit. 71

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour, and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

Exit. 83

Pist. Doth Fortune play the huswife with me now?

News have I that my Nell is dead i' the spital
Of malady of France;
And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.
Old I do wax, and from my weary limbs
Honour is cudgelled. Well, bawd I'll turn,
And something lean to cut-purse of quick
hand.
To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:
And patches will I get unto these cudgell'd scars,
And swear I got them in the Gallia wars.

Exit.

SCENE II.—Troyes in Champagne. An Apartment in the French King's Palace.

Enter, at one door, King HENRY, BEDFORD, GLOUCESTER, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen ISABEL, the Princess KATHARINE, ALICE, and other Ladies, the Duke of BURGUNDY, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met!
Unto our brother France, and to our sister,
Health and fair time of day; joy and good wishes.
To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine;

And, as a branch and member of this royalty,
By whom this great assembly is contriv'd,
We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy;
And, princes French, and peers, health to you all!

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your face,
Most worthy brother England; fairly met: 10
So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother
England,
Of this good day and of this gracious meet-
ing,

As we are now glad to behold your eyes;
Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in
them
Against the French, that met them in their bent,

The fatal balls of murdering basilisks:
The venom of such looks, we fairly hope,
Have lost their quality, and that this day Shall change all griefs and quarrels into
love. 20

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you.

Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love, Great Kings of France and England! That I have labour'd

With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavours,

To bring your most imperial majesties
Unto this bar and royal interview,
Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.

Since then my office hath so far prevail'd
That face to face, and royal eye to eye, 30
You have congreeted, let it not disgrace me

If I demand before this royal view,
What rub or what impediment there is,
Why that the naked, poor, and mangled
Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties, and joyful
births,
Should not in this best garden of the world,
Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage?
Alas! she hath from France too long been chas'd,

And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility. 40

Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Unpruned dies; her hedges even-pleach'd,
Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair,
Put forth disorder'd twigs; her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock and rank fumitory
Doth root upon, while that the coulter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery;
That even mead, that erst brought sweetly
forth

The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover,

Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank, 50
Conceives by idleness, and nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies,
burs,

Losing both beauty and utility;
And as our vineyards, fallows, meads, and
hedges,

Defective in their natures, grow to wildness;
Even so our houses and ourselves and children

Have lost, or do not learn for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country,

But grow like savages, as soldiers will
That nothing do but meditate on blood, 60
To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural.

Which to reduce into our former favour
You are assembled; and my speech entreats
That I may know the let why gentle Peace
Should not expel these inconveniences,
And bless us with her former qualities.

K. Hen. If, Duke of Burgundy, you would
the peace,

Whose want gives growth to the imperfec-tions

Which you have cited, you must buy that
peace

With full accord to all our just demands; 71
Whose tenours and particular effects
You have, enschedul'd briefly, in your hands.

Bur. The king hath heard them; to the
which as yet

There is no answer made.

K. Hen. Well then the peace,
Which you before so urg'd, lies in his answer.

Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'erglanc'd the articles: pleaseth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed 80
To re-survey them, we will suddenly
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

K. Hen. Brother, we shall. Go, uncle
Exeter,

And brother Clarence, and you, brother Gloucester, Warwick and Huntingdon, go with the king; And take with you free power to ratify, Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best Shall see advantageous for our dignity, Any thing in or out of our demands, And we'll consign thereto. Will you, fair sister,

Go with the princes, or stay here with us?

Q. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them.

Haply a woman's voice may do some good When articles too nicely urg'd be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us:

She is our capital demand, compris'd Within the fore-rank of our articles.

Q. Isa. She hath good leave.

Exeunt all but King HENRY, KATHARINE, and ALICE.

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair, Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms Such as will enter at a lady's ear And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine! if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez-moy, I cannot tell vat is 'like me.'

K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate, and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les anges?

Alice. Ouy, vraiment, sauf vostre grace, ainsi dit-il.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine, and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Ouy; dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de princess.

K. Hen. The princess is the better Englishwoman. P' faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad thou canst speak no better English; for if thou could'st, thou would'st find me such a plain king that thou would'st think I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say 'I love you': then if you urge me further than to say 'Do you in faith?' I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; i' faith, do: and so clap hands and a bargain. How say you, lady?

Kath. Sauf vostre honneur, me understand vell.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses, or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure, and for the other, I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife. Or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off. But, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urg'd, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, to say to thee that I shall die, is true; but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy, for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places; for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rime themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rime is but a ballad. A good leg will fall, a straight back will stoop, a black beard will turn white, a curled pate will grow bald, a fair face will wither, a full eye will wax hollow; but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or rather the sun, and not the moon; for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me; and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king. And what sayest thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I sould love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate; but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France, for I love France so well that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine; and Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Je quand sur le possession de France, et quand vous avez le possession de moi—let me see, what then? Saint Denis be my speed!—donc vostre est France, et vous estes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf vostre honneur, le François que vous parlez est meilleur que l'Anglois lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, faith, is 't not, Kate; but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me: and at night when you come into your closet you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou be'st mine, Kate, as I have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt, I get thee with scrambling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder. Shall not thou and I, between Saint Denis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantinople and take the Turk by the beard? shall we not? what sayest thou, my fair flower-de-luce? 224

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 't is hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a boy, and for my English moiety take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon très cher et divin déesse? 235

Kath. Your majesté ave fausse French enough to deceive de most sage damoiselle dat is en France. 235

K. Hen. Now, fie upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me: therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that when I come to woo ladies I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer-up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better. And therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say 'Harry of England, I am thine': which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud 'England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine'; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music, and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English: wilt thou have me? 286

Kath. Dat is as it sall please de roy mon père.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it sall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen. 271

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez! Ma fou, je ne veux point que vous abaissiez vostre grandeur, en baisant le main d'une vostre indigne serviteur: excusez moy, je vous supplie, mon très puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames et damoiselles, pour estre baisées devant leur noces, il n'est pas le coutume de France. 281

K. Hen. Madam my interpreter, what says she?

Alice. Dat it is not be de fashion pour les ladies of France—I cannot tell vat is baiser in English.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre better que moy.

K. Her. It is not a fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say? 291

Alice. Ouy, vraiment.

K. Hen. O Kate! nice customs court'sy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouth of all find-faults, as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently and yielding.

Kisses her.

You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate; there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father. 306

Re-enter the French King and Queen, BURGUNDY, BEDFORD, GLOUCESTER, EXETER, WESTMORELAND, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty! My royal cousin, teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English. 311

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked and blind. Can you blame her then, being a maid yet rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink and yield, as love is blind and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her: so the maid that stood in the way for my wish shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is 't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article:

His daughter first, and then in sequel all, according to their firm proposed natures.

Exe. Only he hath not yet subscribed this: Where your majesty demands, that the King of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition in French, Notre très cher filz Henry, Roy d'Angleterre, Héritier de France; and thus in Latin, Præclarissimus filius noster Henricus, Rex Angliæ, et Hæres Franciæ.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied.

But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance,

Let that one article rank with the rest; And thereupon give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up

Issue to me; that the contending kingdoms Of France and England, whose very shores

look pale

With envy of each other's happiness,

May cease their hatred, and this dear conjunction

Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord

In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance

His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Now welcome, Kate: and bear me witness all,

That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

Flourish.
Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages,

Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one!

As man and wife, being two, are one in love, So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal

That never may ill office, or fell jealousy, Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage,

Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,

To make divorce of their incorporate league; That English may as French, French Englishmen, Receive each other! God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage: on which day,

My Lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath, And all the peers', for surety of our leagues.

Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me; And may our oaths well kept and prosperous bel!

Sennet. Exeunt.

Enter CHORUS.

Thus far with rough and all-unable pen,
Our bending author hath pursu'd the story;

In little room confining mighty men, Mangling by starts the full course of their

glory;

Small time, but in that small most greatly liv'd

This star of England: Fortune made his sword,

By which the world's best garden he achiev'd,

And of it left his son imperial lord.
Henry the Sixth, in infant bands crown'd

King

Of France and England, did this king succeed:

Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France and made his England bleed:

Which oft our stage hath shown; and, for their sake,

In your fair minds let this acceptance take.
Exit.

THE FIRST PART OF KING HENRY THE SIXTH

THE three parts of Henry VI form, with Richard III, practically one great play of twenty Acts, setting forth dramatically historical events from the death of Henry V to that of Richard III. The group will be best approached by reading in the order named—Richard II, Henry IV, Parts I and II, and Henry V.

Comparatively few critics accept the first part of Henry VI as any other than an old play touched up by Shakespeare. The strongest external evidence that he had any part in it is found in the fact that it was first printed among his plays in the First Folio. This fact, taken in connection with the obvious close relation existing between this play and Part II, in which Shakespeare's hand certainly appears, warrants the belief that Part I as we have it is at least in some particulars the result of Shakespeare's work. To cite but one instance of a connection apparently hitherto overlooked, we may point to the reference in the opening scene of Part I by Winchester to the wife of Gloucester:

"Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe,
More than God or religious churchmen may."

Now this reference to Gloucester's wife is in Part I completely isolated. Gloucester even ignores it in his reply. It seems unaccountable that the writer of Part I should introduce a remark in itself so fraught with possible significance unless he meant later to reveal its import. In the final scene of Part I Gloucester enters strong objections to the proposed marriage of the King with Margaret of France and he speaks disparagingly of her in the presence of Suffolk, whose intrigue with her has been already set forth. Gloucester's objection is overruled and Part I closes with Suffolk about to set out for France and boasting that

"Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm."

Part II opens with Suffolk returned from France with Margaret as queen, a perfectly obvious way of hitching Part II to Part I, even though it were by a different writer. In the second scene of Part II we are introduced for the first time to Eleanor, the wife of Gloucester, whose ambition for her husband presages danger for them both. In the following scene Queen Margaret says to Suffolk:

"Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife."

Here obviously the significance of that apparently unrelated phrase in the opening scene of Part I is being unfolded. The identity of the writer of Part I with the writer of Part II seems better established by such slight and remote connections than by the more obvious intent to continue in Part II the story begun in Part I. It seems fair to assume that the hand that wrote "Thy wife is proud" was prepared at the time to develop that thought later into what proves to be one of the most tragic incidents to be found in the entire group of the Henry VI plays.

Of course Part I has the defects common to all early attempts to dramatize history. It sets forth events chiefly in chronological rather than in logical sequence, trusting that each scene will prove sufficiently interesting in itself and leaving us at the end with the feeling that we have not arrived; and that if indeed we are on the way, no destination has been clearly indicated. This incoherence gives way gradually with Shakespeare's increasing experience in selecting and compressing his material and in characterization and dialogue, until we arrive at such great tragedies as Macbeth and Lear, which are built essentially out of the same materials as make up the chronicle play. And yet, even in this comparatively crude play of Part I we find evidences of the attempt to give logical unity to historical events.

The play opens, for instance, with the funeral of King Henry V, whose exploits in France had been the nation's pride and whose infant son succeeded to the throne under the protectorate of the Duke of Gloucester. It is, of course, for the purpose of securing dramatic unity and effectiveness that Shakespeare has messengers from France arrive and announce over the bier of Henry V events which did not occur until several years after his death. His aim is, of course, to transfer us as speedily as possible to France and show us those events culminating in England's loss of France under the leadership and inspiration of Joan of Arc. If he aimed, however, to make the loss of France of central interest, the play should have concluded with the fourth scene of the fifth Act; that is, with the signing of the "solemn peace." But in the first scene of the play he had also set in motion the differences which are later to develop into the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster. The death of Talbot in France shows how seriously already those factions threaten England. Suffolk's scheme to marry Margaret to King Henry imports still further factional strife. Obviously the play cannot end with the loss of France, but must develop what has already promised to lead to civil war. Having started these disputes Shakespeare must carry them to some conclusion. He is compelled either to leave the play unfinished, or to add another scene which may be variously regarded as an epilogue to Part I or as a prologue to Part II. Later, in King Lear, he was able to carry two separate sets of interest throughout the play, and yet so to interweave them as to make them one. In the present play there are signs that the apprentice will develop into the master, but it is clear that he has still a long way to go.

Many critics who repudiate this play as in no sense by Shakespeare openly rejoice in being thus able to relieve him from all responsibility for the treatment accorded here to Joan of Arc. However repellent some of these scenes may appear to us in the light of our present knowledge, it is sufficient excuse for Shakespeare to say that he would better have satisfied the opinion and taste of the time had he had Joan burned upon the stage. If there is any scene in the play which to us seems to be from some other hand it is not the one commonly regarded as most repellent, the confession scene, but the one in which Joan summons the Fiends to her aid. This seems to us to lack any semblance of even Shakespeare's immature dramatic powers when dealing with such material. Even the confession scene, when carefully considered, leaves Joan in a much better light, and intentionally so, than her English baiters. That human cry of terror which follows Warwick's mention of the faggots, the pitch, the stake and the torture, justifies any device by which she may hope to escape such a death:

"Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?"

The English jests which follow her confession must, to the man who penned them, have set Joan by comparison infinitely above them; and when at last she sees no hope, she summons once more her old fortitude and with high head cries: "Then lead me hence." In her scene with Burgundy earlier in the play Shakespeare has given her two lines which, as the final word to all traitors, merit her immortality:

"Who join'st thou with but with a lordly nation
That will not trust thee but for profit's sake?"

A careful reading of these scenes depicting the patriotic enthusiasm of the French Maid cannot but reveal an underlying sympathy with her on the part of the writer which calls for no apology should that writer prove some day to be none other than Shakespeare.

EXETER; the Earl of WARWICK, the Bishop of WINCHESTER, Heralds, etc.*

Bed. Hung be the heavens with black,
yield day to night!
Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars
That have consented unto Henry's death!
King Henry the Fifth, too famous to live
long!
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.
Glou. England ne'er had a king until his
time.
Virtue he had, deserving to command:

His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams;
His arms spread wider than a dragon's
wings;
His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful
fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? his deeds exceed all
speech:
He ne'er lift up his hand but conquered.
Exe. We mourn in black: why mourn we not in blood?
Henry is dead and never shall revive.
Upon a wooden coffin we attend.
And death's dishonourable victory
We with our stately presence glorify,
Like captives bound to a triumphant car.
What! shall we curse the planets of mishap
That plotted thus our glory's overthrow?
Or shall we think the subtle-witted French

Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magic verses have contriv'd his end?

Win. He was a king bless'd of the King of kings.

Unto the French the dreadful judgment-day
So dreadful will not be as was his sight. 30
The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought:
The church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glou. The church! where is it? had not churchmen pray'd

His thread of life had not so soon decay'd:
None do you like but an effeminate prince,
Whom, like a school-boy, you may overawe.

Win. Gloucester, whate'er we like, thou art protector,
And lookest to command the prince and
realm.

Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe,
More than God or religious churchmen
may. 40

Glou. Name not religion, for thou lov'st
the flesh,

And ne'er throughout the year to church
thou go'st

Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars and rest your minds in peace!

Let's to the altar: heralds, wait on us.
Instead of gold we'll offer up our arms,
Since arms avail not now that Henry's
dead.

Posterity, await for wretched years,
When at their mothers' moist eyes babes
shall suck,

Our isle be made a marish of salt tears, 50
And none but women left to wail the dead.
Henry the Fifth! thy ghost I invoke:
Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils!
Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make
Than Julius Cæsar or bright—

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to
you all!

Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfort:
Guienne, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans, 60
Paris, Guysors, Poitiers, all are quite lost.

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead
Henry's corse?

Speak softly, or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his lead and rise from
death.

Glou. Is Paris lost? is Roan yielded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life again
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost.

Exe. How were they lost? what treachery was us'd?

Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money.

Amongst the soldiers this is muttered, 70
That here you maintain several factions;
And, whilst a field should be dispatch'd and
fought,

You are disputing of your generals.

One would have lingering wars with little
cost;

Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third man thinks, without expense at all,
By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.
Awake, awake, English nobility!

Let not sloth dim your honours new begot:
Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your
arms; 80

Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Exe. Were our tears wanting to this funeral

These tidings would call forth their flowing tides.

Bed. Me they concern. Regent I am of
France.

Give me my steeled coat: I'll fight for
France.

Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Wounds will I lend the French instead of
eyes,

To weep their intermissive miseries.

Enter another Messenger.

Second Mess. Lords, view these letters full of bad mischance.

France is revolted from the English quite, 90
Except some petty towns of no import:
The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims;

The Bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Reignier, Duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The Duke of Alençon flieth to his side.

Exe. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly
to him!

O! whither shall we fly from his reproach?

Glou. We will not fly, but to our enemies'
throats.

Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.

Bed. Gloucester, why doubt'st thou of my forwardness? 100

An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is overrun.

Enter a third Messenger.

Third Mess. My gracious lords, to add to your laments,

Wherewith you now bedew King Henry's hearse,

I must inform you of a dismal fight
Betwix the stout Lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is 't so?

Third Mess. O, no! wherein Lord Talbot was o'erthrown:

The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.
The tenth of August last this dreadful
lord, 110

Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three-and-twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon.

No leisure had he to enrank his men;
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof sharp stakes pluck'd out of
hedges

They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.

More than three hours the fight continued; 120

Where valiant Talbot above human thought
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him;

Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew.

The French exclaim'd the devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood agazed on him.
His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the conquest fully been seal'd
up, 130

If Sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward.

He, being in the vaward, plac'd behind
With purpose to relieve and follow them,
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre:

Enclosed were they with their enemies.
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,

Durst not presume to look once in the face.
Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself, 141

For living idly here in pomp and ease
While such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foeman is betray'd.

Third Mess. O, no! he lives; but is took prisoner,

And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford:

Most of the rest slaughter'd or took likewise.

Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall
pay:

I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne;

His crown shall be the ransom of my friend; 150

Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.

Farewell, my masters; to my task will I;
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast
withal:

Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe
quake.

Third Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieg'd;

The English army is grown weak and faint;
The Earl of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny, 160

Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.
Exe. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn,

Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it; and here take
my leave,

To go about my preparation. Exit.
Glou. I'll to the Tower with all the haste
I can,

To view the artillery and munition;
And then I will proclaim young Henry king.

Exit.
Exe. To Eltham will I, where the young king is, 170

Being ordain'd his special governor;
And for his safety there I'll best devise.

Exit.
Win. Each hath his place and function to attend;

I am left out; for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office.
The king from Eltham I intend to steal,
And sit at chiefest stern of public weal.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—France. Before Orleans.

Flourish. Enter CHARLES, with his Forces;
ALENÇON, REIGNIER, and Others.

Cha. Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens

So in the earth, to this day is not known.
Late did he shine upon the English side;
Now we are victors; upon us he smiles.
What towns of any moment but we have?
At pleasure we lie near Orleans;
Otherwhiles the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,

Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.
Alen. They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves:

Either they must be dieted like mules: 10
And have their provender tied to their mouths,

Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice.
Reig. Let's raise the siege: why live we idly here?

Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear:
Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury,
And he may well in fretting spend his gall;

Nor men nor money hath he to make war.
Cha. Sound, sound alarum! we will rush on them.

Now for the honour of the forlorn French!
Him I forgive my death that killeth me 20
When he sees me go back one foot or fly.

Exeunt.

Alarums. Excursions; afterwards a retreat. Re-enter CHARLES, ALENÇON, REIGNIER, and Others.

Cha. Who ever saw the like? what men
have I!

Dogs! cowards! dastards! I would ne'er have fled

But that they left me 'midst my enemies.
Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;

He fighteth as one weary of his life:
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alen. Froissart, a countryman of ours,
records,

England all Olivers and Rowlands bred 30
During the time Edward the Third did reign.

More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons and Goliases
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!

Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose

They had such courage and audacity?

Cha. Let's leave this town; for they are hare-brain'd slaves,

And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:

Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down than forsake the siege. 40

Reig. I think, by some odd gimmals or device

Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on;

Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do.
By my consent, we'll e'en let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of ORLEANS.

Bast. Where's the Prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

Cha. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

Bast. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd:

Hath the late overthrow wrought this effence?

Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand: 50
A holy maid hither with me I bring,

Which by a vision sent to her from heaven
Ordained is to raise this tedious siege,

And drive the English forth the bounds of France.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome;

What's past and what's to come she can descry.

Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words,
For they are certain and unfallible.

Cha. Go, call her in. Exit Bastard.

But first, to try her skill, 60
Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:

Question her proudly; let thy looks be stern

By this means shall we sound what skill she hath. Retires.

Re-enter the Bastard of ORLEANS, with JOAN LA PUCELLE and Others.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats?

Joan. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?

Where is the Dauphin? Come, come from behind;

I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me:

In private will I talk with thee apart.
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave

awhile. 70

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Joan. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter,

My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.
Heaven and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd

To shine on my contemptible estate:
Lo! whilst I waited on my tender lambs,

And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,

God's mother deign'd to appear to me,
And in a vision full of majesty

Will'd me to leave my base vocation 80
And free my country from calamity:

Her aid she promis'd and assur'd success;
In complete glory she reveal'd herself;

And, whereas I was black and swart before,
With those clear rays which she infus'd on

me,
That beauty am I bless'd with which you

see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible

And I will answer unpremeditated:
My courage try by combat, if thou dar'st,

And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex. 90
Resolve on this, thou shalt be fortunate

If thou receive me for thy war-like mate.
Cha. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms,

Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,

In single combat thou shalt buckle with me,
And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true;

Otherwise I renounce all confidence.
Joan. I am prepar'd: here is my keen-edg'd sword,

Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side;

The which at Touraine, in Saint Katharine's

churchyard, 100
Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

Cha. Then come, o' God's name; I fear no woman.

Joan. And while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.

Here they fight, and JOAN LA PUCELLE overcomes.

Cha. Stay, stay thy hands! thou art an Amazon,

And fightest with the sword of Deborah.
Joan. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak.

Cha. Whoe'er helps thee, 't is thou that must help me.

Impatiently I burn with thy desire;

My heart and hands thou hast at once subdued.

Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so, 110
Let me thy servant and not sovereign be:

'T is the French Dauphin sueth to thee thus.
Joan. I must not yield to any rites of love,

For my profession's sacred from above:
When I have chased all thy foes from hence,

Then will I think upon a recompense.
Cha. Meantime look gracious on thy prostrate thrall.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless he shrives this woman to her smock;

Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech. 120

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?

Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know:

These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?

Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Joan. Why, no, I say: distrustful recreants!

Fight till the last gasp; I will be your guard.

Cha. What she says I'll confirm: we'll fight it out.

Joan. Assign'd am I to be the English scourge.

This night the siege assuredly I'll raise: 130
Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days,

Since I have entered into these wars.

Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself

Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

With Henry's death the English circle ends;

Dispersed are the glories it included.

Now am I like that proud insulting ship

Which Cæsar and his fortune bare at once.

Cha. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove? 140

Thou with an eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the mother of great Constantine,

Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters were like thee.

Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth,

How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays and let us raise the siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our honours;

Drive them from Orleans and be immortaliz'd.

Cha. Presently we'll try. Come, let's away about it:

No prophet will I trust if she prove false. 150
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—London. Before the Tower.

Enter, at the gates, the Duke of GLOUCESTER, with his Servingmen, in blue coats.

Glou. I am come to survey the Tower this day;

Since Henry's death, I fear, there is conveyance.

Where be these warders that they wait not here?

Open the gates! 'T is Gloucester that calls.

First Ward. Within. Who's there that knocks so imperiously?

First Serv. It is the noble Duke of Gloucester.

Second Ward. Within. Whoe'er he be, you may not be let in.

First Serv. Villains, answer you so the lord protector?

First Ward. Within. The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd. 10

Glou. Who willed you? or whose will stands but mine?

There's none protector of the realm but I.

Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize.

Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill grooms?

GLOUCESTER'S Men rush at the Tower gates, and WOODVILLE the Lieutenant speaks within.

Wood. What noise is this? what traitors have we here?

Glou. Lieutenant, is it you whose voice I hear?

Open the gates! here's Gloucester that would enter.

Wood. Have patience, noble duke; I may not open;

The Cardinal of Winchester forbids:

From him I have express commandement 20

That thou nor none of thine shall be let in.

Glou. Faint-hearted Woodville, prizest him 'fore me?

Arrogant Winchester, that haughty prelate, Whom Henry, our late sovereign, ne'er could brook?

Thou art no friend to God or to the king:

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

First Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector,

Or we'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter WINCHESTER, attended by Servingmen in tawny coats.

Win. How now, ambitious Humphrey! what means this?

Glou. Peel'd priest, dost thou command me to be shut out? 30

Win. I do, thou most usurping proditor, And not protector, of the king or realm.

Glou. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator,

Thou that contriv'dst to murder our dead lord;

Thou that giv'st whores indulgences to sin:

I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,

If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Win. Nay, stand thou back; I will not budge a foot:

This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain, To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt. 40

Glou. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee back:

Thy scarlet robes as a child's bearing-cloth I'll use to carry thee out of this place.

Win. Do what thou dar'st; I beard thee to thy face.

Glou. What! am I dar'd and bearded to my face?

Draw, men, for all this privileged place; Blue coats to tawny coats. Priest, beware your beard;

GLOUCESTER and his Men attack the Cardinal.

I mean to tug it and to cuff you soundly.

Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat,

In spite of pope or dignities of church: 50
Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down.

Win. Gloucester, thou 'lt answer this before the pope.

Glou. Winchester goose! I cry, a rope! a rope!

Now beat them hence; why do you let them stay?

Thou 'lt chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's array.

Out, tawny coats! out, scarlet hypocrite!

Here GLOUCESTER'S Men beat out the Cardinal's Men, and enter in the hurly-burly the Mayor of London and his Officers.

May. Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumeliously should break the peace!

Glou. Peace, mayor! thou know'st little of my wrongs.

Here's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king,

Hath here distrain'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here's Gloucester, a foe to citizens; One that still motions war and never peace, O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,

That seeks to overthrow religion Because he is protector of the realm, And would have armour here out of the Tower,

To crown himself king and suppress the prince.

Glou. I will not answer thee with words, but blows. Here they skirmish again.

May. Nought rests for me in this tumultuous strife

But to make open proclamation. Come, officer; as loud as e'er thou canst, Cry.

Off. All manner of men, assembled here in arms this day against God's peace and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use any sword, weapon, or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glou. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law;

But we shall meet and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloucester, we will meet; to thy cost, be sure;

Thy heart-blood I will have for this day's work.

May. I'll call for clubs if you will not away.

This cardinal's more haughty than the devil.

Glou. Mayor, farewell: thou dost but what thou may'st.

Win. Abominable Gloucester! guard thy head;

For I intend to have it ere long.

Exeunt severally, GLOUCESTER and WINCHESTER, with their Servingmen.

May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.

Good God! these nobles should such stomachs bear;

I myself fight not once in forty year.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—France. Before Orleans.

Enter, on the walls, the Master-Gunner and his Boy.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieg'd,

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Boy. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them,

Howe'er unfortunate I miss'd my aim.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou rul'd by me:

Chief master-gunner am I of this town; Something I must do to procure me grace.

The prince's espials have informed me How the English, in the suburbs close in-trench'd,

Wont through a secret grate of iron bars to In yonder tower to overpeer the city,

And thence discover how with most advantage

They may vex us with shot or with assault. To intercept this inconvenience,

A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd; And fully even these three days have I watch'd

If I could see them. Now, boy, do thou watch,

For I can stay no longer.

If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word; I And thou shalt find me at the governor's.

Exit.

Boy. Father, I warrant you; take you no care; I'll never trouble you if I may spy them.

Exit.

Enter, on the turrets, the Lords SALISBURY and TALBOT; Sir WILLIAM GLANSDALE, Sir THOMAS GARGRAVE, and Others.

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy! again return'd!

How wert thou handled being prisoner, Or by what means gott'st thou to be releas'd,

Discourse, I prithee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The Duke of Bedford had a prisoner Called the brave Lord Ponton de Santraillies;

For him I was exchang'd and ransomed. But with a baser man of arms by far

Once in contempt they would have barter'd me;

Which I disdain'd scorn'd, and craved death

Rather than I would be so vile-esteem'd.

In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.

But, O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart:

Whom with my bare fists I would execute If I now had him brought into my power.

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not how thou wert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffs and scorns and contumelious taunts.

In open market-place produc'd they me, To be a public spectacle to all:

Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scarecrow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me,
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the
ground,

To hurl at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden
death.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread

That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant;
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had,
That walk'd about me every minute-while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a linstock.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd;

But we will be reveng'd sufficiently.
Now it is supper-time in Orleans:
Here, through this grate, I count each one
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify:
Let us look in; the sight will much delight
thee.

Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William
Glansdale,

Let me have your express opinions
Where is best place to make our battery
next.

Gar. I think at the north gate; for there stand lords.

Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.

Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd

Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.

Here they shoot. SALISBURY and Sir THOMAS GARGRAVE fall.

Sal. O Lord! have mercy on us, wretched sinners.

Gar. O Lord! have mercy on me, woeful
man.

Tal. What chance is this that suddenly hath cross'd us?

Speak, Salisbury; at least, if thou canst
speak:

How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?
One of thy eyes and thy cheek's side struck off!

Accursed tower! accursed fatal hand
That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame;
Henry the Fifth he first train'd to the wars;
Whilst any trump did sound or drum struck
up,

His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.

Yet liv'st thou Salisbury? though thy speech
doth fail,

One eye thou hast to look to heaven for
grace:

The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.
Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands!
Bear hence his body; I will help to bury it.

Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort:
Thou shalt not die whiles—

He beckons with his hand and smiles on
me,

As who should say 'When I am dead and
gone,

Remember to avenge me on the French.'
Plantagenet, I will; and like thee, Nero,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:

Wretched shall France be only in my name.
An alarm; it thunders and lightens.

What stir is this? what tumult's in the heavens?

Whence cometh this alarm and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord! the French have gather'd head:

The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle
join'd,

A holy prophetess new risen up
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

Here SALISBURY lifteth himself up and groans.

Tal. Hear, hear how dying Salisbury doth groan!

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd.
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you;

Pucelle or puzzle, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels

And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.

Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we'll try what these dastard
Frenchmen dare.

Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.

SCENE V.—The Same. Before one of the Gates.

*Alarm. Skirmishings. TALBOT pursues
the DAUPHIN, drives him in and exit:
then enter JOAN LA PUELLE, driving Englishmen before her, and exit after them. Then re-enter TALBOT.*

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?

Our English troops retire, I cannot stay
them;

A woman clad in armour chaseth them.

Re-enter JOAN LA PUELLE.

Here, here she comes. I'll have a bout
with thee;

Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a witch,

And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Joan. Come, come; 't is only I that must disgrace thee.

They fight.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail?

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,

And from my shoulders crack my arms
asunder,

But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.
They fight again.

Joan. Talbot, farwell; thy hour is not yet come:

I must go victual Orleans forthwith.

A short alarum: then enter the town with soldiers.

O'ertake me if thou canst; I scorn thy strength.

Go, go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men; Help Salisbury to make his testament: This day is ours, as many more shall be.

Exit.

Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;

I know not where I am, nor what I do: 20
A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troops and conquers as she lists:

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,

Are from their hives and houses driven away.

They call'd us for our fierceness English dogs;

Now, like to whelps, we crying run away.

A short alarum.

Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight
Or tear the lions out of England's coat;
Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead:

Sheep run not half so treacherous from the wolf, 30

Or horse or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.

Alarum. Another skirmish.

It will not be: retire into your trenches;
You all consented unto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.

Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans
In spite of us or aught that we could do.
O! would I were to die with Salisbury.
The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

Alarum. Retreat. Exeunt TALBOT and his Forces.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Flourish. Enter, on the walls, JOAN LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, REIGNIER, ALENÇON, and Soldiers.

Joan. Advance our waving colours on the walls;

Rescu'd is Orleans from the English.

Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.

Cha. Divinest creature, Astræa's daughter,

How shall I honour thee for this success?
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next.

France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess!
Recover'd is the town of Orleans:

More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state. 10

Reig. Why ring not out the bells aloud throughout the town?

Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires

And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

Alen. All France will be replete with mirth and joy,

When they shall hear how we have play'd the men.

Cha. 'T is Joan, not we, by whom the day is won;

For which I will divide my crown with her;
And all the priests and friars in my realm

Shall in procession sing her endless praise. 20
A statelier pyramis to her I'll rear

Than Rhodope's or Memphis' ever was:
In memory of her when she is dead,

Her ashes, in an urn more precious
Than the rich-jewell'd coffer of Darius,

Transported shall be at high festivals
Before the kings and queens of France.

No longer on Saint Denis will we cry,
But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint.

Come in, and let us banquet royally 30
After this golden day of victory.

Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT II

SCENE I.—Before Orleans.

Enter to the gates, a French Sergeant, and two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places and be vigilant.

If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the walls, by some apparent sign

Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
First Sent. Sergeant, you shall.

Exit Sergeant.

Thus are poor servitors,

When others sleep upon their quiet beds,
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, and Forces, with scaling-ladders; their drums beating a dead march.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubted Burgundy,

By whose approach the regions of Artois,
Walloon, and Picardy, are friends to us, 10

This happy night the Frenchmen are secure:
Having all day carous'd and banqueted:

Embrace we then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit

Contriv'd by art and baleful sorcery.
Bed. Coward of France! how much he wrongs his fame,

Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,

To join with witches and the help of hell!
Bur. Traitors have never other company.

But what's that Pucelle whom they term so pure? 20

Tal. A maid, they say.

Bed. A maid, and be so martial!

Bur. Pray God she prove not masculine ere long,

If underneath the standard of the French
She carry armour as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits; God is our fortress, in whose conquering
name

Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee.

Tal. Not all together: better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several
ways, 30

That if it chance the one of us do fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed. I'll to yond corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.

Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appear
How much in duty I am bound to both.

The English scale the walls, crying 'Saint George!' 'A Talbot!' and all enter the town.

Sent. Within. Arm, arm! the enemy doth make assault!

The French leap over the walls in their shirts. Enter, several ways, the Bastard of ORLEANS, ALENÇON, REIGNIER, half ready, and half unready.

Alen. How now, my lords! what! all unready so?

Bast. Unready! ay, and glad we 'scap'd
so well. 40

Reig. 'T was time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds,

Hearing alarums at our chamber-doors.

Alen. Of all exploits since first I follow'd
arms,

Ne'er heard I of a war-like enterprise
More venturous or desperate than this.

Bast. I think this Talbot be a fiend of hell.

Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure,
favour him.

Alen. Here cometh Charles: I marvel
how he sped.

Bast. Tut! holy Joan was his defensive guard.

Enter CHARLES and JOAN LA PUCELLE.

Cha. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame? 50

Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal,
Make us partakers of a little gain,

That now our loss might be ten times so much?

Joan. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?

At all times will you have my power alike?
Sleeping or waking must I still prevail.

Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?
Improvident soldiers! had your watch been
good,

This sudden mischief never could have fallen.

Cha. Duke of Alençon, this was your default, 60

That, being captain of the watch to-night,
Did look no better to that weighty charge.

Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept

As that whereof I had the government,
We had not been thus shamefully surpris'd.

Bast. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my lord.

Cha. And for myself, most part of all this
night,

Within her quarter and mine own precinct
I was employ'd in passing to and fro,

About relieving of the sentinels: 70

Then how or which way should they first break in?

Joan. Question, my lords, no further of
the case,

How or which way: 't is sure they found some place

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made.

And now there rests no other shift but this;
To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dis-
pers'd,

And lay new platforms to endamage them.

*Alarum. Enter an English Soldier, crying
'A Talbot! A Talbot!' They fly, leaving their clothes behind.*

Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils, 80

Using no other weapon but his name. Exit.

SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the Town.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, a Captain, and Others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night
is fled,

Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit. Retreat sounded.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury,

And here advance it in the market-place,
The middle centre of this cursed town.

Now have I paid my vow unto his soul;
For every drop of blood was drawn from
him

There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-
night.

And that hereafter ages may behold 10

What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,
Within their chiefest temple I'll erect

A tomb wherein his corpse shall be interr'd:
Upon the which, that every one may read,

Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans,
The treacherous manner of his mournful
death,

And what a terror he had been to France.
But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,

I muse we met not with the Dauphin's grace,
His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc, 20

Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. 'T is thought, Lord Talbot, when the fight began,

Rous'd on the sudden from their drowsy beds.

They did amongst the troops of armed men Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bur. Myself, as far as I could well discern For smoke and dusky vapours of the night, Am sure I scar'd the Dauphin and his trull, When arm in arm they both came swiftly running.

Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves 30 That could not live asunder day or night. After that things are set in order here, We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this princely train

Call ye the war-like Talbot, for his acts So much applauded through the realm of France?

Tal. Here is the Talbot: who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, Countess of Auvergne,

With modesty admiring thy renown, By me entreats, great lord thou would'st vouchsafe 40

To visit her poor castle where she lies, That she may boast she hath beheld the man Whose glory fills the world with loud report. Bur. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see our wars

Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport, When ladies crave to be encounter'd with. You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for when a world of men

Could not prevail with all their oratory, Yet hath a woman's kindness over-ru'd. 50 And therefore tell her, I return great thanks, And in submission will attend on her.

Will not your honours bear me company? Bed. No, truly, it is more than manners will;

And I have heard it said, unbidden guests Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,

I mean to prove this lady's courtesy. Come hither, captain. Whispers.

You perceive my mind. Cap. I do, my lord, and mean accordingly. Exeunt. 60

SCENE III.—Auvergne. Court of the Castle.

Enter the COUNTESS and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge;

And when you have done so, bring the keys to me.

Port. Madam, I will. Exit.

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out right,

I shall as famous be by this exploit

As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus' death. Great is the rumour of this dreadful knight, And his achievements of no less account: Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,

To give their censure of these rare reports. 10

Enter Messenger and TALBOT.

Mess. Madam,

According as your ladyship desir'd, By message crav'd, so is Lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the man?

Mess. Madam, it is.

Count. Is this the scourge of France? Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad That with his name the mothers still their babes?

I see report is fabulous and false: I thought I should have seen some Hercules, A second Hector, for his grim aspect, 20 And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.

Alas! this is a child, a silly dwarf: It cannot be this weak and writhled shrimp Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you;

But since your ladyship is not at leisure, I'll sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What means he now? Go ask him whither he goes.

Mess. Stay, my Lord Talbot; for my lady craves

To know the cause of your abrupt departure. 30

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,

I go to certify her Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter with keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.

Tal. Prisoner! to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord; And for that cause I train'd thee to my house.

Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,

For in my gallery thy picture hangs: But now the substance shall endure the like,

And I will chain these legs and arms of thine, That hast by tyranny these many years 40

Wasted our country, slain our citizens, And sent our sons and husbands captive.

Tal. Ha, ha, ha!

Count. Laughest thou, wretch? thy mirth shall turn to moan.

Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow

Whereon to practise your severity. Count. Why, art not thou the man?

Tal. I am, indeed.

Count. Then have I substance too.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself: 50

You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here;

For what you see is but the smallest part
And least proportion of humanity.

I tell you, madam, were the whole frame
here,

It is of such a spacious lofty pitch,
Your roof were not sufficient to contain it.

Count. This is a riddling merchant for the nonce;

He will be here, and yet he is not here:
How can these contrarieties agree?

Tal. That will I show you presently. 60

He winds his horn. Drums strike up; a peal of ordnance. The gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded

That Talbot is but shadow of himself?

These are his substance, sinews, arms, and
strength,

With which he yoketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns,
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot, pardon my abuse:

I find thou art no less than fame hath bruted,

And more than may be gather'd by thy shape.

Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;

For I am sorry that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue

The mind of Talbot as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.

What you have done hath not offended me;
No other satisfaction do I crave,

But only, with your patience, that we may Taste of your wine and see what cates you have;

For soldiers' stomachs always serve them
well.

Count. With all my heart, and think me honoured

To feast so great a warrior in my house.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. The Temple Garden.

Enter the Earls of SOMERSET, SUFFOLK, and WARWICK; RICHARD PLANTA-GENET, VERNON, and a Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords and gentlemen, what means this silence?

Dare no man answer in a case of truth?

Suf. Within the Temple hall we were too loud;

The garden here is more convenient.

Plan. Then say at once if I maintain'd the truth,

Or else was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Suf. Faith, I have been a truant in the law,
And never yet could frame my will to it;

And therefore frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my Lord of Warwick,
then, between us.

War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;

Between two dogs, which hath the deeper
mouth;

Between two blades, which bears the better temper;

Between two horses, which doth bear him
best;

Between two girls, which hath the merriest
eye;

I have perhaps some shallow spirit of judg-
ment;

But in these nice sharp quilllets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plan. Tut, tut! here is a mannerly forbearance:

The truth appears so naked on my side 20
That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well ap-parel'd,

So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's
eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-tied and so loath to speak,

In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts;
Let him that is a true-born gentleman

And stands upon the honour of his birth,
If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,

From off this brier pluck a white rose with
me.

Som. Let him that is no coward nor no
flatterer,

But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.

War. I love no colours, and without all colour

Of base insinuating flattery
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.

Suf. I pluck this red rose with young
Somerset,

And say withal I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen, and pluck no more

Till you conclude that he, upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree,

Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well objected:

If I have fewest I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I.

Ver. Then for the truth and plainness of
the case,

I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here,
Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck
it off,

Lest bleeding you do paint the white rose red,

And fall on my side so, against your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt,

And keep me on the side still where I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: who else?

Law. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you held was wrong in
you;

In sign whereof I pluck a white rose too.

Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here in my scabbard; meditating that Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red.

Plan. Meantime your cheeks do counterfeit our roses;

For pale they look with fear, as witnessing The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet, 'T is not for fear but anger that thy cheeks Blush for pure shame to counterfeit our roses,

And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;

Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding roses,

That shall maintain what I have said is true, Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,

I scorn thee and thy faction, peevish boy.

Suf. Turn not thy scorns this way, Plantagenet.

Plan. Proud Pole, I will, and scorn both him and thee.

Suf. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away! good William de la Pole;

We grace the yeoman by conversing with him.

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him, Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel, Duke of Clarence,

Third son to the third Edward, King of England.

Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root?

Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,

Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words

On any plot of ground in Christendom.

Was not thy father, Richard, Earl of Cambridge;

For treason executed in our late king's days?

And by his treason stand'st not thou attainted,

Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry?

His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;

And, till thou be restor'd, thou art a yeoman.

Plan. My father was attached, not attainted,

Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;

And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,

Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.

For your partaker Pole and you yourself, 100 I'll note you in my book of memory.

To scourge you for this apprehension:

Look to it well and say you are well warn'd.

Som. Ah, thou shalt find us ready for thee still,

And know us by these colours for thy foes;

For these my friends in spite of thee shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,

As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,

Will I for ever and my faction wear,

Until it whither with me to my grave 110 Or flourish to the height of my degree.

Suf. Go forward, and be chok'd with thy ambition:

And so farewell until I meet thee next. Exit.

Som. Have with thee, Pole. Farewell, ambitious Richard. Exit.

Plan. How I am brav'd and must perforce endure it!

War. This blot that they object against your house

Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament,

Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloucester;

And if thou be not then created York,

I will not live to be accounted Warwick. 120

Meantime, in signal of my love to thee,

Against proud Somerset and William Pole,

Will I upon thy party wear this rose.

And here I prophesy: this brawl to-day,

Grown to this faction in the Temple garden,

Shall send between the red rose and the white

A thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plan. Good Master Vernon, I am bound to you,

That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.

Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same. 130

Law. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, let us four to dinner: I dare say

This quarrel will drink blood another day.

Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Tower of London.

Enter MORTIMER, brought in a chair by two Gaolers.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,

Let dying Mortimer here rest himself.

Even like a man new haled from the rack,

So fare my limbs with long imprisonment;

And these grey locks, the pursuivants of death,

Nestor-like aged in an age of care,

Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,

Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent;

Weak shoulders, overborne with burdening grief, 10

And pitiless arms, like to a wither'd vine

That droops his sapless branches to the ground:

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay
is numb,

Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As witting I no other comfort have.

But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?
First Gaol. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come:

We sent unto the temple, unto his chamber,
And answer was return'd that he will
come. 20

Mor. Enough; my soul shall then be satisfied.

Poor gentleman! his wrong doth equal
mine.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had;
And even since then hath Richard been ob-scur'd,

Depriv'd of honour and inheritance:

But now the arbitrator of despairs,
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me
hence. 30

I would his troubles likewise were expir'd,
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET.

First Gaol. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your nephew, late despised Richard, comes.

Mor. Direct mine arms I may embrace his neck,

And in his bosom spend my latter gasp:
O! tell me when my lips do touch his cheeks,

That I may kindly give one fainting kiss. 40
And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock,

Why didst thou say of late thou wert despis'd?

Plan. First, lean thine aged back against mine arm,

And in that ease I'll tell thee my disease.
This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and
me;

Among which terms he us'd his lavish
tongue

And did upbraid me with my father's death:
Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him. 50

Therefore, good uncle, for my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,

And for alliance sake, declare the cause
My father, Earl of Cambridge, lost his
head.

Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that im-
prison'd me,

And hath detain'd me all my flow'ring youth
Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
Was cursed instrument of his decease.

Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was,

For I am ignorant and cannot guess. 60

Mor. I will, if that my fading breath permit,

And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, grandfather to this king,
Depos'd his nephew Richard, Edward's son,

The first-begotten and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent:

During whose reign the Percies of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,

Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne.
The reason mov'd these war-like lords to
this 70

Was, for that, young King Richard thus re-
mov'd,

Leaving no heir begotten of his body,
I was the next by birth and parentage;

For by my mother I derived am
From Lionel, Duke of Clarence, the third
son

To King Edward the Third; whereas he From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,

Being but fourth of that heroic line.
But mark: as in this haughty great attempt

They labour'd to plant the rightful heir, 80
I lost my liberty and they their lives.

Long after this, when Henry the Fifth,
Succeeding his father Bolingbroke, did reign,

Thy father, Earl of Cambridge, then deriv'd From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of York,

Marrying my sister that thy mother was,
Again in pity of my hard distress

Levied an army, weening to redeem
And have install'd me in the diadem;

But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl, 90
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,

In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.

Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True; and thou seest that I no issue have,

And that my fainting words do warrant
death.

Thou art my heir; the rest I wish thee
gather:

But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail
with me:

But yet methinks my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny. 100

Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic;

Strong-fixed is the house of Lancaster,
And like a mountain, not to be remov'd.

But now thy uncle is removing hence,
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd

With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O, uncle! would some part of my young years

Might but redeem the passage of your age.

Mor. Thou dost then wrong me, as that slaughterer doth

Which giveth many wounds when one will kill. 110

Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;
Only give order for my funeral:

And so farewell; and fair be all thy hopes,
And prosperous be thy life in peace and war!

Dies.

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soul!

In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage,
And like a hermit overpass'd thy days.
Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast;
And what I do imagine let that rest.
Keepers, convey him hence; and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life. 121

Exeunt Gaolers, bearing out the body of MORTIMER.

Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort:
And for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,
I doubt not but with honour to redress;
And therefore haste I to the parliament,
Either to be restored to my blood,
Or make my ill the advantage of my good.

Exit.

ACT III

SCENE I.—London. The Parliament House.

Flourish. Enter King HENRY, EXETER, GLOUCESTER, WARWICK, SOMERSET, and SUFFOLK; the Bishop of WINCHES-TER, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, and Others. GLOUCESTER offers to put up a bill; WINCHESTER snatches it, and tears it.

Win. Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets studiously devis'd,
Humphrey of Gloucester? If thou canst accuse,

Or aught intend'st to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention, suddenly;
As I with sudden and extemporal speech
Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glou. Presumptuous priest! this place commands my patience

Or thou should'st find thou hast dishonour'd
me.

Think not, although in writing I preferr'd 10
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able

Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen:
No, prelate; such is thy audacious wicked-
ness,

Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissentious
pranks,

As very infants prattle of thy pride.
Thou art a most pernicious usurer,
Froward by nature, enemy to peace;
Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseems
A man of thy profession and degree: 20
And for thy treachery, what's more manifest?

In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life,
As well at London-bridge as at the Tower.
Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,

The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloucester, I do defy thee. Lords, vouchsafe

To give me hearing what I shall reply.
If I were covetous, ambitious, or perverse,
As he will have me, how am I so poor? 38
Or how haps it I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted call-
ing?

And for dissension, who preferreth peace
More than I do, except I be provok'd?
No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
It is not that that hath incens'd the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one but he should be about the king;
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations
forth. 40

But he shall know I am as good—
Glou. As good!

Thou bastard of my grandfather!
Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I
pray,

But one imperious in another's throne?
Glou. Am I not protector, saucy priest?

Win. And am not I a prelate of the church?

Glou. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloucester!

Glou. Thou art reverent, Touching thy spiritual function, not thy
life. 50

Win. Rome shall remedy this.

War. Roam thither then.

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

War. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.
Som. Methinks my lord should be religious,

And know the office that belongs to such.
War. Methinks his lordship should be humbler;

It fitteth not a prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near.

War. State holy or unhallow'd, what of
that?

Is not his grace protector to the king? 60

Plan. Aside. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue.

Lest it be said, 'Speak, sirrah, when you should;

Must your bold verdict enter talk with
lords?' 65

Else would I have a fling at Winchester.

K. Hen. Uncles of Gloucester and of Winchester,

The special watchmen of our English weal,
I would prevail, if prayers might prevail.

To join your hearts in love and amity.
O! what a scandal is it to our crown, 70

That two such noble peers as ye should jar.
Believe me, lords, my tender years can
tell

Civil dissension is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.

A noise within. 'Down with the tawny coats!'
What tumult's this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant,

Begun through malice of the bishop's men.
A noise again. 'Stones! stones!'

Enter the Mayor of London, attended.

May. O! my good lords, and virtuous
Henry. Pity the city of London, pity us.
The bishop and the Duke of Gloucester's
men,

Forbidden late to carry any weapon,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones, 80
And banding themselves in contrary parts
Do pelt so fast at one another's pate,
That many have their giddy brains knock'd
out:

Our windows are broke down in every street,
And we for fear compell'd to shut our shops.

Enter, skirmishing, the Servingmen of GLOUCESTER and WINCHESTER, with bloody pates.

K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourselves,
To hold your slaught'ring hands and keep
the peace.

Pray, uncle Gloucester, mitigate this strife.
First Serv. Nay, if we be forbidden stones,
we'll fall to it with our teeth. 90

Second Serv. Do what ye dare; we are as resolute.

Glou. You of my household, leave this peevish broil,
And set this unaccustom'd fight aside.

First Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man

Just and upright, and, for your royal birth,
Inferior to none but to his majesty;

And ere that we will suffer such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal,

To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate, 99
We and our wives and children all will fight,

And have our bodies slaughter'd by thy foes.
Third Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails

Shall pitch a field when we are dead.

Glou. Stay, stay, I say!
Skirmish again.

And if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear awhile.

K. Hen. O! how this discord doth afflict
my soul.

Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
My sighs and tears and will not once relent?

Who should be pitiful if you be not?
Or who should study to prefer a peace 110

If holy churchmen take delight in broils?
War. Yield, my lord protector; yield,
Winchester;

Except you mean with obstinate repulse
To slay your sovereign and destroy the realm.

You see what mischief and what murder too
Hath been enacted through your enmity:

Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.
Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glou. Compassion on the king commands me stoop;

Or I would see his heart out ere the priest 120
Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the
duke

Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,
As by his smoothed brows it doth appear:

Why look you still so stern and tragical?
Glou. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my
hand.

K. Hen. Fie, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you preach

That malice was a great and grievous sin;
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,

But prove a chief offender in the same? 130
War. Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird.

For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent!
What! shall a child instruct you what to do?

Win. Well, Duke of Gloucester, I will yield to thee;

Love for thy love and hand for hand I give.
Glou. Aside. Ay; but, I fear me, with a hollow heart.

See here, my friends and loving country-
men,

This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves and all our followers.

So help me God, as I dissemble not! 140
Win. Aside. So help me God, as I intend
it not!

K. Hen. O loving uncle, kind Duke of Gloucester,

How joyful am I made by this contract!
Away, my masters! trouble us no more;

But join in friendship, as your lords have
done.

First Serv. Content: I'll to the surgeon's.
Second Serv. And so will I.

Third Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords.

Exeunt Mayor, Servingmen, etc.
War. Accept this scroll, most gracious
sovereign, 149

Which in the right of Richard Plantagenet
We do exhibit to your majesty.

Glou. Well urg'd, my Lord of Warwick:
for, sweet prince,

An if your grace mark every circumstance,
You have great reason to do Richard right;

Especially for those occasions
At Eltham-place I told your majesty.

K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of force:

Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is
That Richard be restored to his blood. 159

War. Let Richard be restored to his blood;
So shall his father's wrongs be recompens'd.

Win. As will the rest, so willeth Winchester.

K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that
alone,

But all the whole inheritance I give
That doth belong unto the house of York,

From whence you spring by lineal descent.
Plan. Thy humble servant, vows obedience

And humble service till the point of death.

K. Hen. Stoop then and set your knee against my foot;

And, in requerd of that duty done, 170
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York:
Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet,
And rise created princely Duke of York.

Plan. And so thrive Richard as thy foes may fall!
And as my duty springs, so perish they
That grudge one thought against your majesty!

All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty Duke of York!

Som. Aside. Perish, base prince, ignoble Duke of York!

Glou. Now will it best avail your majesty
To cross the seas and to be crown'd in France. 180

The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his royal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies.

K. Hen. When Gloucester says the word,
King Henry goes;

For friendly counsel cuts off many foes.

Glou. Your ships already are in readiness.

Flourish. Exeunt all but EXETER.

Exe. Ay, we may march in England or in France,

Not seeing what is likely to ensue.

This late dissension grown betwixt the peers
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love, 190
And will at last break out into a flame:

As fester'd members rot but by degree,
Till bones and flesh and sinews fall away,
So will this base and envious discord breed.

And now I fear that fatal prophecy
Which in the time of Henry nam'd the Fifth
Was in the mouth of every sucking babe;
That Henry born at Monmouth should win all,

And Henry born at Windsor should lose all:
Which is so plain that Exeter doth wish 200
His days may finish ere that hapless time.

Exit.

SCENE II.—France. Before Rouen.

Enter JOAN LA PUCELLE disguised, and Soldiers dressed like countrymen, with sacks upon their backs.

Joan. These are the city gates, the gates of Roan,

Through which our policy must make a breach:

Take heed, be wary how you place your words;

Talk like the vulgar sort of market men
That come to gather money for their corn.

If we have entrance, as I hope we shall,
And that we find the slothful watch but weak,

I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

First Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city, 10

And we be lords and rulers over Roan;
Therefore we'll knock. Knocks.

Watch. Within. Qui est là?

Joan. Paysans, pauvres gens de France:
Poor market folks that come to sell their corn.

Watch. Opens the gate. Enter, go in; the market bell is rung.

Joan. Now, Roan, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground.

JOAN LA PUCELLE, etc., enter the city.

Enter CHARLES, the Bastard of ORLEANS, ALENÇON, and Forces.

Cha. Saint Denis bless this happy stragem!

And once again we'll sleep secure in Roan.
Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle and her practisants; 20

Now she is there how will she specify
Where is the best and safest passage in?

Alen. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower;

Which, once discern'd shows that her meaning is,

No way to that, for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter JOAN LA PUCELLE on a battlement, holding out a torch burning.

Joan. Behold! this is the happy wedding torch

That joineth Roan unto her countrymen,
But burning fatal to the Talbotites. Exit.

Bast. See, noble Charles, the beacon of our friend,

The burning torch in yonder turret stands. 30

Cha. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,

A prophet to the fall of all our foes!

Alen. Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends;

Enter, and cry 'The Dauphin!' presently,
And then do execution on the watch.

Alarum. Exeunt.

An alarum. Enter TALBOT in an excursion.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,

If Talbot but survive thy treachery.
Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,

Hath wrought thus hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escap'd the pride of France. 40

Exit.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter, from the town, BEDFORD, brought in sick in a chair.

Enter TALBOT and BURGUNDY without. Then, enter on the walls, JOAN LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, the Bastard of ORLEANS, ALENÇON, REIGNIER, and Others.

Joan. Good morrow, gallants! Want ye corn for bread?

I think the Duke of Burgundy will fast
Before he'll buy again at such a rate.

'T was full of darnel; do you like the taste?

Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend and shameless courtesan!

I trust ere long to choke thee with thine own,

And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Cha. Your grace may starve perhaps before that time.

Bed. O! let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason.

Joan. What will you do, good grey-beard? break a lance, 50

And run a tilt at death within a chair?

Tal. Foul fiend of France, and hag of all despite,

Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours!

Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age

And twit with cowardice a man half dead?

Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,

Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Joan. Are ye so hot, sir? Yet, Pucelle, hold thy peace;

If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow.

The English whisper together in council.

God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker? 60

Tal. Dare ye come forth and meet us in the field?

Joan. Belike your lordship takes us then for fools,

To try if that our own be ours or no.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate,

But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest;

Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?

Alen. Signior, no.

Tal. Signior, hang! base muleters of France!

Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls,

And dare not take up arms like gentlemen. 70

Joan. Away, captains! let's get us from the walls,

For Talbot means no goodness by his looks.

God be wi' you, my lord: we came but to tell you

That we are here.

Exeunt JOAN LA PUCELLE, etc., from the walls.

Tal. And there will we be too ere it be long,

Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame!

Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,

Prick'd on by public wrongs sustain'd in France,

Either to get the town again or die;

And I, as sure as English Henry lives, 80

And as his father here was conqueror,

As sure as in this late-betrayed town

Great Cœur-de-Lion's heart was buried,

So sure I swear to get the town or die.

Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy vows.

Tal. But ere we go, regard this dying prince,

The valiant Duke of Bedford. Come, my lord,

We will bestow you in some better place,

Fitter for sickness and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me; 90

Here will I sit before the walls of Roan, And will be partner of your weal or woe.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade you.

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read

That stout Pendragon in his litter sick Came to the field and vanquished his foes.

Methinks I should revive the soldiers' hearts,

Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast! Then be it so: heavens keep old Bedford safe! 100

And now no more ado, brave Burgundy,

But gather we our forces out of hand,

And set upon our boasting enemy.

Exeunt all but BEDFORD and Attendants.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Sir JOHN FASTOLFE and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste?

Fast. Whither away! to save myself by flight:

We are like to have the overthrow again.

Cap. What! will you fly, and leave Lord Talbot?

Fast. Ay,

All the Talbots in the world, to save my life.

Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee! Exit.

Retreat. Excursions. Enter, from the town, JOAN LA PUCELLE, ALENÇON, CHARLES, etc., and exeunt, flying.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please, 110

For I have seen our enemies' overthrow.

What is the trust or strength of foolish man? They that of late were daring with their scoffs

Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.

Dies, and is carried in by two in his chair.

Alarum. Re-enter TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and Others.

Tal. Lost, and recover'd in a day again! This is a double honour, Burgundy:

Yet heavens have glory for this victory!

Bur. War-like and martial Talbot, Burgundy

Enshrines thee in his heart, and there erects Thy noble deeds as valour's monument. 120

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle now?

I think her old familiar is asleep:

Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeke?

What! all amot? Roan hangs her head for grief

That such a valiant company are fled.

Now will we take some order in the town, Placing therein some expert officers,

And then depart to Paris to the king;

For there young Henry with his nobles lie.

Bur. What wills Lord Talbot pleaseth Burgundy. 130
Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget
 The noble duke of Bedford late deceas'd,
 But sees his exequies fulfill'd in Roan.
 A braver soldier never couched lance,
 A gentler heart did never sway in court;
 But kings and mightiest potentates must die,
 For that's the end of human misery.

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Plains near Rouen.

Enter, CHARLES, the Bastard of ORLEANS, ALENÇON, JOAN LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Joan. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
 Nor grieve that Roan is so recovered:
 Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,
 For things that are not to be remedied.
 Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while,
 And like a peacock sweep along his tail;
 We'll pull his plumes and take away his train

If Dauphin and the rest will be but rul'd.
Cha. We have been guided by thee hitherto,

And of thy cunning had no diffidence: 10
 One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Bast. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
 And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statue in some holy place,
 And have thee reverenc'd like a blessed saint:

Employ thee then, sweet virgin, for our good.
Joan. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise:

By fair persuasions mix'd with sugar'd words
 We will entice the Duke of Burgundy
 To leave the Talbot and to follow us. 20

Cha. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that,

France were no place for Henry's warriors;
 Nor should that nation boast it so with us,
 But be extirp'd from our provinces.

Alen. For ever should they be expul'd from France,

And not have title of an earldom here.
Joan. Your honours shall perceive how I will work

To bring this matter to the wished end.
Drum sounds afar off.

Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive

Their powers are marching unto Parisward. 30

Here sound an English March. Enter, and pass over at a distance, TALBOT and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread,

And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the Duke of BURGUNDY and Forces.

Now in the rearward comes the duke and his:

Fortune in favour makes him lag behind.
 Summon a parley; we will talk with him.

Trumpets sound a parley.

Cha. A parley with the Duke of Burgundy!

Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy?

Joan. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman.

Bur. What say'st thou, Charles? for I am marching hence.

Cha. Speak, Pucelle, and enchant him with thy words. 40

Joan. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France!

Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.

Bur. Speak on; but be not over-tedious.

Joan. Look on thy country, look on fertile France,

And see the cities and the towns defac'd
 By wasting ruin of the cruel foe.

As looks the mother on her lowly babe
 When death doth close his tender dying eyes,

See, see the pining malady of France;
 Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds, 50

Which thou thyself hast given her woeful breast.

O! turn thy edged sword another way;
 Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help.

One drop of blood drawn from thy country's bosom

Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore:

Return thee therefore with a flood of tears,
 And wash away thy country's stained spots.

Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words,

Or nature makes me suddenly relent.

Joan. Besides, all French and France exclaims on thee, 60

Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny.

Who join'st thou with but with a lordly nation

That will not trust thee but for profit's sake?

When Talbot hath set footing once in France,

And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,
 Who then but English Henry will be lord,

And thou be thrust out like a fugitive?

Call we to mind, and mark but this for proof,
 Was not the Duke of Orleans thy foe,

And was he not in England prisoner? 70
 But when they heard he was thine enemy,

They set him free without his ransom paid,

In spite of Burgundy and all his friends.
 See then, thou fight'st against thy countrymen,

And join'st with them will be thy slaughtermen.

Come, come, return; return, thou wand'ring lord;

Charles and the rest will take thee in their arms.

Bur. I am vanquished; these haughty words of hers

Have batter'd me like roaring cannon-shot, And made me almost yield upon my knees. 80 Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen!

And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace: My forces and my power of men are yours.

So, farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.

Joan. Aside. Done like a Frenchman: turn, and turn again!

Cha. Welcome, brave duke! thy friendship makes us fresh.

Bast. And doth beget new courage in our breasts.

Alen. Pucelle hath bravely play'd her part in this,

And doth deserve a coronet of gold.

Cha. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers, 90

And seek how we may prejudice the foe. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Paris. The Palace.

Enter King HENRY, GLOUCESTER, Bishop of WINCHESTER, YORK, SUFFOLK, SOMERSET, WARWICK, EXETER; VERNON, BASSET, and Others. To them with his soldiers, TALBOT.

Tal. My gracious prince, and honourable peers,

Hearing of your arrival in this realm, I have awhile given truce unto my wars, To do my duty to my sovereign:

In sign whereof, this arm, that hath reclaim'd

To your obedience fifty fortresses, Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength, Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem, Lets fall his sword before your highness' feet; Kneels.

And with submissive loyalty of heart 10 Ascribes the glory of his conquest got First to my God, and next unto your grace.

K. Hen. Is this the Lord Talbot, uncle Gloucester,

That hath so long been resident in France?

Glou. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain and victorious lord!

When I was young, as yet I am not old, I do remember how my father said A stouter champion never handled sword. Long since we were resolved of your truth, 20 Your faithful service and your toil in war; Yet never have you tasted our reward, Or been reguerdon'd with so much as thanks,

Because till now we never saw your face: Therefore, stand up; and for these good deserts,

We here create you Earl of Shrewsbury; And in our coronation take your place.

Flourish. Exeunt all but VERNON and BASSET.

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea,

Disgracing of these colours that I wear In honour of my noble Lord of York, 30 Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?

Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage

The envious barking of your saucy tongue Against my lord the Duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.

Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.

Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that. Strikes him.

Bas. Villain, thou know'st the law of arms is such

That whoso draws a sword, 't is present death,

Or else this blow should broach thy dearest blood. 40

But I'll unto his majesty, and crave I may have liberty to venge this wrong; When thou shalt see I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you;

And, after, meet you sooner than you would. Exeunt.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—Paris. A Hall of State.

Enter King HENRY, GLOUCESTER, EXETER, YORK, SUFFOLK, SOMERSET, WINCHESTER, WARWICK, TALBOT, the Governor of Paris, and Others.

Glou. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.

Win. God save King Henry, of that name the sixth!

Glou. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,

That you elect no other king but him, Esteem none friends but such as are his friends,

And none your foes but such as shall pretend

Malicious practices against his state: This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

Enter Sir JOHN FALSTOLFE.

Fal. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,

To haste unto your coronation, 10 A letter was deliver'd to my hands,

Writ to your grace from the Duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy and thee!

I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee next,

To tear the garter from thy craven's leg; Plucks it off.

Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed in that high degree.
Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:
This dastard, at the battle of Patay, 19
When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trusty squire did run away:
In which assault we lost twelve hundred
men;

Myself and divers gentlemen beside
Were there surpris'd and taken prisoners.
Then judge, great lords, if I have done
amiss;

Or whether that such cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yea or no.

Glou. To say the truth, this fact was infamous 30

And ill beseming any common man,
Much more a knight, a captain and a leader.

Tal. When first this order was ordain'd,
my lords,

Knights of the garter were of noble birth,
Valiant and virtuous, full of haughty courage,

Such as were grown to credit by the wars;
Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,
But always resolute in most extremes.

He then that is not furnish'd in this sort
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honourable order, 41

And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hear'st thy doom.

Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight:

Henceforth we banish thee on pain of death.
Exit FASTOLFE.

And now, my lord protector, view the letter
Sent from our uncle Duke of Burgundy.

Glou. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style? 50

No more but, plain and bluntly, *To the
King!*

Hath he forgot he is his sovereign?
Or doth this churlish superscription

Pretend some alteration in good will?
What's here? I have, upon especial cause,

Mov'd with compassion of my country's wreck,

*Together with the pitiful complaints
Of such as your oppression feeds upon,*

*Forsaken your pernicious faction
And join'd with Charles, the rightful King*

of France. 60

O monstrous treachery! Can this be so,
That in alliance, amity, and oaths,

There should be found such false dissem-bling guile?

K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?

Glou. He doth, my lord, and is become your foe.

K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain?

Glou. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.

K. Hen. Why, then, Lord Talbot there shall talk with him,

And give him chastisement for this abuse.

How say you, my lord? are you not content? 70

Tal. Content, my liege? Yes: but that I am prevented,

I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.

K. Hen. Then gather strength and march unto him straight:

Let him perceive how ill we brook his trea-
son,

And what offence it is to flout his friends.

Tal. I go, my lord; in heart desiring still
You may behold confusion of your foes. Exit.

Enter VERNON and BASSET.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign!

Bas. And me, my lord; grant me the combat too!

York. This is my servant: hear him,
noble prince! 80

Som. And this is mine: sweet Henry,
favour him!

K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them leave to speak.

Say, gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaim?

And wherefore crave you combat? or with whom?

Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done
me wrong.

Bas. And I with him; for he hath done
me wrong.

K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?

First let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bas. Crossing the sea from England into
France,

This fellow here, with envious carping
tongue, 90

Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves

Did represent my master's blushing cheeks,
When stubbornly he did repugn the truth

About a certain question in the law
Argu'd betwixt the Duke of York and him,

With other vile and ignominious terms:
In confutation of which rude reproach,

And in defence of my lord's worthiness,
I crave the benefit of law of arms. 100

Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord:
For though he seem with forged quaint con-
ceit

To set a gloss upon his bold intent,
Yet know, my lord, I was provok'd by him;

And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing that the paleness of this flower

Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.

York. Will not this malice, Somerset, be left?

Som. Your private grudge, my Lord of York, will out, 109

Though ne'er so cunningly you smother it.

K. Hen. Good Lord! what madness rules in brain-sick men,

When for so slight and frivolous a cause
Such factious emulations shall arise!
Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,
Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.

York. Let this dissension first be tried by
fight,
And then your highness shall command a
peace.

Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us
alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then.

York. There is my pledge; accept it,
Somerset, 120

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at
first.

Bas. Confirm it so, mine honourable lord.
Glou. Confirm it so? Confounded be your strife!

And perish ye, with your audacious prate!
Presumptuous vassals! are you not asham'd
With this immodest clamorous outrage
To trouble and disturb the king and us?
And you, my lords, methinks you do not well
To bear with their perverse objections;
Much less to take occasion from their
mouths 130

To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves:
Let me persuade you take a better course.

Exe. It grieves his highness: good my lords, be friends.

K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be combatants.

Henceforth I charge you, as you love our favour,

Quite to forget this quarrel and the cause.
And you, my lords, remember where we are;
In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation.
If they perceive dissension in our looks,
And that within ourselves we disagree, 140
How will their grudging stomachs be pro-vok'd

To wilful disobedience, and rebel!
Beside, what infamy will there arise,
When foreign princes shall be certified
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henry's peers and chief nobility
Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France!

O! think upon the conquest of my father,
My tender years, and let us not forego
That for a trifle that was bought with
blood. 150

Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.
I see no reason, if I wear this rose,

Puts on a red rose.
That any one should therefore be suspicious

I more incline to Somerset than York:
Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both.
As well they may upbraid me with my
crown,

Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is
crown'd.

But your discretions better can persuade
Than I am able to instruct or teach:
And therefore, as we hither came in
peace, 160

So let us still continue peace and love.
Cousin of York, we institute your grace

To be our regent in these parts of France:
And, good my Lord of Somerset, unite Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot;

And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,

Go cheerfully together and digest
Your angry choler on your enemies.

Ourselves, my lord protector, and the rest,
After some respite will return to Calais; 170
From thence to England, where I hope ere
long

To be presented, by your victories,
With Charles, Alençon, and that traitorous rout.

Flourish. Exeunt all but YORK, WAR-WICK, EXETER, and VERNON.

War. My Lord of York, I promise you,
the king

Prettily, methought, did play the orator.

York. And so he did; but yet I like it not
In that he wears the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush! that was but his fancy, blame him not;

I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no
harm.

York. An if I wist he did,—but let it
rest; 180

Others affairs must now be managed.

Exeunt YORK, WARWICK, and VERNON.

Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;

For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear we should have seen decipher'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging
broils,

Than yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd.
But howsoe'er, no simple man that sees

This jarring discord of nobility,
This shouldering of each other in the court,

This factious bandying of their favourites, 190
But that it doth presage some ill event.

'Tis much when sceptres are in children's
hands;

But more when envy breeds unkind division:

There comes the ruin, there begins confusion. Exit.

SCENE II.—Before Bourdeaux.

Enter TALBOT, with his Forces.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter;

Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds a parley. Enter, on the walls, the General of the French Forces, and Others.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,
Servant in arms to Harry King of England;
And thus he would: Open your city gates,
Be humble to us, call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects,
And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power;
But if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants, 10
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing
fire;

Who in a moment even with the earth
Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death,

Our nation's terror and their bloody scourge!
The period of thy tyranny approacheth.

On us thou canst not enter but by death;
For, I protest, we are well fortified,
And strong enough to issue out and fight: 20
If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee:
On either hand thee there are squadrons
pitch'd

To walk thee from the liberty of flight;
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress
But death doth front thee with apparent
spoil,

And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament

To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot. 30
Lo! there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant
man,

Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit:
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, due thee withal;
For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead. Drum afar off.

Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul, 40
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

Exeunt General, etc., from the walls.
Tal. He fables not; I hear the enemy.
Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.

O! negligent and heedless discipline;
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale,
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be then in blood;
Not rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch,
But rather moody-mad and desperate stags,
Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel. 51

And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,
And they shall find dear deer of us, my
friends.

God and Saint George, Talbot and England's right,
Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight!

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter YORK, with Forces; to him, a Messenger.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd
again
That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?

Mess. They are return'd, my lord, and give it out

That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his
power,

To fight with Talbot. As he march'd along,
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led,

Which join'd with him and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villian Somerset,

That thus delays my promised supply 10
Of horsemen that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid,
And I am louted by a traitor villian
And cannot help the noble chevalier.
God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France!

Enter Sir WILLIAM LUCY.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English
strength,

Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron 20
And hemm'd about with grim destruction.
To Bourdeaux, war-like duke! to Bourdeaux,
York!

Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's
honour.

York. O God! that Somerset, who in proud heart

Doth stop my cornets, were in Talbot's
place;

So should we save a valiant gentleman
By forfeiting a traitor and a coward.
Mad ire and wrathful fury make me weep
That thus we die while remiss traitors
sleep.

Lucy. O! send some succor to the distress'd lord. 30

York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word;

We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get;

All long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then God take mercy on brave
Talbot's soul;

And on his son young John, whom two hours
since

I met in travel toward his war-like father.
This seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.

York. Alas! what joy shall noble Talbot have

To bid his young son welcome to his grave? 40

Away! vexation almost stops my breath
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of
death.

Lucy. farewell: no more my fortune can
But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.
Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours, are won
away,

Long all of Somerset and his delay.

Exit, with his soldiers.

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture of sedition Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,

Sleeping neglecton doth betray to loss 49
 The conquest of our scarce cold conqueror,
 That ever living man of memory,
 Henry the Fifth: whiles they each other
 CROSS,
 Lives, honours, lands, and all hurry to loss.
Exit.

SCENE IV.—Other Plains in Gascony.

Enter SOMERSET, with his Army; a Captain of TALBOT'S with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now:

This expedition was by York and Talbot
 Too rashly plotted: all our general force
 Might with a sally of the very town
 Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot
 Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour
 By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure:

York set him on to fight and die in shame,
 That, Talbot dead, great York might bear
 the name.

Cap. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with
 me 10
 Set from our o'ermatch'd forces forth for aid.

Enter Sir WILLIAM LUCY.

Som. How now, Sir William! whither were you sent?

Lucy. Whither, my lord! from bought and sold Lord Talbot;

Who, ring'd about with bold adversity,
 Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
 To beat assailing death from his weak legions:

And whiles the honourable captain there Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied
 limbs,

And, in advantage lingering, looks for rescue,

You, his false hopes, the trust of England's
 honour, 20

Keep off aloof with worthless emulation.
 Let not your private discord keep away

The levied succours that should lend him
 aid,

While he, renowned noble gentleman,
 Yields up his life unto a world of odds:
 Orleans the Bastard, Charles, Burgundy,
 Alençon, Reignier, compass him about,
 And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. York set him on; York should have sent him aid.

Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace
 exclaims; 30

Swearing that you withhold his levied host Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the horse:

I owe him little duty, and less love,
 And take foul scorn to fawn on him by sending.

Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,

Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot.

Never to England shall he bear his life,
 But dies, betray'd to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will dispatch the horsemen straight: 40

Within six hours they will be at his aid.
Lucy. Too late comes rescue: he is ta'en or slain,

For fly he could not if he would have fled;
 And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then adieu!

Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The English Camp near Bourdeaux.Enter TALBOT and JOHN his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for
 thee

To tutor thee in stratagems of war,
 That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd

When sapless age and weak unable limbs
 Should bring thy father to his drooping
 chair.

But, O malignant and ill-boding stars!
 Now art thou come unto a feast of death,
 A terrible and unavoids danger:

Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest
 horse,

And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape 10
 By sudden flight: come, dally not, be gone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your
 son?

And shall I fly? O! if you love my mother,
 Dishonour not her honourable name,
 To make a bastard and a slave of me:

The world will say, he is not Talbot's blood
 That basely fled when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly, to revenge my death if I be slain.

John. He that flies so will ne'er return
 again.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to
 die. 20

John. Then let me stay; and father, do
 you fly:

Your loss is great, so your regard should be;
 My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.
 Upon my death the French can little boast;
 In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
 Flight cannot stain the honour you have
 won;

But mine it will that no exploit have done:
 You fled for vantage every one will swear;

But if I bow, they'll say it was for fear.
 There is no hope that ever I will stay

If the first hour I shrink and run away.
 Here, on my knee, I beg mortality,

Rather than life preserv'd with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb?

John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's womb.

Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee
 go.

John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. Part of thy father may be sav'd in thee.

John. No part of him but will be shame in me.

Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it.

John. Yes, your renowned name: shall flight abuse it?

Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, being slain.

If death be so apparent, then both fly.

Tal. And leave my followers here to fight and die?

My age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?

No more can I be sever'd from your side. Then can yourself yourself in twain divide.

Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I; so For live I will not if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son.

Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

Come, side by side together live and die,
And soul with soul from France to heaven fly.

Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Field of Battle.

Alarum. Excursions, wherein TALBOT'S Son is hemmed about, and TALBOT rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight!

The regent hath with Talbot broke his word,
And left us to the rage of France his sword.
Where is John Talbot? Pause, and take thy breath;

I gave thee life and rescu'd thee from death.

John. O! twice my father, twice am I thy son:

The life thou gav'st me first was lost and done,

Till with thy war-like sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,

It warm'd thy father's heart with proud desire

Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age,
Quickened with youthful spleen and war-like rage,

Beat down Alençon, Orleans, Burgundy,
And from the pride of Gallia rescu'd thee.

The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, and had the maidenhood

Of thy first fight, I soon encountered,
And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed

Some of his bastard blood; and in disgrace

Bespoke him thus: 'Contaminated, base
And misbegotten blood I spill of thine,

Mean and right poor, for that pure blood of mine

Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy.'

Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy,
Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's care,

Art thou not weary, John? how dost thou fare?

Wilt thou yet leave the battle boy, and fly,
Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry?

Fly, to revenge my death when I am dead; so
The help of one stands me in little stead.

O! too much folly is it, well I wot,
To hazard all our lives in one small boat.

If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age:

By me thy nothing gain an if I stay;
'Tis but the short'ning of my life one day.

In thee thy mother dies, our household's name,

My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame.

All these and more we hazard by thy stay; so
All these are sav'd if thou wilt fly away.

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me smart;

These words of yours draw life-blood from my heart.

On that advantage, bought with such a shame,

To save a paltry life and slay bright fame,
Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly,

The coward horse that bears me fall and die!

And like me to the peasant boys of France,
To be shame's scorn and subject of mischance!

Surely, by all the glory you have won, so
An if I fly, I am not Talbot's son:

Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot;
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete.

Thou Icarus. Thy life to me is sweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side,

And, commendable prov'd, let's die in pride.

Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter TALBOT, wounded, supported by a Servant.

Tal. Where is my other life? mine own is gone:

O! where's your young Talbot? where is valiant John?

Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity,
Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee.

When he perceiv'd me shrink and on my knee,

His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
And like a hungry lion did commence

Rough deeds of rage and stern impatience;
But when my angry guardant stood alone,

Tend'ring my ruin and assail'd of none, so
Dizzy-eyed fury and great rage of heart

Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clust'ring battle of the French;

And in that sea of blood my boy did drench
His over-mounting spirit; and there died

My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride.

Enter Soldiers, bearing the body of JOHN TALBOT.

Serv. O! my dear lord, lo! where your son is borne.

Tal. Thou antic Death, which laugh'st us here to scorn,

Anon, from thy insulting tyranny,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity, 20

Two Talbots, winged through the lither sky,

In thy despite shall scape mortality.

O! thou whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,

Speak to thy father ere thou yield thy breath;
Brave death by speaking whether he will or no;

Imagine him a Frenchman and thy foe.

Poor boy! he smiles, methinks, as who should say,

Had death been French, then death had died to-day.

Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms:

My spirit can no longer bear these harms. 30
Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have,

Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave. Dies.

Alarums. Exeunt Soldiers and Servant, leaving the two bodies. Enter CHARLES, ALENÇON, BURGUNDY, the Bastard of ORLEANS, JOAN LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Cha. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in

We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging-wood,

Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Joan. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said:

'Thou maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid;

But with a proud majestical high scorn,
He answer'd thus: 'Young Talbot was not born 40

To be the pillage of a giglot wench.'

So, rushing in the bowels of the French,
He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtless he would have made a noble knight;

See, where he lies inhearsed in the arms
Of the most bloody nurser of his harms.

Bast. Hew them to pieces, hack their bones asunder,

Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.

Cha. O, no! forbear; for that which we have fled

During the life, let us not wrong it dead. 50

Enter Sir WILLIAM LUCY, attended; a French Herald preceeding.

Lucy. Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent,

To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.

Cha. On what submissive message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission, Dauphin! 't is a mere French word;

We English warriors wot not what it means.
I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en

And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Cha. For prisoners ask'st thou? hell our prison is.

But tell me whom thou seek'st.

Lucy. But where's the great Alcides of the field, 60

Valiant Lord Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury,
Created for his rare success in arms,

Great Earl of Washford, Waterford, and Valence;

Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinfield,
Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdun of Alton,

Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of Sheffield,

The thrice-victorious Lord of Falconbridge,
Knight of the noble order of Saint George,

Worthy Saint Michael and the Golden Fleece,

Great mareshal to Henry the Sixth : 70
Of all his wars within the realm of France?

Joan. Here is a silly stately style indeed!
The Turk, that two-and-fifty kingdoms hath,

Writes not so tedious a style as this.
Him that thou magnifiest with all these titles

Stinking and fly-blown lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Is Talbot slain, the Frenchmen's only scourge,

Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?
O! were mine eyeballs into bullets turn'd,

That I in rage might shoot them at your faces. 80

O! that I could but call these dead to life,
It were enough to fright the realm of France.

Were but his picture left amongst you here

It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Give me their bodies, that I may bear them hence

And give them burial as beseems their worth.

Joan. I think this upstart is old Talbot's ghost,

He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit.

For God's sake, let him have 'em; to keep them here

They would but stink and putrefy the air. 90

Cha. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lucy. I'll bear them hence:
But from their ashes shall be rear'd

A phoenix that shall make all France afraid.

Cha. So we be rid of them, do with 'em what thou wilt.

And now to Paris, in this conquering vein:
All will be ours now bloody Talbot's slain.

Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—London. The Palace.

Enter King HENRY, GLOUCESTER, and EXETER.

K. Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope,

The emperor, and the Earl of Armagnac?

Glou. I have, my lord; and their intent is this:

They humbly sue unto your excellence To have a godly peace concluded of Between the realms of England and of France.

K. Hen. How doth your grace affect their motion?

Glou. Well, my good lord; and as the only means

To stop effusion of our Christian blood, And stablish quietness on every side. 10

K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought

It was both impious and unnatural That such immanity and bloody strife

Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glou. Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect

And surer bind this knot of amity, The Earl of Armagnac, near knit to Charles,

A man of great authority in France, Proffers his only daughter to your grace

In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry. 20

K. Hen. Marriage, uncle! alas! my years are young,

And fitter is my study and my books Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.

Yet call the ambassadors; and, as you please,

So let them have their answers every one: I shall be well content with any choice

Tends to God's glory and my country's weal.

Enter WINCHESTER in Cardinal's habit, a Legate and two Ambassadors.

Exe. What! is my lord of Winchester install'd,

And call'd unto a cardinal's degree? Then I perceive that will be verified 30

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy:

'If once he come to be a cardinal, He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown.'

K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits

Have been consider'd and debated on. Your purpose is both good and reasonable;

And therefore are we certainly resolv'd To draw conditions of a friendly peace;

Which by my lord of Winchester we mean Shall be transported presently to France. 40

Glou. And for the proffer of my lord your master,

I have inform'd his highness so at large, As, liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,

Her beauty, and the value of her dowry, He doth intend she shall be England's queen.

'K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract,

Bear her this jewel, pledge of my affection.

And so, my lord protector, see them guarded And safely brought to Dover; where in-shipp'd Commit them to the fortune of the sea. 50

Exeunt King HENRY and Train; GLOUCESTER, EXETER, and Ambassadors.

Win. Stay, my lord legate: you shall first receive

The sum of money which I promised Should be deliver'd to his holiness

For clothing me in these grave ornaments.

Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure.

Win. Aside. Now Winchester will not submit, I trow,

Or be inferior to the proudest peer. Humphrey of Gloucester, thou shalt well perceive That neither in birth or for authority

The bishop will be overborne by thee: 60

I'll either make thee stoop and bend thy knee,

Or sack this country with a mutiny. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—France. Plains in Anjou.

Enter CHARLES, BURGUNDY, ALENÇON, JOAN LA PUCELLE, and Forces, marching.

Cha. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits:

'T is said the stout Parisians do revolt And turn again unto the war-like French.

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of France,

And keep not back your powers in dalliance.

Joan. Peace be amongst them if they turn to us;

Else, ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Scout.

Scout. Success unto our valiant general, And happiness to his accomplices!

Cha. What tidings send our scouts? I prithee, speak. 10

Scout. The English army, that divided was

Into two parties, is now conjoin'd in one, And means to give you battle presently.

Cha. Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning is;

But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust the ghost of Talbot is not there:

Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Joan. Of all base passions, fear is most accurs'd.

Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be thine;

Let Henry fret and all the world repine. 20

Cha. Then on, my lords; and France be fortunate! Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before Angiers.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter JOAN LA PUCELLE.

Joan. The regent conquers and the Frenchmen fly.

Now help, ye charming spells and periapts;
And ye choice spirits that admonish me
And give me signs of future accidents:

Thunder.
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes
Under the lordly monarch of the north,
Appear and aid me in this enterprise!

Enter Fiends.

This speedy and quick appearance argues proof

Of your accustom'd diligence to me.
Now, ye familiar spirits, that are cull'd 10
Out of the powerful legions under earth, Help me this once, that France may get the field. They walk, and speak not.

O! hold me not with silence over-long.
Where I was wont to feed you with my
blood,

I'll lop a member off and give it you
In earnest of a further benefit,
So you do condescend to help me now.

They hang their heads.
No hope to have redress? My body shall Pay recompense if you will grant my suit.

They shake their heads.
Cannot my body nor blood-sacrifice 20
Entreat you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my soul; my body, soul, and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.

They depart.
See! they forsake me. Now the time is
come

That France must vail her lofty-plumed
crest,

And let her head fall into England's lap.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with:
Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust.
Exit.

Alarums. Enter French and English, fighting; JOAN LA PUCELLE and YORK fight hand to hand. JOAN LA PUCELLE is taken. The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think I have you fast: 30

Unchain your spirits now with spelling
charms,

And try if they can gain your liberty.
A goodly prize, fit for the devil's grace!
See how the ugly witch doth bend her brows,
As if with Circe she would change my shape.

Joan. Chang'd to a worser shape thou canst not be.

York. O! Charles the Dauphin is a proper
man:

No shape but his can please your dainty eye.
Joan. A plaguing mischief light on Charles and thee!

And may ye both be suddenly surpris'd 40
By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds!

York. Fell banning hag, enchantress, hold thy tongue!

Joan. I prithee, give me leave to curse
awhile.

York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake. Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter SUFFOLK, leading in Lady MARGARET.

Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner. Gazes on her.
O fairest beauty! do not fear nor fly,
For I will touch thee but with reverent
hands.

I kiss these fingers for eternal peace,
And lay them gently on thy tender side.
Who art thou? say, that I may honour
thee. 50

Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a king,
The King of Naples, whosoe'er thou art.

Suf. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me:
So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoner underneath her
wings.

Yet, if this servile usage once offend,
Go and be free again, as Suffolk's friend.

She turns away as going.
O, stay! I have no power to let her pass; 60
My hand would free her, but my heart says
no.

As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.
Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak:
I'll call for pen and ink and write my mind.
Fie, de la Pole! disable not thyself;
Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner?

Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight?
Ay; beauty's princely majesty is such. 70
Confounds the tongue and makes the senses rough.

Mar. Say, Earl of Suffolk, if thy name be
so,

What ransom must I pay before I pass?
For I perceive I am thy prisoner.

Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suit,

Before thou make a trial of her love?
Mar. Why speak'st thou not? what ransom must I pay?

Suf. She's beautiful and therefore to be woo'd;

She is a woman, therefore to be won.
Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom, yea or
no? 80

Suf. Fond man! remember that thou hast
a wife;

Then how can Margaret be thy paramour?
Mar. I were best to leave him, for he will not hear.

Suf. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling card.

Mar. He talks at random; sure, the man is mad.

Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.

Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.

Suf. I'll win this Lady Margaret. For whom?
Why, for my king: tush! that's a wooden thing.

Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter. 90

Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied, And peace established between these realms. But there remains a scruple in that too; For though her father be the King of Naples, Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poor, And our nobility will scorn the match.

Mar. Hear ye, captain? Are you not at leisure?

Suf. It shall be so, disdain they ne'er so much:

Henry is youthful and will quickly yield.

Madam, I have a secret to reveal. 100

Mar. What though I be enthral'd? he seems a knight,

And will not any way dishonour me.

Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

Mar. Perhaps I shall be rescu'd by the French;

And then I need not crave his courtesy.

Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—

Mar. Tush! women have been captivate ere now.

Suf. Lady, wherefore talk you so?

Mar. I cry you mercy, 't is but quid for quo.

Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose 110

Your bondage happy to be made a queen?

Mar. To be a queen in bondage is more vile

Than is a slave in base servility;

For princes should be free.

Suf. And so shall you,

If happy England's royal king be free.

Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?

Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen,

To put a golden sceptre in thy hand,

And set a precious crown upon thy head,

If thou wilt condescend to be my—

Mar. What? 120

Suf. His love.

Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.

Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am

To woo so fair a dame to be his wife

And have no portion in the choice myself.

How say you, madam, are ye so content?

Mar. An if my father please, I am content.

Suf. Then call our captains and our colours forth!

And, madam, at your father's castle walls

We'll crave a parley, to confer with him. 130

Troops come forward.

A Parley sounded. Enter REIGNIER, on the walls.

See, Reignier, see thy daughter prisoner!

Reig. To whom?

Suf. To me.

Reig. Suffolk, what remedy? I am a soldier, and unapt to weep Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:

Consent, and for thy honour give consent, Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king, Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto;

And this her easy-held imprisonment 139 Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.

Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks?

Suf. Fair Margaret knows That Suffolk doth not flatter, face, or feign.

Reig. Upon thy princely warrant, I descend

To give thee answer of thy just demand.

Exit from the walls.

Suf. And here I will expect thy coming.

Trumpets sounded. Enter REIGNIER.

Reig. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories:

Command in Anjou what your honour pleases.

Suf. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child,

Fit to be made companion with a king.

What answer makes your grace unto my suit? 150

Reig. Since thou dost deign to woo her little worth

To be the princely bride of such a lord,

Upon condition I may quietly

Enjoy mine own, the country Maine and Anjou,

Free from oppression or the stroke of war, My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.

Suf. That is her ransom; I deliver her; And those two counties I will undertake Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.

Reig. And I again, in Henry's royal name, 160

As deputy unto that gracious king, Give thee her hand for sign of plighted faith.

Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee kingly thanks,

Because this is in traffic of a king:

Aside. And yet, methinks, I could be well content

To be mine own attorney in this case.

I'll over then to England with this news

And make this marriage to be solemniz'd.

So farewell, Reignier: set this diamond safe In golden palaces, as it becomes. 170

Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace

The Christian prince, King Henry, were he here.

Mar. Farewell, my lord. Good wishes, praise and prayers

Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. Going.

Suf. Farewell, sweet madam! But hark you, Margaret;

No princely commendations to my king?

Mar. Such commendations as becomes a maid,

A virgin and his servant, say to him.

Suf. Words sweetly plac'd and modestly directed.

But, madam, I must trouble you again; 180
No loving token to his majesty?

Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unspotted heart.

Never yet taint with love, I send the king.
Suf. And this withal. Kisses her.

Mar. That for thyself: I will not so presume

To send such peevish tokens to a king.
Exeunt REIGNIER and MARGARET.

Suf. O! wert thou for myself. But, Suf- folk, stay;

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotaurs and ugly treasons lurk.

Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise; 190
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,

And natural graces that extinguish art;
Repeat their semblance often on the seas,

That, when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's
feet,

Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder. Exit.

SCENE IV.—Camp of the Duke of YORK in Anjou.

Enter YORK, WARWICK, and Others.

York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn.

Enter JOAN LA PUELLE, guarded; and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah! Joan, this kills thy father's heart outright.

Have I sought every country far and near,
And, now it is my chance to find thee out,

Must I behold thy timeless cruel death?
Ah! Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die
with thee.

Joan. Decrepit miser! base ignoble
wretch!

I am descended of a gentler blood:
Thou art no father nor no friend of mine.

Shep. Out, out! My lords, an please you,
't is not so; 10

I did beget her all the parish knows:

Her mother liveth yet, can testify
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?

York. This argues what her kind of life hath been:

Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.

Shep. Fie! Joan, that thou wilt be so obstacle;

God knows thou art a collop of my flesh;
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:

Deny me not, I prithee, gentle Joan. 20

Joan. Peasant, avault! You have suborn'd this man,

Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. 'T is true I gave a noble to the priest
The morn that I was wedded to her mother.

Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.

Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time

Of thy nativity! I would the milk
Thy mother gave thee when thou suck'dst her breast,

Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake!

Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs afield, 30

I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!
Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?

O! burn her, burn her: hanging is too good.
Exit.

York. Take her away; for she hath lived too long

To fill the world with vicious qualities.
Joan. First, let me tell you whom you have condemn'd:

Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,
But issu'd from the progeny of kings;

Virtuous and holy; chosen from above,
By inspiration of celestial grace, 40

To work exceeding miracles on earth.
I never had to do with wicked spirits:

But you, that are polluted with your lusts,
Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,

Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,
Because you want the grace that others have,

You judge it straight a thing impossible
To compass wonders but by help of devils.

No, misconceived! Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy, 50

Chaste and immaculate in very thought;
Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effus'd,

Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven,
York. Ay, ay: away with her to execution!

War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,

Spare for no fagots, let there be enow:
Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,

That so her torture may be shortened.

Joan. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?

Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity, 60
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.

I am with child, ye bloody homicides:
Murder not then the fruit within my womb,

Although ye hale me to a violent death.

York. Now heaven forfend! the holy maid with child!

War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye wrought!

Is all your strict preciseness come to this?
York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling:

I did imagine what would be her refuge.
War. Well, go to; we will have no bastards live; 70

Especially since Charles must father it.

Joan. You are deceiv'd; my child is none
of his:

It was Alençon that enjoy'd my love.
York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel:

It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.
Joan. O! give me leave; I have deluded
you:

'T was neither Charles nor yet the duke I
nam'd,

But Reignier, King of Naples, that prevail'd.

War. A married man: that's most intolerable.

York. Why, here's a girl! I think she knows not well, 80
There were so many, whom she may accuse.
War. It's sign she hath been liberal and free.

York. And yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure.
Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat and thee:

Use no entreaty, for it is in vain.

Joan. Then lead me hence; with whom I leave my curse:

May never glorious sun reflex his beams
Upon the country where you make abode;
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, till mischief and despair 90
Drive you to break your necks or hang yourselves!
Exit, guarded.

York. Break thou in pieces and consume to ashes,
Thou foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter Cardinal BEAUFORT, attended.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.
For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,

Mov'd with remorse of these outrageous broils,

Have earnestly implor'd a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And here at hand the Dauphin and his train 100
Approacheth to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect?

After the slaughter of so many peers,
So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers,
That in this quarrel have been overthrow'n,
And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,

Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the towns,
By treason, falsehood, and by treachery,
Our great progenitors had conquered? 110
O! Warwick, Warwick, I foresee with grief
The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York: if we conclude a peace,

It shall be with such strict and severe covenants

As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter CHARLES attended; ALENÇON, the Bastard of ORLEANS, REIGNIER, and Others.

Cha. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed

That peaceful truce shall be proclaim'd in France,

We come to be informed by yourselves
What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling cholera chokes 120
The hollow passage of my poison'd voice,
By sight of these our baleful enemies.

Car. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:

That, in regard King Henry gives consent
Of mere compassion and of lenity,
To ease your country of distressful war,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,
You shall become true liegemen to his crown.
And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
To pay him tribute, and submit thyself, 130
Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him,
And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself?

Adorn his temples with a coronet,
And yet, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?
This proffer is absurd and reasonless.

Cha. 'Tis known already that I am possess'd

With more than half the Gallian territories,
And therein reverenc'd for their lawful king: 140

Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?
No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep
That which I have than, coveting for more,
Be cast from possibility of all.

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret means

Us'd intercession to obtain a league,
And, now the matter grows to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloof upon comparison? 150
Either accept the title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our king
And not of any challenge of desert.

Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy

To cavil in the course of this contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy
To save your subjects from such massacre
And ruthless slaughters as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostility; 162
And therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?

Cha. It shall;
Only reserv'd, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty,

As thou art knight, never to disobey 170
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.

So now dismiss your army when ye please;
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,
For here we entertain a solemn peace.

Exeunt.

SCENE V.—London. The Palace.

Enter King HENRY, in conference with SUFFOLK; GLOUCESTER and EXETER following.

K. Hen. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl,

Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtues graced with external gifts
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart:
And like as rigour of tempestuous gusts Provokes the mightiest hulk against the tide,

So am I driven by breath of her renown
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Suf. Tush! my good lord, this superficial tale

Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,
Had I sufficient skill to utter them,
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit:

And, which is more, she is not so divine,
So full replete with choice of all delights,
But with as humble lowliness of mind
She is content to be at your command;
Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste in-
tents,

To love and honour Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume.

Therefore, my lord protector, give consent
That Margaret may be England's royal
queen.

Glou. So should I give consent to flatter sin.

You know, my lord, your highness is be-troth'd

Unto another lady of esteem;

How shall we then dispense with that contract.

And not deface your honour with reproach?

Suf. As doth a ruler with unlawful
oaths;

Or one that, at a triumph having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds.

A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds,
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glou. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than that?

Her father is no better than an earl,

Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suf. Yes, my good lord, her father is a
king.

The King of Naples and Jerusalem;

And of such great authority in France

As his alliance will confirm our peace,

And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glou. And so the Earl of Armagnac may
do,

Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Exe. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal dower,

Where Reignier sooner will receive than give.

Suf. A dower, my lords! disgrace not so
your king,

That he should be so abject, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth and not for perfect
love.

Henry is able to enrich his queen,

And not to seek a queen to make him rich:

So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,

As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.

Marriage is a matter of more worth

Than to be dealt in by attorneyship:

Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,

Must be companion of his nuptial bed;

And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,

It most of all these reasons bindeth us,

In our opinions she should be preferr'd.

For what is wedlock forced but a hell,

An age of discord and continual strife?

Whereas the contrary bringeth bliss,

And is a pattern of celestial peace.

Whom should we match with Henry, being
a king,

But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?

Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,

Approves her fit for none but for a king:

Her valiant courage and undaunted spirit, 70

More than in women commonly is seen,

Will answer our hope in issue of a king;

For Henry, son unto a conqueror,

Is likely to beget more conquerors,

If with a lady of so high resolve

As is fair Margaret he be link'd in love.

Then yield, my lords; and here conclude
with me

That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report,

My noble Lord of Suffolk, or for that 80

My tender youth was never yet attain'd

With any passion of inflaming love,

I cannot tell; but this I am assur'd,

I feel such sharp dissension in my breast,

Such fierce alarums both of hope and
fear,

As I am sick with working of my thoughts.

Take, therefore, shipping; post, my lord, to
France;

Agree to any covenants, and procure

That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come

To cross the seas to England and be crown'd

King Henry's faithful and anointed queen.

For your expenses and sufficient charge,

Among the people gather up a tenth.

Be gone, I say; for till you do return

I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.

And you, good uncle, banish all offence:

If you do censure me by what you were,

Not what you are, I know it will excuse

This sudden execution of my will.

And so conduct me where, from company,

I may revolve and ruminate my grief. Exit.

Glou. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.

Exeunt GLOUCESTER and EXETER.

Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd; and thus he goes,

As did the youthful Paris once to Greece;

With hope to find the like event in love,

But prosper better than the Trojan did.

Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the
king;

But I will rule both her, the king, and realm.

Exit.

THE SECOND AND THIRD PARTS OF KING HENRY THE SIXTH

As we view the three parts of Henry VI in retrospect, we sense running throughout the entire group a unifying interest of which we are scarcely conscious in a single part. And yet, having once sensed it, we must admit that to the audience for which these plays were written it must have been everywhere apparent. To them every scene and every character possessed an interest above and beyond itself—an interest due to its relation to the one great central interest in the common mother, England, her weal or her woe. These plays were written in response to a popular demand for a better knowledge of England's past. They are essentially informative. Of necessity they deal with England's great national heroes, but they recognize no necessity of glorifying them. They derive their information from English chronicles, but they are not bound to follow slavishly their sources. They are in the highest sense patriotic, because they rise above partisanship and by pitiless exposure of self-seekers instill into the minds of the hearers the thought that the character of England is determined by the character of Englishmen. The dominant note in all these plays is the one struck in Henry V:

"O England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!"

It is noteworthy that in the plays under discussion, dealing as they do with a period in which England was torn with factional strife, there is not a single impassioned utterance breathing forth devotion to country which issues from the lips of an Englishman. All these nobles are voluble and passionate—in their own interest; but not one of them is capable of such an appeal for England as the French Maid makes in behalf of France:

"Look on thy country, look on fertile France,
And see the cities and the towns defac'd
By wasting ruin of the cruel foe.
.
One drop of blood drawn from thy country's bosom
Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore;
Return thee therefore with a flood of tears,
And wash away thy country's stained spots."

It is because we feel so keenly England's need of disinterested service that we watch with such profound concern the fall of Duke Humphrey during the first three Acts of Part II. We are conscious of the weakness of the king; we see the growing ambition of York; we are witness to the dominating and unscrupulous purposes of Queen Margaret and her guilty scheming with Suffolk. We dare not trust the Cardinal. Buckingham and Somerset are self-seekers, and Warwick is a partisan. Our chief hope for England lies in the lord protector, and that hope is dashed by the supreme folly of his speech in the opening scene to these "Brave peers of England, pillars of the state." It is strange that so grave a councillor should, to no apparent purpose, in the presence of such enemies, denounce this league as "shameful" and this marriage as "fatal." In a critical hour the weakness of the protector is manifest: he has not learned to temper his rugged honesty with discretion. When the Cardinal goes out, saying, "I'll to the Duke of Suffolk presently," we feel certain that the end of Duke Humphrey approaches. The liming of his proud and ambitious wife is an easy step in the process of his ruin; but he is essentially the author of his own catastrophe.

Retribution for his death comes quickly. The commons loved and trusted him. They now appear and demand Suffolk's banishment. Their presence transforms the King. They are the conscience of England. Suffolk is banished, and later his head is delivered to the weeping Queen. The Cardinal dies miserably in his bed, pointing his trembling finger at his imagined victim and crying:

"Comb down his hair; look, look! it stands upright,
Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul."

With the death of Humphrey England is at the mercy of self-seekers. York with a puissant force leaves for Ireland after having first planned the Cade uprising whereby to perceive the commons' mind. On his return the battle of St. Albans quickly follows and the civil war is on. England bleeds.

It is a commonplace to remark upon the piety and weakness of King Henry; but the character cannot be so easily dismissed, for it is essentially a creation of Shakespeare's and after the death of the lord protector stands out as the most distinct among the characters of the play. Judged by the standards of all about him, he is a pitiable failure; but it is doubtful whether Shakespeare intended him to be so judged. He is portrayed as not of a chivalric age. He was crowned king in infancy and until the death of Duke Humphrey had not borne the responsibilities of the crown. His chief concern was that his life should be above reproach. To him it was no mere maxim that

"Thrice is he arm'd that hath his quarrel just,
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."

This utterance should be borne in mind in the parliament scene in Part III, where his weakness seems to degenerate into baseness. Convinced that his title is weak, he is bereft of words. The crown is slipping from his head, and he is powerless to defend it. The possibility of a compromise offers, in which he can retain the crown during his lifetime and the assurance of peace during his reign. Had his title been good he might have died to maintain it; knowing it to be weak, he compromises.

The Queen now assumes command and repudiates his bargain. She dips her napkin in the blood of little Rutland, son of York, and offers it to his father to wipe his cheeks before she stabs him. She shows York's head fixed upon the wall to her weak husband, who cries: "Withold revenge, dear God!" Taunted by Clifford for his softness and appealed to to steel himself to fight if only for his son, Henry replies:

"But Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear
That things ill got had ever bad success?"

On the field of Towton, withdrawn to a molehill, King Henry reflects upon the life of a "homely swain" as compared with that of a king to a conclusion very similar to that of his father:

"And but for ceremony, such a wretch,
Winding up days with toil and nights with sleep,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king."

His meditation is broken by the entrance of a son that has killed his father and a father that has killed his son. These men had no quarrel. They were impressed to fight, each for his own master. This is war. This is what war means to the common man. As King Henry hears them bewail each his own loss and the "miserable age," he cries:

"How will the country, for these woeful chances,
Misthink the king, and not be satisfied."

Prisoner at last in the tower, with Edward on the throne, he unpacks his heart to Gloucester, that "indigested and deformed lump," whose sword is drawn to strike, and prophesies "much more slaughter after this," a prophecy to be speedily fulfilled. True in his death to the principle which he had sought to make dominant in his life, this man, too weak to rule when men held might for right, dies, crying to his murderer:

"O, God forgive my sins, and pardon thee."

SCENE.—In various Parts of England.

ACT I

SCENE I.—London. A Room of State in the Palace.

Flourish of trumpets: then hautboys. Enter, on one side, King HENRY, Duke of GLOUCESTER, SALISBURY, WARWICK, and Cardinal BEAUFORT; on the other, Queen MARGARET, led in by SUFFOLK; YORK, SOMERSET, BUCKINGHAM, and Others, following.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty I had in charge at my depart for France, As procurator to your excellence, To marry Princess Margaret for your grace, So, in the famous ancient city, Tours, In presence of the Kings of France and Sicil, The Dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretagne, and Alençon, Seven earls, twelve barons, and twenty reverend bishops, I have perform'd my task, and was espous'd: And humbly now upon my bended knee, 10 In sight of England and her lordly peers, Deliver up my title in the queen To your most gracious hands, that are the substance Of that great shadow I did represent;

The happiest gift that ever marquess gave,
The fairest queen that ever king receiv'd.
K. Hen. Suffolk arise. Welcome, Queen Margaret:
I can express no kinder sign of love
Than this kind kiss. O Lord! that lends me life, Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness;
For thou hast given me in this beauteous face
A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.
Q. Mar. Great King of England and my gracious lord,
The mutual conference that my mind hath had
By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams,
In courtly company, or at my beads,
With you mine alder-lieftest sovereign,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms, such as my wit affords, 30
And over-joy of heart doth minister.
K. Hen. Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech,
Her words yclad with wisdom's majesty,
Makes me from wondering fall to weeping joys;
Such is the fullness of my heart's content.

Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love.

All. Long live Queen Margaret, England's happiness!

Q. Mar. We thank you all. Flourish.

Suf. My lord protector, so it please your grace,

Here are the articles of contracted peace 40
Between our sovereign and the French King Charles,

For eighteen months concluded by consent.

Glou. Imprimis, It is agreed between the French King Charles and William de la Pole, Marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry King of England, that the said Henry shall espouse the Lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier King of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem, and crown her Queen of England ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing. Item, That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine shall be released and delivered to the king her father— 52

Lets the paper fall.

K. Hen. Uncle, how now!

Glou. Pardon me, gracious lord;
Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart

And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.

K. Hen. Uncle of Winchester, I pray, read on.

Car. Item, It is further agreed between them, that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king her father, and she sent over of the King of England's own proper cost and charges, without having any dowry. 62

K. Hen. They please us well. Lord marquess, kneel down:

We here create thee the first Duke of Suffolk,

And gird thee with the sword. Cousin of York,

We here discharge your grace from being regent

I' the parts of France, till term of eighteen months

Be full expir'd. Thanks, uncle Winchester, Gloucester, York, Buckingham, Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwick; 70

We thank you all for this great favour done, In entertainment to my princely queen.

Come, let us in, and with all speed provide To see her coronation be perform'd.

Exeunt KING, QUEEN, and SUFFOLK.

Glou. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,

To you Duke Humphrey must unload his grief,

Your grief, the common grief of all the land. What! did my brother Henry spend his youth, His valour, coin, and people, in the wars?

Did he so often lodge in open field, 80

In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,

To conquer France, his true inheritance?

And did my brother Bedford toil his wits, To keep by policy what Henry got?

Have you yourselves, Somerset, Bucking- ham,

Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious War- wick,

Receiv'd deep scars in France and Nor- mandy?

Or hath mine uncle Beaufort and myself, With all the learned council of the realm,

Studied so long, sat in the council-house 90 Early and late, debating to and fro

How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe?

And hath his highness in his infancy Been crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes?

And shall these labours and these honours die?

Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance, Your deeds of war and all our counsel die?

O peers of England! shameful is this league, Fatal this marriage, cancelling your fame,

Blotting your names from books of memory, Razing the characters of your renown, 101

Defacing monuments of conquer'd France, Undoing all, as all had never been.

Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse,

This peroration with such circumstance! For France, 't is ours; and we will keep it still. Glou. Ay, uncle; we will keep it, if we can;

But now it is impossible we should. Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast, Hath given the duchy of Anjou and Maine

Unto the poor King Reignier, whose large style 111

Agrees not with the leanness of his purse. Sal. Now, by the death of him that died for all, These counties were the keys of Normandy.

But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son?

War. For grief that they are past recovery: For, were there hope to conquer them again,

My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no tears.

Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both;

Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer: 120

And are the cities, that I got with wounds, Deliver'd up again with peaceful words?

Mort Dieu! York. For Suffolk's duke, may he be suffocate,

That dims the honour of this war-like isle! France should have torn and rent my very

heart

Before I would have yielded to this league. I never read but England's kings have had

Large sums of gold and dowries with their wives;

And our King Henry gives away his own, 130 To match with her that brings no vantages.

Glou. A proper jest, and never heard before,

That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth
For costs and charges in transporting her!
She should have stay'd in France, and starv'd in France,

Before—

Car. My Lord of Gloucester, now ye grow too hot:

It was the pleasure of my lord the king.

Glou. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind:

'T is not my speeches that you do mislike, 140
But 't is my presence that doth trouble ye.
Rancour will out: proud prelate, in thy face
I see thy fury. If I longer stay
We shall begin our ancient bickerings.
Lords, farewell; and say, when I am gone,

I prophesied France will be lost ere long.

Exit.

Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage.

'T is known to you he is mine enemy,
Nay, more, an enemy unto you all,
And no great friend, I fear me, to the king. 150

Consider, lords, he is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown:
Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,
There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.
Look to it, lords; let not his smoothing words

Bewitch your hearts; be wise and circumspect.

What though the common people favour him,

Calling him 'Humphrey, the good Duke of Gloucester,'

Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice 160

'Jesu maintain your royal excellence!'
With 'God preserve the good Duke Humphrey!'

I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,
He will be found a dangerous protector.

Buck. Why should he then protect our sovereign,

He being of age to govern of himself?
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And all together, with the Duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoise Duke Humphrey from his seat.

Car. This weighty business will not brook delay; 170

I'll to the Duke of Suffolk presently. Exit.

Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's pride

And greatness of his place be grief to us,
Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal:
His insolence is more intolerable
Than all the princes' in the land beside:
If Gloucester be displac'd, he'll be protector.

Buck. Or thou or I, Somerset, will be protector,

Despite Duke Humphrey or the cardinal.

Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and SOMERSET.

Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him. 180

While these do labour for their own preferment.

Behoves it us to labour for the realm.
I never saw but Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester.

Did bear him like a noble gentleman.
Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal
More like a soldier than a man o' the church,
As stout and proud as he were lord of all,
Swear like a ruffian and demean himself
Unlike the ruler of a commonweal.

Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age, 190
Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy house-keeping,

Hath won the greatest favour of the commons,

Excepting none but good Duke Humphrey:
And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civil discipline,
Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wert regent for our sovereign,
Have made thee fear'd and honour'd of the people.

Join we together for the public good,
In what we can to bridle and suppress 200

The pride of Suffolk and the cardinal,
With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;

And, as we may, cherish Duke Humphrey's deeds.

While they do tend the profit of the land.

War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,
And common profit of his country!

York. Aside. And so says York, for he hath greatest cause.

Sal. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main! O father, Maine is lost!

That Maine which by main force Warwick did win, 210

And would have kept so long as breath did last:

Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine,

Which I will win from France, or else be slain.

Exeunt WARWICK and SALISBURY.

York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;

Paris is lost; the state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point now they are gone.

Suffolk concluded on the articles,
The peers agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd

To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.

I cannot blame them all: what is 't to them? 220

'T is thine they give away, and not their own.

Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage,

And purchase friends, and give to court-zans,

Still revelling like lords till all be gone;
Whileas the silly owner of the goods

SCENE I]

Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands,
 And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,
 While all is shar'd and all is borne away,
 Ready to starve and dare not touch his own:
 So York must sit and fret and bite his tongue 230
 While his own lands are bargain'd for and sold.
 Methinks the realms of England, France and Ireland
 Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood,
 As did the fatal brand Althæa burn'd,
 Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.
 Anjou and Maine both given unto the French!
 Cold news for me, for I had hope of France,
 Even as I have of fertile England's soil.
 A day will come when York shall claim his own;
 And therefore I will take the Nevils' parts
 And make a show of love to proud Duke Humphrey, 241
 And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown,
 For that's the golden mark I seek to hit.
 Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
 Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist,
 Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
 Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown.
 Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve:
 Watch thou and wake when others be asleep,
 To pry into the secrets of the state; 250
 Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,
 With his new bride and England's dear-bought queen,
 And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars:
 Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
 With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd,
 And in my standard bear the arms of York,
 To grapple with the house of Lancaster;
 And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,
 Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of GLOUCESTER'S House.

Enter GLOUCESTER and the DUCHESS.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
 Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load?
 Why doth the great Duke Humphrey knit his brows,
 As frowning at the favours of the world?
 Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
 Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight?
 What seest thou there? King Henry's diadem
 Enchas'd with all the honours of the world?
 If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
 Until thy head be circled with the same. 10

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI

Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold.
 What! is't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine;
 And, having both together heav'd it up,
 We'll both together lift our heads to heaven,
 And never more abase our sight so low
 As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.
Glou. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy lord,
 Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts:
 And may that thought, when I imagine ill
 Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry, 20
 Be my last breathing in this mortal world.
 My troublous dream this night doth make me sad.
Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it
 With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.
Glou. Methought this staff, mine office-badge in court,
 Was broke in twain; by whom I have forgot,
 But, as I think, it was by the cardinal;
 And on the pieces of the broken wand
 Were plac'd the heads of Edmund Duke of Somerset,
 And William de la Pole, first Duke of Suffolk. 30
 This was my dream: what it doth bode, God knows.
Duch. Tut! this was nothing but an argument,
 That he that breaks a stick of Gloucester's grove
 Shall lose his head for his presumption.
 But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke:
 Methought I sat in seat of majesty
 In the cathedral church of Westminster,
 And in that chair where kings and queens are crown'd;
 Where Henry and Dame Margaret kneel'd to me,
 And on my head did set the diadem. 40
Glou. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright: Presumptuous dame! ill-nurtur'd Eleanor!
 Art thou not second woman in the realm,
 And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?
 Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
 Above the reach or compass of thy thought?
 And wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
 To tumble down thy husband and thyself
 From top of honour to disgrace's feet?
 Away from me, and let me hear no more! 50
Duch. What, what, my lord! are you so choleric
 With Eleanor for telling but her dream?
 Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
 And not be check'd.
Glou. Nay, be not angry; I am pleas'd again.

Enter Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 't is his highness' pleasure

You do prepare to ride unto Saint Alban's,

Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk.

Glou. I go. Come, Nell, thou wilt ride with us?

Duch. Yes, my good lord, I'll follow presently.

Enter HUME, GLOUCESTER and Messenger.

Follow I must; I cannot go before,
While Gloucester bears this base and humble mind.

Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks

And smooth my way upon their headless necks;

And, being a woman, I will not be slack
To play my part in Fortune's pageant.

Where are you there? Sir John! nay, fear not, man,

We are alone; here's none but thee and I.

Enter HUME.

Hume. Jesus preserve your royal majesty!

Duch. What say'st thou? majesty! I am but grace.

Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's advice,

Your grace's title shall be multiplied.

Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet conferr'd

With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch,
And Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer?

And will they undertake to do me good?

Hume. This they have promised, to show your highness

A spirit rais'd from depth of under-ground,
That shall make answer to such questions

As by your grace shall be propounded him.
Duch. It is enough: I'll think upon the questions.

When from Saint Alban's we do make return

We'll see these things effected to the full.
Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry man,

With thy confederates in this weighty cause.

Exit.

Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold;

Marry and shall. But, how now, Sir John Hume!

Seal up your lips and give no words but mum:

The business asketh silent secrecy.

Dame Eleanor gives gold to bring the witch:
Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil,

Yet have I gold flies from another coast:
I dare not say from the rich cardinal

And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolk;

Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,
They, knowing Dame Eleanor's aspiring humour,

Have hired me to undermine the duchess
And buz these conjurations in her brain.

They say 'A crafty knave does need no broker.'

Yet am I Suffolk and the cardinal's broker.

Hume, if you take no heed, you shall go near
To call them both a pair of crafty knaves.
Well, so it stands; and thus, I fear at last
Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck,
And her attainure will be Humphrey's fall.

Sort how it will, I shall have gold for all.

Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter three or four Petitioners, PETER, the Armourer's man, being one.

First Petit. My masters, let's stand close: my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.

Second Petit. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a good man. Jesu bless him!

Enter SUFFOLK and Queen MARGARET.

Peter. Here a' comes, methinks, and the queen with him. I'll be the first, sure.

Second Petit. Come back, fool! this is the Duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow! would'st any thing with me?

First Petit. I pray, my lord, pardon me: I took ye for my lord protector.

Q. Mar. To my Lord Protector! Are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them: what is thine?

First Petit. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife, and all, from me.

Suf. Thy wife too! that's some wrong indeed. What's yours? What's here! Against the Duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melford. How now, sir knave!

Second Petit. Alas! sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying that the Duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

Q. Mar. What sayest thou? did the Duke of York say he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? No, forsooth: my master said that he was, and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there?

Enter Servants.

Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently. We'll hear more of your matter before the king.

Exeunt Servants with PETER.

Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected

Under the wings of our protector's grace,
Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

Tears the petition.

Away, base cullions! Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone.

Exeunt Petitioners

Q. Mar. My Lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise,

Is this the fashion in the court of England?
Is this the government of Britain's isle,
And this the royalty of Albion's king?

What! shall King Henry be a pupil still Under the surly Gloucester's governance? 50
Am I a queen in title and in style,
And must be made a subject to a duke?

I tell thee, Pole, when in the city Tours
Thou rann'st a tilt in honour of my love,
And stol'st away the ladies' hearts of France,

I thought King Henry had resembled thee
In courage, courtship, and proportion:

But all his mind is bent to holiness,
To number Ave-Maries on his beads;
His champions are the prophets and apos- 60
tles,

His weapons holy saws of sacred writ,
His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves
Are brazen images of canoniz'd saints.

I would the college of the cardinals
Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the triple crown upon his head:
That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suf. Madam, be patient; as I was cause
Your highness came to England, so will I
In England work your grace's full content. 70

Q. Mar. Beside the haughty protector, have we Beaufort

The imperious churchman, Somerset, Buckingham,

And grumbling York; and not the least of these

But can do more in England than the
king.

Suf. And he of these that can do most of
all

Can do more in England than the Nevils:
Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.

Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much

As that proud dame, the lord protector's
wife:

She sweeps it through the court with troops
of ladies, 80

More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's wife.

Strangers in court do take her for the queen:
She bears a duke's revenues on her back,

And in her heart she scorns our poverty.
Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her?

Contemptuous base-born callat as she is,
She vaunted 'mongst her minions t' other
day,

The very train of her worst wearing gown
Was better worth than all my father's lands.
Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter. 90

Suf. Madam, myself have lim'd a bush
for her,

And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds
That she will light to listen to the lays,

And never mount to trouble you again.
So, let her rest: and, madam, list to me;

For I am bold to counsel you in this.
Although we fancy not the cardinal,

Yet must we join with him and with the
lords

Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace.

As for the Duke of York, this late complaint 100

Will make but little for his benefit:
So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last,
And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Sound a sennet. Enter King HENRY, YORK, and SOMERSET; Duke and Duchess

of GLOUCESTER, Cardinal BEAUFORT, BUCKINGHAM, SALISBURY, and WAR-

WICK.

K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which;

Or Somerset or York, all 's one to me.
York. If York have ill demean'd himself

in France,
Then let him be deny'd the regentship.

Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the
place,

Let York be regent; I will yield to him.
War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea

or no, 110

Dispute not that: York is the worthier.
Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy betters

speak.
War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.

Buck. All in this presence are thy betters,

Warwick.

War. Warwick may live to be the best of
all.

Sal. Peace, son! and show some reason,
Buckingham,

Why Somerset should be preferr'd in this.
Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.

Glou. Madam, the king is old enough

himself
To give his censure: these are no women's matters. 120

Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs
your grace

To be protector of his excellence?
Glou. Madam, I am protector of the

realm,
And at his pleasure will resign my place.

Suf. Resign it then and leave thine insolence.

Since thou wert king, as who is king but thou?

The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck;
The Dauphin hath prevail'd beyond the seas;

And all the peers and nobles of the realm
Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty. 130

Car. The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags

Are lank and lean with thy extortions.
Som. Thy sumptuous buildings and thy wife's attire

Have cost a mass of public treasury.

Buck. Thy cruelty in execution
Upon offenders hath exceeded law,

And left thee to the mercy of the law.
Q. Mar. Thy sale of offices and towns in

France,

If they were known, as the suspect is great,
Would make thee quickly hop without thy
head. 140

Exit GLOUCESTER. The QUEEN drops her fan.

Give me my fan: what, minion! can ye not?
She gives the DUCHESS a box on the ear.
I cry your mercy, madam; was it you?

Duch. Was't I! yea, I it was, proud
Frenchwoman:

Could I come near your beauty with my nails

I'd set my ten commandments in your face.

K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet; 't was against her will.

Duch. Against her will! Good king, look to 't in time;

She'll hamper thee and dandle thee like a baby:

Though in this place most master wear no
breeches,

She shall not strike Dame Eleanor unreveng'd. Exit. 150

Buck. Lord cardinal, I will follow Eleanor,
And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds:

She's tickled now; her fury needs no
spurs,

She'll gallop far enough to her destruction.
Exit.

Re-enter GLOUCESTER.

Glou. Now, lords, my choler being overblown

With walking once about the quadrangle,
I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.

As for your spiteful false objections,

Prove them, and I lie open to the law:

But God in mercy so deal with my soul 160

As I in duty love my king and country!

But to the matter that we have in hand.

I say, my sovereign, York is meekest man

To be your regent in the realm of France.

Suf. Before we make election, give me

leave

To show some reason, of no little force,

That York is most unmeet of any man.

York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet:

First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride;

Next, if I be appointed for the place, 170

My Lord of Somerset will keep me here,

Without discharge, money, or furniture,

Till France be won into the Dauphin's hands.

Last time I danc'd attendance on his will

Till Paris was besieg'd, famish'd, and lost.

War. That can I witness; and a fouler fact

Did never traitor in the land commit.

Suf. Peace, headstrong Warwick!

War. Image of pride, why should I hold my peace?

Enter HORNER the Armourer, and his man

PETER, guarded.

Suf. Because here is a man accus'd of treason: 180

Pray God the Duke of York excuse him-

self!

York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor?

K. Hen. What mean'st thou, Suffolk?
Tell me, what are these?

Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the
man

That doth accuse his master of high treason.

His words were these: that Richard Duke
of York

Was rightful heir unto the English crown,
And that your majesty was an usurper.

K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words? 189

Hor. An't shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter:

God is my witness, I am falsely accused by the villain.

Pet. By these ten bones, my lords, he did speak them to me in the garret one night,

as we were scouring my Lord of York's armour.

York. Base dunghill villain, and mechanical,

I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's
speech.

I do beseech your royal majesty
Let him have all the rigour of the law. 199

Hor. Alas! my lord, hang me if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my prentice;

and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witness of this: therefore, I beseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

Glou. This doom, my lord, if I may judge:
Let Somerset be regent o'er the French,

Because in York this breeds suspicion; 210

And let these have a day appointed them
For single combat in convenient place;

For he hath witness of his servant's malice.
This is the law, and this Duke Humphrey's

doom.

Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty.

Hor. And I accept the combat willingly.

Pet. Alas! my lord, I cannot fight; for God's sake! pity my case; the spite of man prevaileth against me. O Lord! have mercy upon me; I shall never be able to fight a blow. O Lord! my heart. 221

Glou. Sirrah, or you must fight or else be hang'd.

K. Hen. Away with them to prison; and the day

Of combat shall be the last of the next month.

Come, Somerset, we'll see thee sent away.
Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. The Duke of GLOUCESTER'S Garden.

Enter MARGERY JOURDAIN, HUME, SOUTHWELL, and BOLINGBROKE.

Hume. Come, my masters; the duchess,
I tell you, expects performance of your promises.

Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided. Will her ladyship behold and hear our exorcisms?

Hume. Ay; what else? fear you not her courage.

Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit: but it shall be convenient, Master Hume, that you be by her alight while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go, in God's name, and leave us.

Exit HUME. Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth; John Southwell, read you; and let us to our work.

Enter DUCHESS aloft, HUME following.

Duch. Well said, my masters, and welcome all.

To this gear the sooner the better.

Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times:

Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,

The time of night when Troy was set on fire;

The time when screech-owls cry, and bandogs howl,

And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves,

That time best fits the work we have in hand. Madam, sit you, and fear not: whom we raise

We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

Here they do the ceremonies belonging, and make the circle; BOLINGBROKE or SOUTHWELL reads, Conjuro te, etc. It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.

Spir. Adsum.

M. Jour. Asmath!

By the eternal God, whose name and power Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask; For till thou speak thou shalt not pass from hence.

Spir. Ask what thou wilt. That I had said and done!

Boling. First, of the king: what shall of him become?

Spir. The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose;

But him outlive, and die a violent death.

As the Spirit speaks, SOUTHWELL writes the answer.

Boling. What fates await the Duke of Suffolk?

Spir. By water shall he die and take his end.

Boling. What shall befall the Duke of Somerset?

Spir. Let him shun castles:

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains Than where castles mounted stand.

Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Boling. Descend to darkness and the burning lake:

False fiend, avoid!

Thunder and lightning. Spirit descends.

Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM, hastily, with their Guard.

York. Lay hands upon these traitors and their trash.

Beldam, I think we watch'd you at an inch. What! madam, are you there? the king and commonweal

Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains: My lord protector will, I doubt it not,

See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.

Duch. Not half so bad as thine to England's king,

Injurious duke, that threatest where's no cause.

Buck. True, madam, none at all. What call you this?

Away with them! let them be clapp'd up close,

And kept asunder. You, madam, shall with us:

Stafford, take her to thee.

We'll see your trinkets here all forthcoming. All, away!

Exeunt Guard, with SOUTHWELL, BOLINGBROKE, etc.

York. Lord Buckingham, methinks you watch'd her well:

A pretty plot, well chosen, to build upon! Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.

What have we here?

The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose; But him outlive, and die a violent death.

Why, this is just

Aio te, Æacida, Romanos vincere posse. Well, to the rest:

Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolk?

By water shall he die and take his end.

What shall betide the Duke of Somerset?

Let him shun castles:

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains

Than where castles mounted stand.

Come, come, my lords; these oracles Are hardly attain'd, and hardly understood.

The king is now in progress towards Saint Alban's;

With him the husband of this lovely lady: Thither go these news as fast as horse can carry them:

A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.

Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my Lord of York,

To be the post, in hope of his reward.

York. At your pleasure, my good lord. Who's within there, ho!

Enter a Servingman.

Invite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwick To sup with me to-morrow night. Away!

Exeunt.

ACT II

SCENE I.—Saint Alban's.

Enter King HENRY, Queen MARGARET, GLOUCESTER, Cardinal BEAUFORT, and SUFFOLK, with Falconers halloing.

Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,

I saw not better sport these seven years' day:

Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high, And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.

K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,

And what a pitch she flew above the rest! To see how God in all his creatures works!

Yea, man and birds are fain of climbing high.

Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty. My lord protector's hawks do tower so well;

They know their master loves to be aloft, And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.

Glou. My lord, 't is but a base ignoble mind

That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Car. I thought as much; he'd be above the clouds.

Glou. Ay, my lord cardinal? how think you by that?

Were it not good your grace could fly to heaven?

K. Hen. The treasury of everlasting joy.

Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts

Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart; 20 Pernicious protector, dangerous peer, That smooth'st it so with king and commonweal!

Glou. What! cardinal, is your priesthood grown peremptory?

Tantæne animis cœlestibus iræ? Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such malice;

With such holiness can you do it?

Suf. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes

So good a quarrel and so bad a peer.

Glou. As who, my lord?

Suf. Why, as you, my lord; An't like your lordly lord-protectorship. 30

Glou. Why, Suffolk, England knows thine insolence.

Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloucester.

K. Hen. I prithee, peace, Good queen, and whet not on these furious peers;

For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.

Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make

Against this proud protector with my sword.

Glou. Aside to the Cardinal. Faith, holy uncle, would 't were come to that!

Car. Aside to GLOUCESTER. Marry, when thou darest.

Glou. Aside to the Cardinal. Make up no factious numbers for the matter; 40 In thine own person answer thy abuse.

Car. Aside to GLOUCESTER. Ay, where thou dar'st not peep: an if thou dar'st, This evening on the east side of the grove.

K. Hen. How now, my lords!

Car. Believe me, cousin Gloucester, Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,

We had had more sport.

Aside to GLOUCESTER. Come with thy two-hand sword.

Glou. True, uncle.

Car. Aside to GLOUCESTER. Are ye advis'd? the east side of the grove.

Glou. Aside to the Cardinal. Cardinal, I am with you.

K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloucester!

Glou. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.

Aside to the Cardinal. Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your crown

For this, or all my fence shall fail.

Car. Aside to GLOUCESTER. Medice, teibsum—

Protector, see to 't well, protect yourself.

K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs, lords.

How irksome is this music to my heart! When such strings jar, what hope of harmony?

I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter One, crying 'A miracle!'

Glou. What means this noise? Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim? 60

One. A miracle! a miracle!

Suf. Come to the king and tell him what miracle.

One. Forsooth, a blind man at Saint Alban's shrine,

Within this half hour hath receiv'd his sight; A man that ne'er saw in his life before.

K. Hen. Now, God be prais'd, that to believing souls

Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Alban's and his Brethren; and SIMPCOX, borne between two persons in a chair; his Wife and a great multitude following.

Car. Here comes the townsmen on procession,

To present your highness with the man.

K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale, 70

Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.

Glou. Stand by, my masters; bring him near the king:

His highness' pleasure is to talk with him.

K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

That we for thee may glorify the Lord. What! hast thou been long blind, and now restor'd?

Simp. Born blind, an 't please your grace.

Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.

Suf. What woman is this?

Wife. His wife, an 't like your worship. 80

Glou. Hadst thou been his mother, thou could'st have better told.

K. Hen. Where wert thou born?

Simp. At Berwick in the north, an 't like your grace.

K. Hen. Poor soul! God's goodness hath been great to thee:

Let never day nor night unhallow'd pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, cam'st thou here by chance,

Or of devotion, to this holy shrine?

Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd

A hundred times and oftener in my sleep, so
By good Saint Alban; who said, 'Simpcox, come;

Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.'

Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft

Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

Car. What! art thou lame?

Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!

Suf. How cam'st thou so?

Simp. A fall off of a tree.

Wife. A plum-tree, master.

Glou. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O! born so, master.

Glou. What! and would'st climb a tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true; and bought his climbing very dear. 100

Glou. Mass, thou lov'dst plums well, that would'st venture so.

Simp. Alas! master, my wife desir'd some damsons,

And made me climb with danger of my life.

Glou. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve.

Let me see thine eyes: wink now: now open them.

In my opinion yet thou seest not well.

Simp. Yes, master, clear as day, I thank God and Saint Alban.

Glou. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this cloak of?

Simp. Red, master; red as blood. 110

Glou. Why, that's well said. What colour is my gown of?

Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black as jet.

K. Hen. Why then, thou know'st what colour jet is of?

Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see.

Glou. But cloaks and gowns before this day a many.

Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.

Glou. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name?

Simp. Alas! master, I know not.

Glou. What's his name?

Simp. I know not. 120

Glou. Nor his?

Simp. No, indeed, master.

Glou. What's thine own name?

Simp. Saunder Simpcox, an if it please you, master.

Glou. Then, Saunder, sit there, the lyingest knave in Christendom. If thou hadst been born blind, thou might'st as well have known all our names as thus to name the several colours we do wear. Sight may distinguish of colours, but suddenly to nominate them all, it is impossible. My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle; and would ye not think his cunning to be great, that could restore this cripple to his legs again? 132

Simp. O master, that you could!

Glou. My masters of Saint Alban's, have you not beadles in your town, and things called whips?

May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.

Glou. Then send for one presently. 139

May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight. Exit an Attendant.

Glou. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by. Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool and run away.

Simp. Alas master, I am not able to stand alone: You go about to torture me in vain.

Re-enter Attendant, and a Beadle with a whip.

Glou. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs. Sirrah beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.

Bead. I will, my lord. Come on, sirrah; off with your doublet quickly. 151

Simp. Alas! master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the stool and runs away; and they follow and cry, 'A miracle!'

K. Hen. O God! seest thou this, and bearest so long?

Q. Mar. It made me laugh to see the villain run.

Glou. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.

Wife. Alas! sir, we did it for pure need.

Glou. Let them be whipped through every market-town till they come to Berwick, from whence they came. 160

Exeunt Mayor, Beadle, Wife, etc.

Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.

Suf. True; made the lame to leap and fly away.

Glou. But you have done more miracles than I;

You made in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.

A sort of naughty persons, lowly bent,
Under the countenance and confederacy
Of Lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,
The ringleader and head of all this rout, 170

Have practis'd dangerously against your state,

Dealing with witches and with conjurers:
Whom we have apprehended in the fact;
Raising up wicked spirits from underground,
Demanding of King Henry's life and death,
And other of your highness' privy council,
As more at large your grace shall understand.

Car. And so, my lord protector, by this means

Your lady is forthcoming yet at London.

This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge; 180

'T is like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.

Glou. Ambitious churchman, leave to afflict my heart:

Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers;

And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,
Or to the meanest groom.

K. Hen. O God! what mischiefs work the wicked ones,
Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby.

Q. Mar. Gloucester, see here the tainture of thy nest.

And look thyself be faultless, thou wert best.

Glou. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal. 190

How I have lov'd my king and commonweal;

And, for my wife, I know not how it stands.
Sorry I am to hear what I have heard:

Noble she is, but if she have forgot Honour and virtue, and convers'd with such

As, like to pitch, defile nobility,
I banish her my bed and company,

And give her as a prey to law and shame,
That hath dishonour'd Gloucester's honest name.

K. Hen. Well, for this night we will repose us here: 200

To-morrow toward London back again,
To look into this business thoroughly,

And call these foul offenders to their answers;

And poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. The Duke of YORK'S Garden.

Enter YORK, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.

York. Now, my good Lords of Salisbury and Warwick,

Our simple supper ended, give me leave
In this close walk to satisfy myself,

In craving your opinion of my title,
Which is in allible, to England's crown.

Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full.

War. Sweet York, begin; and if thy claim be good,

The Nevils are thy subjects to command.

York. Then thus:

Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons; 10

The first, Edward the Black Prince, Prince of Wales;

The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,

Lionel Duke of Clarence; next to whom
Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster;

The fifth was Edmund Langley, Duke of York;

The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester;

William of Windsor was the seventh and last.

Edward the Black Prince died before his father,

And left behind him Richard, his only son,
Who, after Edward the Third's death,

reign'd as king; 20

Till Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Lancaster,
The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,

Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth,
Seiz'd on the realm, depos'd the rightful

king,
Sent his poor queen to France, from whence

she came,
And him to Pomfret: where, as all you know,

Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.

War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.

York. Which now they hold by force and not by right; 30

For Richard, the first son's heir, being dead,
The issue of the next son should have reign'd.

Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir.

York. The third son, Duke of Clarence,
from whose line

I claim the crown, had issue Philippe, a daughter,

Who married Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March;

Edmund had issue, Roger, Earl of March;
Roger had issue, Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor.

Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Bolingbroke,

As I have read, laid claim unto the crown; 40
And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king,

Who kept him in captivity till he died.
But to the rest.

York. His eldest sister, Anne,
My mother, being heir unto the crown,

Married Richard, Earl of Cambridge, who was son

To Edmund Langley, Edward the Third's fifth son.

By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir
To Roger, Earl of March, who was the son

Of Edmund Mortimer, who married Philippe,
Sole daughter unto Lionel Duke of Clarence; 50

So, if the issue of the elder son
Succeed before the younger, I am king.

War. What plain proceeding is more plain than this?

Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,

The fourth son; York claims it from the third.

Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:
It fails not yet, but flourishes in thee,
And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.
Then, father Salisbury, kneel we together,
And in this private plot be we the first
That shall salute our rightful sovereign
With honour of his birthright to the crown.
Both. Long live our sovereign Richard,
England's king!

York. We thank you, lords! But I am not your king
Till I be crown'd and that my sword be stain'd

With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster;
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy.

Do you as I do in these dangerous days,
Wink at the Duke of Suffolk's insolence,
At Beaufort's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
At Buckingham and all the crew of them,
Till they have snar'd the shepherd of the flock.

That virtuous prince, the good Duke Humphrey:

'T is that they seek; and they in seeking
that

Shall find their deaths, if York can prophesy.
Sal. My lord, break we off; we know your mind at full.

War. My heart assures me that the Earl of Warwick

Shall one day make the Duke of York a king.

York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself:

Richard shall live to make the Earl of Warwick

The greatest man in England but the king.
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Hall of Justice.

Sound trumpets. Enter King HENRY,
Queen MARGARET, GLOUCESTER, YORK,
SUFFOLK, and SALISBURY; the Duchess of GLOUCESTER, MARGERY JOURDAIN, SOUTHWELL, HUME, and BOLINGBROKE,
under guard.

K. Hen. Stand forth, Dame Eleanor Cob-ham, Gloucester's wife.

In sight of God and us, your guilt is great:
Receive the sentence of the law for sins
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to
death.

You four, from hence to prison back again;
From thence unto the place of execution:
The witch in Smithfield shall be burn'd to ashes,

And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.

You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
Despoiled of your honour in your life,
Shall, after three days' open penance done,
Live in your country here in banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man.

Duch. Welcome is banishment; welcome were my death.

Glou. Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath judged thee:

I cannot justify whom the law condemns.

Exeunt the DUCHESS and the other Prisoners, guarded.

Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of
grief.

Ah! Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground.

I beseech your majesty, give me leave to
go;

Sorrow would solace and mine age would ease.

K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester: ere thou go,

Give up thy staff: Henry will to himself
Protector be; and God shall be my hope,

My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet.
And go in peace, Humphrey, no less below'd

Than when thou wert protector to thy king.

Q. Mar. I see no reason why a king of years

Should be to be protected like a child.
God and King Henry govern England's

realm!
Give up your staff, sir, and the king his

realm.

Glou. My staff? here, noble Henry, is my staff:

As willingly do I the same resign
As e'er thy father Henry made it mine;

And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it
As others would ambitiously receive it.

Farewell, good king! when I am dead and
gone,

May honourable peace attend thy throne.
Exit.

Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen;

And Humphrey Duke of Gloucester scarce
himself,

That bears so shrewd a maim: two pulls at once;

His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off;
This staff of honour raught: there let it

stand,

Where it best fits to be, in Henry's hand.

Suf. Thus droops this lofty pine and hangs his sprays;

Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest
days.

York. Lords, let him go. Please it your
majesty,

This is the day appointed for the combat;
And ready are the appellant and defendant,

The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,

So please your highness to behold the fight.
Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord; for purposely

therefore

Left I the court to see this quarrel tried.
K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all things fit:

Here let them end it; and God defend the
right!

York. I never saw a fellow worse bested,
Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,
The servant of this armourer, my lords.

Enter, on one side, HORNER, and his Neighbours drinking to him so much that he is drunk; and he enters bearing his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it; a drum before him: at the other side, PETER, with a drum and sand-bag; and Prentices drinking to him.

First Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack: and fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough. 61

Second Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of charneco.

Third Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour: drink, and fear not your man.

Hor. Let it come, i' faith, and I'll pledge you all; and a fig for Peter!

First Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee; and be not afraid.

Second Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master: fight for credit of the prentices. 71

Peter. I thank you all: drink, and pray for me, I pray you; for I think I have taken my last draught in this world. Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee my apron; and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer: and here, Tom, take all the money that I have. O Lord, bless me! I pray God, for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much fence already. 79

Sal. Come, leave your drinking and fall to blows. Sirrah, what's thy name?

Peter. Peter, forsooth.

Sal. Peter! what more?

Peter. Thump.

Sal. Thump! then see thou thump thy master well.

Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave, and myself an honest man: and touching the Duke of York, I will take my death I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen; and therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow. 93

York. Dispatch: this knave's tongue begins to double. Sound, trumpets, alarum to the combatants.

Alarum. They fight, and PETER strikes down his Master.

Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason. Dies.

York. Take away his weapon. Fellow, thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way. 99

Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemies in this presence? O Peter! thou hast prevailed in right.

K. Hen. Go, take hence that traitor from our sight;

For by his death we do perceive his guilt: And God in justice hath reveal'd to us

The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,

Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully. 110

Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward.

Sound a flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Street.

Enter GLOUCESTER and Servingmen, in mourning cloaks.

Glou. Thus sometimes hath the brightest day a cloud;

And after summer evermore succeeds
Barren winter with his wrathful nipping cold:

So cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.
Sirs, what's o'clock?

Serv. Ten, my lord.

Glou. Ten is the hour that was appointed me

To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess:

Uneath may she endure the flinty streets,
To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook 10
The abject people gazing on thy face

With envious looks, laughing at thy shame,
That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.

But soft! I think she comes; and I'll prepare

My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Duchess of GLOUCESTER, in a white sheet, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand; Sir JOHN STANLEY, a Sheriff, and Officers.

Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff.

Glou. No, stir not, for your lives; let her pass by.

Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame?

Now thou dost penance too. Look! how they gaze. 20

See! how the giddy multitude do point,
And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee.

Ah! Gloucester, hide thee from their hateful looks,

And, in thy closet pent up, rue my shame.
And ban thine enemies, both mine and thine.

Glou. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief.

Duch. Ah! Gloucester, teach me to forget myself;

For whilst I think I am thy married wife,
And thou a prince, protector of this land,

Methinks I should not thus be led along, 30
Mail'd up in shame, with papers on my back,

And follow'd with a rabble that rejoice
To see my tears and hear my deep-fet groans.

The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet,
And when I start, the envious people laugh,

And bid me be advised how I tread.
Ah! Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke?

Trow'st thou that e'er I'll look upon the world,

Or count them happy that enjoy the sun?
No; dark shall be my light, and night my day;

To think upon my pomp shall be my hell. 40

Sometime I'll say, I am Duke Humphrey's wife,

And he a prince and ruler of the land:

Yet so he rul'd and such a prince he was
As he stood by whilst I, his forlorn duchess,
Was made a wonder and a pointing-stock
To every idle rascal follower.

But be thou mild and blush not at my shame;

Nor stir at nothing till the axe of death
Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will; 50
For Suffolk, he that can do all in all
With her that hateth thee, and hates us all,
And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,

Have all lim'd bushes to betray thy wings;
And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee:

But fear not thou, until thy foot be snar'd,
Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.

Glou. Ah! Nell, forbear: thou aimest all awry;

I must offend before I be attained;
And had I twenty times so many foes, 60
And each of them had twenty times their power,

All these could not procure me any scath,
So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.
Would'st have me rescue thee from this reproach?

Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,
But I in danger for the breach of law.

Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell:

I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month. 71

Glou. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before!

This is close dealing. Well, I will be there.

Exit Herald.

My Nell, I take my leave: and, Master sheriff,

Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.

Sher. An't please your grace, here my commission stays,

And Sir John Stanley is appointed now
To take her with him to the Isle of Man.

Glou. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady here?

Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace. 80

Glou. Entreat her not the worse in that I pray

You use her well. The world may laugh again;

And I may live to do you kindness if You do it her: and so, Sir John, farewell.

Duch. What! gone, my lord, and bid me not farewell.

Glou. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.

Exeunt GLOUCESTER and Servingmen.

Duch. Art thou gone too? All comfort go with thee!

For none abides with me: my joy is death;
Death, at whose name I oft have been afraid,

Because I wish'd this world's eternity. 90
Stanley, I prithee, go, and take me hence;
I care not whither, for I beg no favour,
Only convey me where thou art commanded.

Stan. Why, madam, that is to the Isle of Man:

There to be us'd according to your state.

Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:

And shall I then be us'd reproachfully?

Stan. Like to a duchess, and Duke Humphrey's lady:

According to that state you shall be used.

Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare, 100

Although thou hast been conduct of my shame.

Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.

Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharged.

Come, Stanley, shall we go?

Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off this sheet,

And go we to attire you for our journey.

Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet:

No; it will hang upon my richest robes,
And show itself, attire me how I can. 109

Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison.

Exeunt.

ACT III

SCENE I.—The Abbey at Bury St. Edmund's.

Sound a sennet. Enter to the Parliament, King HENRY, Queen MARGARET, Cardinal BEAUFORT, SUFFOLK, YORK, BUCKINGHAM, and Others.

K. Hen. I muse my Lord of Gloucester is not come:

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Q. Mar. Can you not see? or will ye not observe

The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?
With what a majesty he bears himself,

How insolent of late he is become,

How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himself?

We know the time since he was mild and affable,

And if we did but glance a far-off look, 10
Immediately he was upon his knee,

That all the court admir'd him for submission:

But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,
When every one will give the time of day,

He knits his brow and shows an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee,

Disdaining duty that to us belongs.
Small curs are not regarded when they grin,

But great men tremble when the lion roars;
And Humphrey is no little man in England. 20

First note that he is near you in descent,

And should you fall, he is the next will mount.

Me seemeth then it is no policy,
Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,
And his advantage following your decease,
That he should come about your royal person

Or be admitted to your highness' council.
By flattery hath he won the commons' hearts,

And when he please to make commotion,
'T is to be fear'd they all will follow him. 30
Now 't is the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;

Suffer them now and they'll o'ergrow the garden,

And choke the herbs for want of husbandry.
The reverent care I bear unto my lord
Made me collect these dangers in the duke.
If it be fond, call it a woman's fear;
Which fear if better reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe and say I wrong'd the duke.

My Lord of Suffolk, Buckingham, and York,
Reprove my allegation if you can; 40
Or else conclude my words effectual.

Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this duke;

And had I first been put to speak my mind,
I think I should have told your grace's tale.
The duchess by his subornation,
Upon my life, began her devilish practices:
Or if he were not privy to those faults,
Yet, by repute of his high descent,
As next the king he was successive heir,
And such high vaunts of his nobility, 50
Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess
By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall.

Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep,

And in his simple show he harbours treason.
The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb:

No, no, my sovereign; Gloucester is a man
Unsound yet, and full of deep deceit.

Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,
Devise strange deaths for small offences done?

York. And did he not, in his protectorship, 60

Levy great sums of money through the realm
For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?
By means whereof the towns each day revolted.

Buck. Tut! these are petty faults to faults unknown,

Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humphrey.

K. Hen. My lords, at once: the care you have of us,

To mow down thorns that would annoy our foot,

Is worthy praise; but shall I speak my conscience,

Our kinsman Gloucester is as innocent
From meaning treason to our royal person, 70

As is the sucking lamb or harmless dove.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given

To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

Q. Mar. Ah! what's more dangerous than this fond affiance.

Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd.

For he's disposed as the hateful raven:
Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,
For he's inclin'd as is the ravenous wolf.
Who cannot steal a shape that means deceit?

Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all so
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter SOMERSET.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!

K. Hen. Welcome, Lord Somerset. What news from France?

Som. That all your interest in those territories

Is utterly bereft you: all is lost.

K. Hen. Cold news, Lord Somerset: but God's will be done!

York. Aside. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France

As firmly as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
And caterpillars eat my leaves away; 90
But I will remedy this gear ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Enter GLOUCESTER.

Glou. All happiness unto my lord the king!
Pardon, my liege, that I have stay'd so long.

Suf. Nay, Gloucester, know that thou art come too soon,

Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art.
I do arrest thee of high treason here.

Glou. Well, Suffolk's duke, thou shalt not see me blush,

Nor change my countenance for this arrest:
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. 100
The purest spring is not so free from mud
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign.
Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?

York. 'T is thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,

And being protector, stay'd the soldier's pay;

By means whereof his highness hath lost France.

Glou. Is it but thought so? What are they that think it?

I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay,
Nor ever had one penny bribe from France.

So help me God, as I have watch'd the night, 110

Ay, night by night, in studying good for England.

That do it that e'er I wrested from the king,
Or any groat I hoarded to my use,

Be brought against me at my trial-day!
No; many a pound of mine own proper store,

Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I dispursed to the garrisons,

And never ask'd for restitution.

Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.

Glou. I say no more than truth, so help me God! 120

York. In your protectorship you did devise

Strange tortures for offenders, never heard of.

That England was defam'd by tyranny.

Glou. Why, 'tis well known that, whiles I was protector,

Pity was all the fault that was in me;

For I should melt at an offender's tears,
And lowly words were ransom for their fault.

Unless it were a bloody murderer,

Or foul felonious thief that fleec'd poor passengers,

I never gave them condign punishment: 130
Murder indeed, that bloody sin, I tortur'd
Above the felon or what trespass else.

Suf. My lord, these faults are easy,
quickly answer'd;

But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,

Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.

I do arrest you in his highness' name;

And here commit you to my lord cardinal
To keep, until your further time of trial.

K. Hen. My Lord Gloucester, 'tis my special hope

That you will clear yourself from all suspect: 140

My conscience tells me you are innocent.

Glou. Ah! gracious lord, these days are dangerous.

Virtue is chok'd with foul ambition,

And charity chas'd hence by rancour's hand;
Foul subornation is predominant,

And equity exil'd your highness' land.

I know their complot is to have my life;

And if my death might make this island happy,

And prove the period of their tyranny,

I would expend it with all willingness; 150
But mine is made the prologue to their play;

For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,

Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.

Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,

And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;
Sharp Buckingham unburdens with his tongue

The envious load that lies upon his heart;

And dogged York, that reaches at the moon
Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,

By false accuse doth level at my life: 160

And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,
Causeless have laid disgraces on my head.

And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up

My liefest liege to be mine enemy.

Ay, all of you have laid your heads together;
Myself had notice of your conventicles,

And all to make away my guiltless life.

I shall not want false witness to condemn me.

Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;
The ancient proverb will be well effected:
'A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.' 171
Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable.
If those that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife and traitors'

rage

Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,

And the offender granted scope of speech,
'T will make them cool in zeal unto your grace.

Suf. Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here

With ignominious words, though clerkly couch'd,

As if she had suborned some to swear 180
False allegations to o'erthrow his state?

Q. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide.

Glou. Far truer spokē than meant: I lose, indeed;

Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me false!

And well such losers may have leave to speak.

Buck. He 'll wrest the sense and hold us here all day.

Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner.

Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.

Glou. Ah! thus King Henry throws away his crutch

Before his legs be firm to bear his body: 190
Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnawing who shall gnaw thee first.

Ah! that my fear were false; ah! that it were;

For, good King Henry, thy decay I fear.

Exeunt Attendants with GLOUCESTER.

K. Hen. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best,

Do or undo, as if ourself were here.

Q. Mar. What! will your highness leave the parliament?

K. Hen. Ay, Margaret; my heart is drown'd with grief,

Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes,

My body round engirt with misery, 200
For what's more miserable than discontent?

Ah! uncle Humphrey, in thy face I see
The map of honour, truth, and loyalty;

And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come

That e'er I prov'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.

What low'ring star now envies thy estate,
That these great lords, and Margaret our queen,

Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?
Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man wrong;

And as the butcher takes away the calf, 210
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strays,

Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house;
Even so, remorseless, have they borne him hence;

And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one
went,
And can do nought but wail her darling's
loss;
Even so myself bewails good Gloucester's case
With sad unhelpful tears, and with dimm'd
eyes

Look after him, and cannot do him good;
So mighty are his vowed enemies. 227
His fortunes I will weep; and 'twixt each
groan

Say 'Who's a traitor? Gloucester he is none.' Exit.

Q. Mar. Fair lords, cold snow melts with the sun's hot beams.

Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,
Too full of foolish pity; and Gloucester's
show

Beguiles him as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers;
Or as the snake, roll'd in a flowering bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting
a child

That for the beauty thinks it excellent. 230
Believe me, lords, were none more wise
than I,

And yet herein I judge mine own wit good,
This Gloucester should be quickly rid the
world.

To rid us from the fear we have of him.
Car. That he should die is worthy policy;
But yet we want a colour for his death.

'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of law.

Suf. But in my mind that were no policy:
The king will labour still to save his life;
The commons haply rise to save his life; 240
And yet we have but trivial argument,
More than mistrust, that shows him worthy
death.

York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.

Suf. Ah! York, no man alive so fain as I.
York. 'Tis York that hath more reason for his death.

But, my lord cardinal, and you, my Lord of Suffolk,

Say as you think, and speak it from your
souls,

Were 't not all one an empty eagle were set
To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
As place Duke Humphrey for the king's protector? 250

Q. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.

Suf. Madam, 'tis true; and were 't not madness then

To make the fox surveyor of the fold?
Who, being accus'd a crafty murderer,
His guilt should be but idly posted over
Because his purpose is not executed.

No; let him die, in that he is a fox,
By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock,
Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson
blood,

As Humphrey, prov'd by reasons, to my
liege. 260

And do not stand on quillets how to slay
him:

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty,
Sleeping or waking, 'tis no matter how,
So he be dead; for that is good deceit
Which mates him first that first intends deceit.

Q. Mar. Thrice noble Suffolk, 'tis resolutely spoke.

Suf. Not resolute, except so much were
done;

For things are often spoke and seldom
meant:

But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious, 270
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,
Say but the word and I will be his priest.

Car. But I would have him dead, my Lord of Suffolk,

Ere you can take due orders for a priest:
Say you consent and censure well the deed,
And I'll provide his executioner;
I tender so the safety of my liege.

Suf. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.

Q. Mar. And so say I.
York. And I: and now we three have spoke it, 280

It skills not greatly who impugns our doom.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Great lords, from Ireland am I come again,

To signify that rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword.
Send succours, lords, and stop the rage be-
time,

Before the wound do grow incurable;
For, being green, there is great hope of help.

Car. A breach that craves a quick expedient stop!

What counsel give you in this weighty cause?

York. That Somerset be sent as regent
thither. 290

'Tis meet that lucky ruler be employ'd;
Witness the fortune he hath had in France.

Som. If York, with all his far-fet policy,
Had been the regent there instead of me,
He never would have stay'd in France so
long.

York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast
done.

I rather would have lost my life betimes
Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
By staying there so long till all were lost.
Show me one scar character'd on thy skin: 300

Men's flesh preserv'd so whole do seldom win.

Q. Mar. Nay, then, this spark will prove a raging fire,

If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with.
No more, good York; sweet Somerset, be still;

Thy fortune, York, hadst thou been regent
there,

Might happily have prov'd far worse than his.

York. What! worse than nought? nay,
then a shame take all.

Som. And in the number thee, that wish-est shame.

Car. My Lord of York, try what your fortune is.

The uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms 310
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
Collected choicely, from each county some,
And try your hap against the Irishmen?

York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.

Suf. Why, our authority is his consent,
And what we do establish he confirms:
Then, noble York, take thou this task in
hand.

York. I am content: provide me soldiers,
lords,

Whiles I take order for mine own affairs. 320

Suf. A charge, Lord York, that I will see perform'd.

But now return we to the false Duke Humphrey.

Car. No more of him; for I will deal with
him

That henceforth he shall trouble us no more.
So break off; the day is almost spent.
Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.

York. My Lord of Suffolk, within fourteen
days

At Bristol I expect my soldiers;
For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.

Suf. I'll see it truly done, my Lord of York. Exeunt all but YORK.

York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful thoughts, 331

And change misdoubt to resolution:
Be that thou hop'st to be, or what thou art
Resign to death; it is not worth the enjoying.
Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born
man,

And find no harbour in a royal heart.
Faster than spring-time showers comes thought on thought,

And not a thought but thinks on dignity.
My brain, more busy than the labouring
spider,

Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies. 340

Well, nobles, well; 't is politically done,
To send me packing with an host of men;
I fear me you but warm the starved snake,
Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting
your hearts.

'T was men I lack'd, and you will give them
me;

I take it kindly; yet be well assur'd
You put sharp weapons in a madman's
hands.

Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven or hell; 350

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my head,
Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,

Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.
And, for a minister of my intent,
I have seduc'd a headstrong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,

To make commotion, as full well he can,
Under the title of John Mortimer. 359
In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns,
And fought so long, till that his thighs with darts

Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porpentine:
And, in the end being rescu'd, I have seen
Him caper upright like a wild Morisco,
Shaking the bloody darts as he his bells.
Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kern,
Hath he conversed with the enemy,

And undiscover'd come to me again,
And given me notice of their villanies. 370
This devil here shall be my substitute;
For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble:
By this I shall perceive the commons' mind,
How they affect the house and claim of York.
Say he be taken, rack'd, and tortured,
I know no pain they can inflict upon him
Will make him say I mov'd him to those arms.

Say that he thrive, as 't is great like he will,
Why, then from Ireland come I with my
strength, 380

And reap the harvest which that rascal
sow'd;

For Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart, the next for me. Exit.

SCENE II.—Bury St. Edmund's. A Room of State.

Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

First Mur. Run to my Lord of Suffolk; let him know
We have dispatch'd the duke, as he commanded.

Second Mur. O! that it were to do. What have we done?

Didst ever hear a man so penitent?

First Mur. Here comes my lord.

Enter SUFFOLK.

Suf. Now, sirs, have you dispatched this thing?

First Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead.

Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house;

I will reward you for this venturous deed.
The king and all the peers are here at
hand. 10

Have you laid fair the bed? Is all things
well,

According as I gave directions?

First Mur. 'T is, my good lord.

Suf. Away! be gone.

Exeunt Murderers.

*Sound Trumpets. Enter King HENRY,
Queen MARGARET, Cardinal BEAUFORT,
SOMERSET, Lords, and Others.*

K. Hen. Go call our uncle to our presence straight;

Say we intend to try his grace to-day,
If he be guilty, as 't is published.

Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord.
Exit.

K. Hen. Lords, take your places; and, I pray you all,
Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloucester 20

Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
He be approv'd in practice culpable.

Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail

That faultless may condemn a nobleman!
Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion!

K. Hen. I thank thee, Meg; these words content me much.

Re-enter SUFFOLK.

How now! why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?

Where is our uncle? what's the matter, Suffolk?

Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloucester is dead.

Q. Mar. Marry, God forfend! 30

Car. God's secret judgment: I did dream
to-night

The duke was dumb and could not speak a word. The KING swoons.

Q. Mar. How fares my lord? Help, lords!
the king is dead.

Som. Rear up his body; wring him by the nose.

Q. Mar. Run, go, help, help! O, Henry!
ope thine eyes.

Suf. He doth revive again. Madam, be patient.

K. Hen. O heavenly God!

Q. Mar. How fares my gracious lord?

Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious
Henry, comfort!

K. Hen. What! doth my Lord of Suffolk comfort me?

Came he right now to sing a raven's note, 40
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers,
And thinks he that the chirping of a wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceived sound?
Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd
words;

Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say:
Their touch affrights me as a serpent's sting.
Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!
Upon thy eye-balls murderous tyranny
Sits in grim majesty to fright the world. 50
Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wound-
ing;

Yet do not go away; come, basilisk,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight;
For in the shade of death I shall find joy.
In life but double death, now Gloucester's
dead.

Q. Mar. Why do you rate my Lord of Suffolk
thus?

Although the duke was enemy to him,
Yet he, most Christian-like, laments his
death:

And for myself, foe as he was to me,

Might liquid tears or heart-offending
groans 60

Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
I would be blind with weeping, sick with
groans,

Look pale as primrose with blood-drinking sighs.

And all to have the noble duke alive.

What know I how the world may deem of
me?

For it is known we were but hollow friends:
It may be judg'd I made the duke away:

So shall my name with slander's tongue be wounded,

And princes' courts be fill'd with my reproach.

This get I by his death. Ay me, unhappy! 70
To be a queen, and crown'd with infamy!

K. Hen. Ah! woe is me for Gloucester. wretched man.

Q. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than he is.

What! dost thou turn away and hide thy
face?

I am no loathsome leper; look on me.

What! art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?
Be poisonous too and kill thy forlorn queen.

Is all thy comfort shut in Gloucester's tomb?
Why, then, Dame Margaret was ne'er thy
joy:

Erect his statua and worship it. 80
And make my image but an alehouse sign.

Was I for this night wreck'd upon the sea,
And twice by awkward wind from England's bank

Drove back again unto my native clime?
What boded this, but well forewarning wind

Did seem to say 'Seek not a scorpion's nest,
Nor set no footing on this unkind shore?'

What did I then, but curs'd the gentle gusts
And he that loos'd them from their brazen caves:

And bid them blow towards England's blessed shore, 90

Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock.
Yet Æolus would not be a murderer,

But left that hateful office unto thee:
The pretty-vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd
on shore

With tears as salt as sea through thy unkindness:

The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking
sands,

And would not dash me with their ragged
sides,

Because thy flinty heart, more hard than
they,

Might in thy palace perish Margaret. 100
As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,

When from the shore the tempest beat us
back,

I stood upon the hatches in the storm,
And when the dusky sky began to rob

My earnest gazing sight of thy land's view,
I took a costly jewel from my neck,

A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,
And threw it towards thy land: the sea re-
ceiv'd it,

And so I wish'd thy body might my heart:
 And even with this I lost fair England's view, 110
 And bid mine eyes be packing with my
 heart,
 And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles
 For losing ken of Albion's wished coast.
 How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue,
 The agent of thy foul inconstancy,
 To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did
 When he to madding Dido would unfold
 His father's acts, commenc'd in burning Troy!
 Am I not witch'd like her? or thou not false
 like him?
 Ay me! I can no more. Die, Margaret! 120
 For Henry weeps that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter WARWICK and SALIS-BURY. The Commons press to the door.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
 That good Duke Humphrey traitorously is
 murder'd
 By Suffolk and the Cardinal Beaufort's
 means.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees
 That want their leader, scatter up and down,
 And care not who they sting in his revenge.
 Myself have calm'd their spleenful mutiny,
 Until they hear the order of his death.

K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick,
 't is too true; 130

But how he died God knows, not Henry.
 Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,

And comment then upon his sudden death.

War. That I shall do, my liege. Stay,
 Salisbury,

With the rude multitude till I return.

Exeunt WARWICK and SALISBURY.

K. Hen. O! thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts,

My thought: that labour to persuade my soul
 Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life.

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God,
 For judgment only doth belong to thee. 140

Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips
 With twenty thousand kisses, and to drain
 Upon his face an ocean of salt tears,

To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,
 And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling:

But all in vain are these mean obsequies,
 And to survey his dead and earthy image

What were it but to make my sorrow greater?

Re-enter WARWICK and Others, bearing GLOUCESTER'S body on a bed.

War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body.

K. Hen. That is to see how deep my grave is made; 150

For with his soul fled all my worldly solace,
 For seeing him I see my life in death.

War. As surely as my soul intends to live
 With that dread King that took our state upon him

To free us from his father's wrathful curse,

I do believe that violent hands were laid
 Upon the life of this thrice-famed duke.

Suf. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn
 tongue!

What instance gives Lord Warwick for his vow?

War. See how the blood is settled in his
 face. 160

Of ashly semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,

Being all descended to the labouring heart;
 Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,

Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy;

Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er
 returneth

To blush and beautify the cheek again.

But see, his face is black and full of blood,
 His eye-balls further out than when he liv'd,

Staring full ghastly like a strangled man; 170
 His hair uprear'd, his nostrils stretch'd with struggling;

His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd

And tugg'd for life, and was by strength subdued.

Look! on the sheets his hair, you see, is sticking;

His well-proportion'd beard made rough and rugged,

Like to the summer's corn by tempest
 lodg'd.

It cannot be but he was murder'd here;
 The least of all these signs were probable.

Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death?

Myself and Beaufort had him in protection; 180

And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.

War. But both of you were vow'd Duke
 Humphrey's foes,

And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep:

'T is like you would not feast him like a
 friend,

And 't is well seen he found an enemy.

Q. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen

As guilty of Duke Humphrey's timeless
 death.

War. Who finds the heifer dead, and bleeding fresh,

And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
 But will suspect 't was he that made the
 slaughter? 190

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
 But may imagine how the bird was dead,

Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak?

Even so suspicious is this tragedy.

Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk?
 where's your knife?

Is Beaufort term'd a kite? where are his talons?

Suf. I wear no knife to slaughter sleeping
 men;

But here's a vengeful sword, rusted with
 ease,

That shall be scoured in his rancorous heart
That slanders me with murder's crimson badge. 200

Say, if thou dar'st, proud Lord of Warwickshire,

That I am faulty in Duke Humphrey's death.

Exeunt Cardinal BEAUFORT, SOMER-SET, and Others.

War. What dares not Warwick, if false
Suffolk dare him?

Q. Mar. He dares not calm his contume-lious spirit,

Nor cease to be an arrogant controller,
Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

War. Madam, be still, with reverence
may I say;

For every word you speak in his behalf
Is slander to your royal dignity.

Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour! 210

If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip; whose fruit
thou art,

And never of the Nevils' noble race.

War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers thee,

And I should rob the deathsman of his fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand
shames,

And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild, 219

I would, false murderous coward, on thy
knee

Make thee beg pardon for thy passed
speech,

And say it was thy mother that thou
meant'st;

That thou thyself wast born in bastardy:

And after all this fearful homage done,
Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell,
Pernicious blood-sucker of sleeping men!

Suf. Thou shalt be waking while I shed thy blood,

If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.

War. Away even now, or I will drag thee
hence;

Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with
thee, 230

And do some service to Duke Humphrey's
ghost.

Exeunt SUFFOLK and WARWICK.

K. Hen. What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted!

Thrice is he arm'd that hath his quarrel just,
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted. A noise within.

Q. Mar. What noise is this?

Re-enter SUFFOLK and WARWICK, with their weapons drawn.

K. Hen. Why, how now, lords! your wrathful weapons drawn

Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?

Why, what tumultuous clamour have we
here?

Suf. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Bury, 240

Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Noise of a crowd within. Re-enter SALIS-BURY.

Sal. Speaking to those within. Sirs, stand apart; the king shall know your mind.

Dread lord, the commons send you word by
me,

Unless false Suffolk straight be done to
death,

Or banished fair England's territories,
They will by violence tear him from your
palace

And torture him with grievous lingering
death.

They say, by him the good Duke Humphrey died;

They say, in him they fear your highness'
death;

And mere instinct of love and loyalty, 250
Free from a stubborn opposite intent,

As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his banish-
ment.

They say, in care of your most royal person,
That if your highness should intend to sleep,

And charge that no man should disturb your
rest

In pain of your dislike or pain of death,
Yet, notwithstanding such a strait edict,

Were there a serpent seen, with forked
tongue,

That slyly glided towards your majesty, 260
It were but necessary you were wak'd,

Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,
The mortal worm might make the sleep
eternal:

And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,

That they will guard you, whe'r you will or
no,

From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is;
With whose envenomed and fatal sting,

Your loving uncle twenty times his worth
They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. Within. An answer from the king, my Lord of Salisbury! 270

Suf. 'Tis like the commons, rude unpolish'd hinds,

Could send such message to their sovereign;

But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To show how quaint an orator you are:

But all the honour Salisbury hath won
Is that he was the lord ambassador,

Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. Within. An answer from the king, or we will all break in!

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all
from me,

I thank them for their tender loving care; 280
And had I not been cited so by them,

Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;

For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy
Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's

means:

And therefore, by His majesty I swear,
Whose far unworthy deputy I am,

He shall not breathe infection in this air
But three days longer, on the pain of death.

Exit SALISBURY.

Q. Mar. O Henry! let me plead for gentle Suffolk.

K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk!

No more, I say; if thou dost plead for him

Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath. Had I but said, I would have kept my word, But when I swear, it is irrevocable.

If after three days' space thou here be'st found

On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom for thy life. Come, Warwick, come good Warwick, go with me;

I have great matters to impart to thee.

Exeunt King HENRY, WARWICK, Lords, etc.

Q. Mar. Mischance and sorrow go along with you!

Heart's discontent and sour affliction
Be playfellows to keep you company!

There 's two of you; the devil make a third!
And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these execrations,

And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.

Q. Mar. Fie, coward woman and soft-hearted wretch!

Hast thou no spirit to curse thine enemy?

Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,

I would invent as bitter-searching terms,
As curst, as harsh and horrible to hear,

Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,

As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words;

Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;

My hair be fix'd on end, as one distract;

Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:

And even now my burden'd heart would break

Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!

Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!

Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees!

Their chiefest prospect murdering basilisks!

Their softest touch as smart as lizards' stings!

Their music frightful as the serpent's hiss,
And boding screech-owls make the concert full!

All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself;

And these dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,

Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suf. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?

Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a winter's night,

Though standing naked on a mountain top,
Where biting cold would never let grass grow,

And think it but a minute spent in sport.

Q. Mar. O! let me entreat thee, cease.
Give me thy hand,

That I may dew it with my mournful tears;

Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,
To wash away my woeful monuments.

O! could this kiss be printed in thy hand,
That thou might'st think upon these by the seal,

Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee.

So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;

'Tis but surmis'd whiles thou art standing by,

As one that surfeits thinking on a want.
I will repeal thee, or, be well assur'd,

Adventure to be banished myself;

And banished I am, if but from thee.
Go; speak not to me; even now be gone.

O! go not yet. Even thus two friends condemn'd

Embrace and kiss and take ten thousand leaves,

Loather a hundred times to part than die.
Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee.

Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished,

Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.

'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou thence;
A wilderness is populous enough,

So Suffolk had thy heavenly company;

For where thou art, there is the world itself,
With every several pleasure in the world,

And where thou art not, desolation.
I can no more; live thou to joy thy life;

Myself no joy in nought but that thou liv'st.

Enter VAUX.

Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I prithee?

Vaux. To signify unto his majesty
That Cardinal Beaufort is at point of death;

For suddenly a grievous sickness took him,

That makes him gasp and stare and catch the air,

Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.

Sometime he talks as if Duke Humphrey's ghost

Were by his side; sometime he calls the king,

And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his overcharged soul:

And I am sent to tell his majesty
That even now he cries aloud for him.

Q. Mar. Go, tell this heavy message to the king.
Exit VAUX.
 Ay me! what is this world! what news are these!
 But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss,
 Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?
 Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,
 And with the southern clouds contend in tears,
 Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows?
 Now get thee hence: the king, thou know'st, is coming;
 If thou be found by me thou art but dead.
Suf. If I depart from thee I cannot live;
 And in thy sight to die, what were it else
 But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap? 380
 Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
 As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe
 Dying with mother's dug between its lips;
 Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
 And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
 To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth:
 So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,
 Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
 And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.
 To die by thee were but to die in jest; 400
 From thee to die were torture more than death.
 O! let me stay, befall what may befall.
Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful corrosive.
 It is applied to a deathful wound.
 To France, sweet Suffolk: let me hear from thee;
 For wheresoe'er thou art in this world's globe,
 I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.
Suf. I go.
Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.
Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woeful'st cask
 That ever did contain a thing of worth. 410
 Even as a splitted bark so sunder we:
 This way fall I to death.
Q. Mar. This way for me.
Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—London. Cardinal BEAUFORT'S Bedchamber.

Enter King HENRY. SALISBURY, WARWICK, and Others. The Cardinal in bed; Attendants with him.

K. Hen. How fares my lord? speak Beaufort, to thy sovereign.

Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's treasure,

Enough to purchase such another island,
 So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.

K. Hen. Ah! what a sign it is of evil life
 Where death's approach is seen so terrible.

War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.

Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.

Died he not in his bed? where should he die?

Can I make men live whe'r they will or no? 10
 O! torture me no more, I will confess.

Alive again? then show me where he is:
 I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.
 He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.

Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright,

Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul.
 Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary

Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.
K. Hen. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens!

Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch; 20
 O! beat away the busy meddling fiend

That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul
 And from his bosom purge this black despair.

War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin!

Sal. Disturb him not; let him pass peaceably.

K. Hen. Peace to his soul! if God's good pleasure be.

Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,

Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.

He dies, and makes no sign. O God, forgive him!

War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life. 30

K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all.

Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close;

And let us all to meditation. Exeunt.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—Kent. The sea-shore near Dover.

Firing heard at sea. Then enter from a boat, a Captain, a Master, a Master's-Mate, WALTER WHITMORE, and Others; with them SUFFOLK, disguised, and other Gentlemen, prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day

Is crept into the bosom of the sea,
 And now loud-howling wolves arouse the jades

That drag the tragic melancholy night;
 Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings

Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws

Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air.
 Therefore bring forth the soldiers of our prize,

For whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downs
 Here shall they make their ransom on the sand, 10

Or with their blood stain this discolour'd shore.

Master, this prisoner freely give I thee;
And thou that art his mate make boot of this;

The other, Walter Whitmore, is thy share.
First Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me know.

Mast. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.

Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes yours.

Cap. What! think you much to pay two thousand crowns,

And bear the name and port of gentlemen? Cut both the villains' throats! for die you shall:

The lives of those which we have lost in fight Be counterpois'd with such a petty sum!

First Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life.

Second Gent. And so will I, and write home for it straight.

Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,

To SUFFOLK. And therefore to revenge it shalt thou die;

And so should these if I might have my will.
Cap. Be not so rash: take ransom; let him live.

Suf. Look on my George; I am a gentleman.

Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.

Whit. And so am I; my name is Walter Whitmore.

How now! why start'st thou? what! doth death affright?

Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death.

A cunning man did calculate my birth, And told me that by Water I should die:

Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded; Thy name is Gaultier, being rightly sounded.

Whit. Gaultier or Walter, which it is, I care not;

Never yet did base dishonour blur our name But with our sword we wip'd away the blot:

Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge,

Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defac'd,

And I proclaim'd a coward through the world!

Suf. Stay, Whitmore; for thy prisoner is a prince,

The Duke of Suffolk, William de la Pole.

Whit. The Duke of Suffolk muffled up in rags!

Suf. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke:

Jove sometime went disguis'd, and why not I?

Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt be.

Suf. Obscure and lowly swain, King Henry's blood,

The honourable blood of Lancaster,

Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.
Hast thou not kiss'd thy hand and held my stirrup?

Bare-headed plodded by my foot-cloth mule, And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

How often hast thou waited at my cup, Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,

When I have feasted with Queen Margaret? Remember it and let it make thee crest-fall'n;

Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride.

How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood And duly waited for my coming forth?

This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf, And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue.

Whit. Speak, captain, shall I stab the forlorn swain?

Cap. First let my words stab him, as he hath me.

Suf. Base slave, thy words are blunt, and so art thou.

Cap. Convey him hence, and on our long-boat's side

Strike off his head.

Suf. Thou dar'st not for thy own.

Cap. Yes, Pole.

Suf. Pole!

Cap. Pool! Sir Pool! lord!

Ay, kennel, puddle, sink; whose filth and dirt

Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth For swallowing the treasure of the realm:

Thy lips, that kiss'd the queen, shall sweep the ground;

And thou that smil'st at good Duke Humphrey's death,

Against the senseless winds shalt grin in vain,

Who in contempt shall hiss at thee again: And wedded be thou to the hags of hell,

For daring to affy a mighty lord

Unto the daughter of a worthless king,

Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem. By devilish policy art thou grown great,

And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd With gobbets of thy mother's bleeding heart.

By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France,

The false revolting Normans thorough thee Disdain to call us lord, and Picardy

Hath slain their governors, surpris'd our forts,

And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home.

The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all,

Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,

As hating thee, are rising up in arms: And now the house of York, thrust from the crown

By shameful murder of a guiltless king, And lofty proud encroaching tyranny,

Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colours
Advance our half-fac'd sun, striving to shine,
Under the which is writ Invitis nubibus.
The commons here in Kent are up in
arms; 100
And, to conclude, reproach and beggary
Is crept into the palace of our king,
And all by thee. Away! convey him hence.
Suf. O! that I were a god, to shoot forth
thunder
Upon these paltry, servile, abject drudges.
Small things make base men proud: this villain here,
Being captain of a pinnace, threatens more
Than Bargulus the strong Illyrian pirate.
Drones suck not eagles' blood but rob beehives.
It is impossible that I should die 110
By such a lowly vassal as thyself.
Thy words move rage and not remorse in
me:
I go of message from the queen to France;
I charge thee waft me safely cross the Channel.
Cap. Walter!
Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must waft thee to thy death.
Suf. Gelidus timor occupat artus: it is thee I fear.
Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear before I leave thee.
What! are ye daunted now? now will ye stoop?
First Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him, speak him fair. 120
Suf. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,
Us'd to command, untaught to plead for
favour.
Far be it we should honour such as these
With humble suit: no, rather let my head Stoop to the block than these knees bow to any
Save to the God of heaven, and to my king;
And sooner dance upon a bloody pole
Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom.
True nobility is exempt from fear:
More can I bear than you dare execute. 130
Cap. Hale him away, and let him talk no
more.
Suf. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can,
That this my death may never be forgot.
Great men oft die by vile bezonians.
A Roman sworder and banditto slave Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutus' bastard
hand
Stabb'd Julius Cæsar; savage islanders Pompey the Great; and Suffolk dies by pirates.
Exeunt WHITMORE and Others with SUFFOLK.
Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart: 140
Therefore come you with us and let him go.
Exeunt all but the First Gentleman.

Re-enter WHITMORE, with SUFFOLK'S body.

Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,
Until the queen his mistress bury it. Exit.
First Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle!
His body will I bear unto the king:
If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;
So will the queen, that living held him dear.
Exit, with the body.

SCENE II.—Blackheath.

Enter GEORGE BEVIS and JOHN HOLLAND.

Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a lath: they have been up these two days.

John. They have the more need to sleep
now then.

Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.

John. So he had need, for 't is threadbare. Well, I say it was never merry world in England since gentlemen came up. 10

Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicraftsmen.

John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.

Geo. Nay, more; the king's council are no good workmen.

John. True; and yet it is said 'Labour in thy vocation': which is as much to say as, let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates. 20

Geo. Thou hast hit it; for there's no better sign of a brave mind than a hard
hand.

John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son, the tanner of Wingham,—

Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies to make dog's-leather of.

John. And Dick the butcher,—

Geo. Then is sin-struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

John. And Smith the weaver,— 30

Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

John. Come, come; let's fall in with
them.

Drum. Enter CADE, DICK the Butcher, SMITH the Weaver, and a Sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father,—

Dick. Aside. Or rather, of stealing a cade of herrings.

Cade. For our enemies shall fall before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes,—Command silence.

Dick. Silence! 40

Cade. My father was a Mortimer,—

Dick. Aside. He was an honest man, and a good bricklayer.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,—

Dick. Aside. I knew her well; she was a midwife.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies,—
Dick. Aside. She was, indeed, a pedler's daughter, and sold many laces. 49

Smith. Aside. But now of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

Dick. Aside. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable, and there was he born, under a hedge; for his father had never a house but the cage.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Smith. Aside. A' must needs, for beggary is valiant.

Cade. I am able to endure much. 60

Dick. Aside. No question of that, for I have seen him whipped three market-days together.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. Aside. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of proof.

Dick. Aside. But methinks he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt i' the hand for stealing of sheep. 68

Cade. Be brave then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be in England seven halfpenny loaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it felony to drink small beer. All the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my palFREY go to grass. And when I am king, as king I will be,— 78

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I thank you, good people: there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord.

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers. 84

Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say the bee stings; but I say, 't is the bee's wax, for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now! who's there? 91

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read and cast accompt.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. Has a book in his pocket with red letters in 't.

Cade. Nay, then he is a conjurer.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court-hand. 101

Cade. I am sorry for 't: the man is a proper man, of mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die. Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee. What is thy name?

Clerk. Emmanuel.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters. 'T will go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone. Dost thou use to write thy name, or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man? 111

Clerk. Sir, I thank God I have been so well brought up that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him! he's a villain and a traitor.

Cade. Away with him! I say: hang him with his pen and ink-horn about his neck.

Exeunt some with the Clerk.

Enter MICHAEL.

Mich. Where's our general?

Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow. 119

Mich. Fly, fly, fly! Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: he is but a knight, is a'?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently. Kneels.

Rise up Sir John Mortimer. Rises.

Now have at him!

Enter Sir HUMPHREY STAFFORD, and WILLIAM his Brother, with drum and Forces.

Staf. Rebellious hinds, the filth and scum of Kent, 130

Mark'd for the gallows, lay your weapons down:

Home to your cottages, forsake this groom: The king is merciful, if you revolt.

W. Staf. But angry, wrathful, and incli'd to blood,

If you go forward: therefore yield, or die.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not:

It is to you, good people, that I speak, O'er whom in time to come I hope to reign; For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staf. Villain! thy father was a plasterer; 140

And thou thyself a shearmen, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

W. Staf. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this: Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March,

Married the Duke of Clarence' daughter, did he not?

Staf. Ay, sir.

Cade. By her he had two children at one birth.

W. Staf. That's false.

Cade. Ay, there's the question; but I say 't is true.

The elder of them, being put to nurse, 150

Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away;

And, ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a bricklayer when he came to age:

His son am I; deny it if you can.

Dick. Nay, 't is too true; therefore he shall be king.

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore deny it not.

Staf. And will you credit this base drudge's words,

That speaks he knows not what? 160

All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye gone.

W. Staf. Jack Cade, the Duke of York hath taught you this.

Cade. Aside. He lies, for I invented it myself. Go to, sirrah; tell the king from me, that for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.

Dick. And, furthermore, we'll have the Lord Say's head for selling the dukedom of Maine. 170

Cade. And good reason; for thereby is England maimed, and fain to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you that that Lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an eunuch; and more than that, he can speak French; and therefore he is a traitor. 177

Staf. O gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade. Nay, answer, if you can: the Frenchmen are our enemies; go to then, I ask but this: can he that speaks with the tongue of an enemy be a good counsellor, or no?

All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

W. Staf. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevail, 184

Assail them with the army of the king.

Staf. Herald, away; and throughout every town

Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade;

That those which fly before the battle ends May, even in their wives' and children's sight,

Be hang'd up for example at their doors. 190
And you that be the king's friends, follow me.

Exeunt the two STAFFORDS and Forces.
Cade. And you that love the commons, follow me.

Now show yourselves men; 't is for liberty. We will not leave one lord, one gentleman: Spare none but such as go in clouted shoon. For they are thrifty honest men, and such As would, but that they dare not, take our parts.

Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.

Cade. But then are we in order when we are most out of order. Come: march! forward! 200
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Part of Blackheath.

Alarums. The two parties enter, and fight, and both the STAFFORDS are slain.

Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

Dick. Here, sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behaved'st thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house: therefore thus will I reward thee, the Lent shall be as long again as it is; and thou shalt have a license to kill for a hundred lacking one.

Dick. I desire no more. 10

Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deservest no less. This monument of the victory will I bear; and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse heels till I do come to London, where we will have the mayor's sword borne before us.

Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols and let out the prisoners.

Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come; let's march towards London. 20

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King HENRY, reading a supplication; the Duke of BUCKINGHAM, and Lord SAY, with him; at a distance, Queen MARGARET, mourning over SUFFOLK'S head.

Q. Mar. Oft have I heard that grief softens the mind,
And makes it fearful and degenerate;
Think therefore on revenge, and cease to weep.

But who can cease to weep and look on this? Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast;

But where's the body that I should embrace?

Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?

K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat;

For God forbid so many simple souls 10
Should perish by the sword! And I myself, Rather than bloody war shall cut them short,

Will parley with Jack Cade their general. But stay, I'll read it over once again.

Q. Mar. Ah! barbarous villains, hath this lovely face

Rul'd like a wandering planet over me, And could it not enforce them to relent, That were unworthy to behold the same?

K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have thy head.

Say. Ay, but I hope your highness shall have his. 20

K. Hen. How now, madam! Still lamenting and mourning for Suffolk's death?

I fear me, love, if that I had been dead, Thou wouldest not have mourn'd so much for me.

Q. Mar. No, my love; I should not mourn, but die for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

K. Hen. How now! what news? why com'st thou in such haste?

Mess. The rebels are in Southwark;
fly, my lord!

Jack Cade proclaims himself Lord Mortimer, Descended from the Duke of Clarence's
house,

And calls your grace usurper openly, 30
And vows to crown himself in Westminster.
His army is a ragged multitude
Of hinds and peasants, rude and merciless:
Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's
death

Hath given them heart and courage to proceed.

All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,
They call false caterpillars, and intend their
death.

K. Hen. O graceless men! they know not what they do.

Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Killingworth,

Until a power be rais'd to put them down. 40

Q. Mar. Ah! were the Duke of Suffolk
now alive,

These Kentish rebels would be soon ap-peas'd.

K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee,
Therefore away with us to Killingworth.

Say. So might your grace's person be in danger.

The sight of me is odious in their eyes;

And therefore in this city will I stay,

And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

Second Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London-bridge;

The citizens fly and forsake their houses; 50

The rascal people, thirsting after prey,

Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear
To spoil the city and your royal court.

Buck. Then linger not, my lord; away!
take horse.

K. Hen. Come, Margaret: God, our hope, will succour us.

Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceas'd.

K. Hen. Farewell, my lord: trust not the Kentish rebels.

Buck. Trust nobody, for fear you be betray'd.

Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and resolute. 61

Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. The Tower.

Enter Lord SCALES and Others, walking on the walls. Then enter certain Citizens, below.

Scales. How now! is Jack Cade slain?

First Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them. The lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such aid as I can spare you shall command;

But I am troubled here with them myself;
The rebels have essay'd to win the Tower.

But get you to Smithfield and gather head, 10
And thither I will send you Matthew Goffe; Fight for your king, your country, and your
lives;

And so farewell, for I must hence again.

Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same. Cannon-street.

Enter JACK CADE and his Followers. He strikes his staff on London-stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city.
And here, sitting upon London-stone, I charge and command that, of the city's cost, the pissing-conduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now henceforward it shall be treason for any that calls me other than Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!

Cade. Knock him down there.

They kill him.

Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call you Jack Cade more: I think he hath a very fair warning. 12

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then, let's go fight with them. But first, go and set London-bridge on fire, and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away. Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same. Smithfield.

Alarums. MATTHEW GOFFE is slain and all the rest. Then enter JACK CADE with his company.

Cade. So, sirs. Now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of court; down with them all.

Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.

Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.

Dick. Only that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.

John. Aside. Mass, 't will be sore law then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 't is not whole yet. 11

Smith. Aside. Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese.

Cade. I have thought upon it; it shall be so. Away! burn all the records of the realm: my mouth shall be the parliament of England.

John. Aside. Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out.

Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common. 21

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here's the Lord Say, which sold the towns in France; he that made us pay one-and-twenty fifteens, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy. 22

Enter GEORGE BEVIS, with the Lord SAY.

Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times. Ah! thou say, thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord; now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty for giving up of Normandy unto Mounsieur Basimecu, the Dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee by these presence, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar-school; and whereas, before, our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face that thou hast men about thee that usually talk of a noun, and a verb, and such abominable words as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them; when indeed only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride in a foot-cloth, dost thou not? 52

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent,—

Dick. What say you of Kent? 60

Say. Nothing but this: 'tis bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him! away with him! he speaks Latin.

Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you will.

Kent, in the Commentaries Cæsar writ, Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle:

Sweet is the country, because full of riches; The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy; Which makes me hope you are not void of pity.

I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy; 70 Yet, to recover them, would lose my life.

Justice with favour have I always done; Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never.

When have I aught exacted at your hands, But to maintain the king, the realm, and you?

Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks,

Because my book preferr'd me to the king, And seeing ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven,

Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits, 80

You cannot but forbear to murder me:

This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings

For your behoof,—

Cade. Tut! when struckest thou one blow in the field?

Say. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I struck

Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.

Geo. O monstrous coward! what! to come behind folks.

Say. These cheeks are pale for watching for your good. 90

Cade. Give him a box o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again.

Say. Long sitting, to determine poor men's causes,

Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of hatchet.

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

Say. The palsy, and not fear, provokes me.

Cade. Nay, he nods at us; as who should say, I'll be even with you: I'll see if his head will stand steadier on a pole or no. Take him away and behead him. 102

Say. Tell me wherein have I offended most?

Have I affected wealth or honour? speak. Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?

Is my apparel sumptuous to behold? Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death?

These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding.

This breast from harbouring foul deceitful thoughts.

O! let me live. 110

Cade. Aside. I feel remorse in myself with his words; but I'll bridle it: he shall die, an it be but for pleading so well for his life. Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue; he speaks not o' God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently; and then break into his son-in-law's house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done. 120

Say. Ah! countrymen, if when you make your prayers,

God should be so obdurate as yourselves, How would it fare with your departed souls?

And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him! and do as I command ye. Exeunt some, with Lord SAY.

The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute; there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maiden-head, ere they have it. Men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command that their wives be as free as heart can wish or tongue can tell. 133

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside and take up commodities upon our bills?

Cade. Marry, presently.

All. O! brave.

Re-enter Rebels, with the heads of Lord SAY and his Son-in-law.

Cade. But is not this braver? Let them kiss one another, for they loved well when they were alive. Now part them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night; for with these borne before us, instead of maces, will we ride through the streets; and at every corner have them kiss. Away! Exeunt. 145

SCENE VIII.—The Same. Southwark.

Alarum. Enter CADE and all his Rabblement.

Cade. Up Fish-street! down Saint Magnus' Corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames!

A parley sounded, then a retreat.
What noise is this I hear? Dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill?

Enter BUCKINGHAM and Old CLIFFORD, with Forces.

Buck. Ay, here they be that dare and will disturb thee.
Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king

Unto the commons whom thou hast misled; And here pronounce free pardon to them all That will forsake thee and go home in peace. 10

Clif. What say ye, countrymen? will ye relent

And yield to mercy, whilst 't is offer'd you, Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths? Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon,

Fling up his cap, and say 'God save his majesty!'

Who hateth him, and honours not his father, Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake, Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king! 19

Cade. What! Buckingham and Clifford, are ye so brave? And you, base peasants, do ye believe him? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark? I thought ye would never have given out these arms till you had recovered your ancient freedom; but you are all recreants and dastards, and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your backs with burdens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces: for me, I will make shift for one, and so, God's curse light upon you all! 34

All. We'll follow Cade, we'll follow Cade!

Clif. Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth,

That thus you do exclaim you'll go with him?

Will he conduct you through the heart of France,

And make the meanest of you earls and dukes? 39

Alas! he hath no home, no place to fly to; Nor knows he how to live but by the spoil, Unless by robbing of your friends and us.

Were 't not a shame, that whilst you live at jar,

The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,

Should make a start o'er seas and vanquish you?

Methinks already in this civil broil I see them lording it in London streets,

Crying Villiago! unto all they meet.

Better ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry

Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy. 50

To France, to France! and get what you have lost;

Spare England, for it is your native coast.

Henry hath money, you are strong and manly;

God on our side, doubt not of victory.

All. A Clifford! a Clifford! we'll follow the king and Clifford. 56

Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro as this multitude? The name of Henry the Fifth hales them to an hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together to surprise me. My sword make way for me, for here is no staying. In despite of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you! and heavens and honour be witness, that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels. Exit. 67

Buck. What! is he fled? go some, and follow him;

And he that brings his head unto the king Shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.

Exeunt some of them.
Follow me, soldiers: we'll devise a mean To reconcile you all unto the king. Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Kenilworth Castle.

Sound trumpets. Enter King HENRY, Queen MARGARET, and SOMERSET, on the terrace.

K. Hen. Was ever king that joy'd an earthly throne,
And could command no more content than I?

No sooner was I crept out of my cradle But I was made a king at nine months old: Was never subject long'd to be a king As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and CLIFFORD.

Buck. Health and glad tidings to your majesty!

K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor
Cade surpris'd?
Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter a number of CADE'S Followers, with halters about their necks.

Clif. He's fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,

Expect your highness' doom, of life or death.

K. Hen. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gates,

To entertain my vows of thanks and praise!
Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your
lives,

And show'd how well you love your prince and country;

Continue still in this so good a mind,
And Henry, though he be unfortunate,

Assure yourselves, will never be unkind:

And so, with thanks and pardon to you all, 20
I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All. God save the king! God save the
king!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Please it your grace to be advertised

The Duke of York is newly come from Ire-
land,

And with a puissant and a mighty power
Of gallowglasses and stout kerns

Is marching hitherward in proud array;

And still proclaimeth, as he comes along,

His arms are only to remove from thee

The Duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

K. Hen. Thus stands my state, 'twixt
Cade and York distress'd; 31

Like to a ship that, having 'scap'd a tempest,
Is straightway calm'd, and boarded with a pirate.

But now is Cade driven back, his men
dispers'd,

And now is York in arms to second him.

I pray thee, Buckingham, go and meet
him,

And ask him what's the reason of these
arms.

Tell him I'll send Duke Edmund to the Tower;

And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him. 40

Som. My lord,

I'll yield myself to prison willingly,
Or unto death, to do my country good.

K. Hen. In any case, be not too rough in terms,

For he is fierce and cannot brook hard language.

Buck. I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal

As all things shall redound unto your
good.

K. Hen. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better;

For yet may England curse my wretched reign. Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE X.—Kent. IDEN'S Garden.

Enter CADE.

Cade. Fie on ambition! fie on myself, that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish!
These five days have I hid me in these woods and durst not peep out, for all the country is laid for me; but now am I so hungry, that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years I could stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick wall have I climbed into this garden, to see if I can eat grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And I think this word 'sallet' was born to do me good; for many a time, but for a sallet, my brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill;
and many a time, when I have been dry and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and now the word 'sallet' must serve me to feed on. 17

Enter IDEN.

Iden. Lord! who would live turmoiled in the court,

And may enjoy such quiet walks as these?

This small inheritance my father left me 20
Contenteth me, and worth a monarchy.

I seek not to wax great by others' waning,
Or gather wealth I care not with what envy:

Sufficieth that I have maintains my state,
And sends the poor well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Ah! villain, thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king by carrying my head to him; but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. 32

Iden. Why, rude companion, whatso'er thou be,

I know thee not; why then should I betray
thee?

Is't not enough to break into my garden,
And like a thief to come to rob my grounds,

Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me with these saucy

terms? 38

Cade. Brave thee! ay, by the best blood that ever was broached, and beard thee too.

Look on me well: I have eat no meat these five days; yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door-nail, I pray God I may never eat grass

more. 44

Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England stands,

That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent,
Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.

Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes to mine,
See if thou canst outface me with thy looks:

Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser; 50

Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;

Thy leg a stick compared with this trun-cheon;

My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
 And if mine arm be heaved in the air
 Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.
 As for words, whose greatness answers words,
 Let this my sword report what speech forbears. 57

Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion that ever I heard! Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the burly-boned clown in chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech God on my knees thou mayest be turned to hobnails. 63

They fight. CADE falls.
 O! I am slain. Famine and no other hath slain me: let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled. 70

Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed, And hang thee o'er my tomb when I am dead:

Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point,

But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat, To emblaze the honour that thy master got.

Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory. Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the world to be cowards; for I, that never feared any, am vanquished by famine, not by valour. 81

Dies.
Iden. How much thou wrong'st me, heaven be my judge.

Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare thee!

And as I thrust thy body in with my sword, So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell. Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels Unto a dunghill which shall be thy grave, And there cut off thy most ungracious head; Which I will bear in triumph to the king, Leaving thy trunk for crows to feed upon. 87

Exit.

ACT V

SCENE I.—Fields between Dartford and Blackheath.

The King's camp on one side. On the other, enter YORK and his army of Irish, with drum and colours.

York. From Ireland thus comes York to claim his right,
 And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:

Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, clear and bright,

To entertain great England's lawful king.
 Ah! sancta majestas, who would not buy thee dear?

Let them obey that know not how to rule;
 This hand was made to handle nought but gold:

I cannot give due action to my words,
 Except a sword or sceptre balance it.
 A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul, 10
 On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?

The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.

Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well.

York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.

Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,

To know the reason of these arms in peace;
 Or why thou, being a subject as I am,
 Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn, 20

Should'st raise so great a power without his leave,

Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

York. Aside. Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:

O! I could hew up rocks and fight with flint,
 I am so angry at these abject terms;

And now, like Ajax Telamonius,
 On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury.

I am far better born than is the king,
 More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts;

But I must make fair weather yet a while, 30

Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.

O Buckingham, I prithee, pardon me,
 That I have given no answer all this while;

My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.

The cause why I have brought this army hither

Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
 Seditious to his grace and to the state.

Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part:

But if thy arms be to no other end,
 The king hath yielded unto thy demand: 40

The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner?

Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.

York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers.

Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves:

Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,
 You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.

And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
 Command my eldest son, nay, all my sons,

As pledges of my fealty and love; 50

I'll send them all as willing as I live:
 Lands, goods, horse, armour, any thing I have,

Is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I commend this kind submission:

We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King HENRY, attended.

K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm to us.
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm?

York. In all submission and humility York doth present himself unto your high-
ness.

K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring? 60

York. To heave the traitor Somerset from
hence,
And fight against that monstrous rebel,
Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter IDEN, with CADE'S head.

Iden. If one so rude and of so mean condition
May pass into the presence of a king,
Lo! I present your grace a traitor's head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

K. Hen. The head of Cade! Great God, how just art thou!
O! let me view his visage, being dead,
That living wrought me such exceeding trouble. 70

Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him?

Iden. I was, an't like your majesty.

K. Hen. How art thou call'd, and what is thy degree?

Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name;
A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.

Buck. So please it you, my lord, 't were not amiss

He were created knight for his good service.

K. Hen. Iden, kneel down. He kneels.
Rise up a knight.

We give thee for reward a thousand marks;
And will that thou henceforth attend on
us. 80

Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty,

And never live but true unto his liege.

K. Hen. See! Buckingham, Somerset comes with the queen:

Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter Queen MARGARET and SOMERSET.

Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,

But boldly stand and front him to his face.

York. How now! is Somerset at liberty?
Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd
thoughts

And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset? 90

False king! why hast thou broken faith
with me,

Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse?
King did I call thee? no, thou art not king;

Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.

That head of thine doth not become a crown;
Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,

And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.

That gold must round engirt these brows of
mine,

Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles'
spear, 100

Is able with the change to kill and cure.

Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,

And with the same to act controlling laws.

Give place: by heaven, thou shalt rule no
more

O'er him whom heaven created for thy ruler.

Som. O monstrous traitor! I arrest thee,

York.
Of capital treason 'gainst the king and
crown.

Obey, audacious traitor; kneel for grace.

York. Would'st have me kneel? first let me ask of these

If they can brook I bow a knee to man. 110

Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail:

Exit Attendant.

I know, ere they will have me go to ward,

They'll pawn their souls for my enfranchisement.

Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come amain,

To say if that the bastard boys of York
Shall be the surety for their traitor father.

Exit BUCKINGHAM.

York. O blood-besotted Neapolitan, Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge!

The sons of York, thy betters in their birth, Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those

That for my surety will refuse the boys! 121

*Enter EDWARD and RICHARD, with Forces, at one side; at the other, with Forces
also, Old CLIFFORD and his Son.*

See where they come: I'll warrant they'll make it good.

Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bail.

Clif. Health and all happiness to my lord
the king! Kneels.

York. I thank thee, Clifford: say, what news with thee?

Nay, do not fright us with an angry look;
We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again?

For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.

Clif. This is my king, York; I do not mistake;

But thou mistak'st me much to think I do. 130

To Bedlam with him! is the man grown mad?

K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour

Makes him oppose himself against his
king.

Clif. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
And chop away that factious pate of his.

Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey:
His sons, he says, shall give their words for
him.

York. Will you not, sons?

Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.

Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall. 140

Clif. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here!

York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;

I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor.
Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
That with the very shaking of their chains
They may astonish these fell-lurking curs:
Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.

Drums. Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY, with Forces.

Clif. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,

And manacle the bear-ward in their chains,

If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place.

Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur

Run back and bite, because he was withheld;

Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,
Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs and cried:

And such a piece of service will you do,
If you oppose yourselves to match Lord Warwick.

Clif. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump,

As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!

York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anon.

Clif. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn yourselves.

K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot to bow?

Old Salisbury, shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son!

What! wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,

And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?
O! where is faith? O! where is loyalty?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?

Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,
And shame thine honourable age with blood?

Why art thou old and want'st experience?

Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,

That bows unto the grave with mickle age.

Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself

The title of this most renowned duke;
And in my conscience do repute his grace

The rightful heir to England's royal seat.

K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?

Sal. I have.

K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such an oath?

Sal. It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,

To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,

To wring the widow from her custom'd right,

And have no other reason for this wrong
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

Q. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself.

York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast,

I am resolv'd for death or dignity.

Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove true.

War. You were best to go to bed and dream again,

To keep thee from the tempest of the field.

Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm
Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;

And that I'll write upon thy burget, 230
Might I but know thee by thy household badge.

War. Now, by my father's badge, old Nevil's crest,

The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,

This day I'll wear aloft my burget, 240
As on a mountain top the cedar shows

That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,
Even to affright thee with the view thereof.

Clif. And from thy burget I'll rend thy bear,

And tread it under foot with all contempt,
Despite the bear-ward that protects the bear.

Y. Clif. And so to arms, victorious father,
To quell the rebels and their complices.

Rich. Fie! charity! for shame! speak not in spite,

For you shall sup with Jesu Christ to-night.

Y. Clif. Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell.

Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell.

Exeunt severally.

SCENE II.—Saint Alban's.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter WARWICK.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 't is Warwick calls:

And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
Now, when the angry trumpet sounds alarm,

And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,
Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!

Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter YORK.

How now, my noble lord! what! all afoot?
York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;

But match to match I have encounter'd him,

And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well.

Enter CLIFFORD.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.

York. Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,

For I myself must hunt this deer to death.

War. Then, nobly, York; 't is for a crown thou fight'st.
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd.

Exit.

Clif. What seest thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?

York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,

20

But that thou art so fast mine enemy.

Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem,

But that 't is shown ignobly and in treason.

York. So let it help me now against thy
sword

As I in justice and true right express it.

Clif. My soul and 'body on the action
both!

York. A dreadful lay! Address thee instantly.

Clif. La fin couronne les œuvres.

They fight, and CLIFFORD falls and dies.

York. Thus war hath given peace, for thou art still.

Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will!

Exit. 30

Enter Young CLIFFORD.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout:

Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O war! thou son of hell,

Whom angry heavens do make their minister,

Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
Hot coals of vengeance! Let no soldier fly:
He that is truly dedicate to war
Hath no self-love; nor he that loves himself
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour.

Seeing his father's body.

O! let the vile world end,

And the premised flames of the last day

Knit earth and heaven together;

Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,

Particularities and petty sounds

To cease! Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,

To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve

The silver livery of advised age,

And, in thy reverence and thy chair-days,

thus

To die in ruffian battle? Even at this sight

My heart is turn'd to stone: and while 't is

mine

It shall be stony. York not our old men spares;

No more will I their babes; tears virginal

Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;

And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,

Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.

Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:

Meet I an infant of the house of York,

Into as many gobbets will I cut it

As wild Medea young Absyrtus did:

In cruelty will I seek out my fame.

Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house:

Taking up the body.

As did Æneas old Anchises bear,

So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
But then Æneas bare a living load,
Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine.

Exit.

Enter RICHARD and SOMERSET, fighting.
SOMERSET is killed.

Rich. So, lie thou there;
For underneath an alehouse' paltry sign,
The Castle in Saint Alban's, Somerset
Hath made the wizard famous in his death.
Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful
still:

70

Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill.

Exit.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter King HENRY, Queen MARGARET, and Others, retreat-
ing.

Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow:
for shame, away!

K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens?
good Margaret, stay.

Q. Mar. What are you made off? you'll nor fight nor fly;

Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To give the enemy way, and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but fly.

Alarum afar off.

If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom

Of all our fortunes; but if we haply scape,
As well we may, if not through your neglect,

80

We shall to London get, where you are lov'd,
And where this breach now in our fortunes
made

May readily be stopp'd.

Re-enter Young CLIFFORD.

Y. Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief set,

I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly;
But fly you must: uncurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away, for your relief! and we will live
To see their day and them our fortune give.
Away, my lord, away!

Exeunt. 90

SCENE III.—Fields near Saint Alban's.

Alarum. Retreat. Flourish; then enter
YORK, RICHARD, WARWICK, and Soldiers, with drum and colours.

York. Of Salisbury, who can report of
him,

That winter lion, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions and all brush of time,
And, like a gallant in the brow of youth,
Repairs him with occasion? This happy day
Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

Rich. My noble father,
Three times to-day I help him to his horse,
Three times bestrid him; thrice I led him
off,

Persuaded him from any further act: 10
But still, where danger was, still there I met
him;

And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body.
But, noble as he is, look where he comes.

Enter SALISBURY.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day;
By the mass, so did we all. I thank you,
Richard:

God knows how long it is I have to live;
And it hath pleas'd him that three times to-
day

You have defended me from imminent death.
Well, lords, we have not got that which we
have: 20

'T is not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repairing nature.

York. I know our safety is to follow
them;

For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament:
Let us pursue him ere the writs go forth.

What says Lord Warwick? shall we after
them?

War. After them! nay, before them, if we
can.

Now, by my faith, lords, 't was a glorious
day: 29

Saint Alban's battle, won by famous York,
Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.

Sound drums and trumpets! and to London
all:

And more such days as these to us befall!
Exeunt.

ACT I

SCENE I.—London. The Parliament House.

Drums. Some Soldiers of YORK's party break in. Then enter the Duke of YORK, EDWARD, RICHARD, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, WARWICK, and Others, with white roses in their hats.

War. I wonder how the king escap'd our hands.

York. While we pursu'd the horsemen of the north,

He slyly stole away and left his men:
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,
Whose war-like ears could never brook retreat,

Cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself,
Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all abreast, Charg'd our main battle's front, and breaking in

Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

Edw. Lord Stafford's father, Duke of Buckingham,

Is either slain or wounded dangerously;
I cleft his beaver with a downright blow:
That this is true, father, behold his blood.
Showing his bloody sword.

Mont. To YORK, showing his. And, brother, here 's the Earl of Wiltshire's blood,

Whom I encounter'd as the battles join'd.
Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.

Throwing down the Duke of SOMERSET's head.

York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons.

But is your grace dead, my Lord of Somerset?

Norf. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt!

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henry's head.

War. And so do I. Victorious Prince of York,

Before I see thee seated in that throne
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
I vow by heaven these eyes shall never close.
This is the palace of the fearful king,
And this the regal seat: possess it, York;
For this is thine and not King Henry's heirs'.

York. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I will;

For hither we have been in by force.

Norfolk. We'll all assist you; he that flies shall die. 30

York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk. Stay by me, my lords;

And, soldiers, stay and lodge by me this
night.

War. And when the king comes, offer him no violence,

Unless he seek to thrust you out perforce.

The Soldiers retire.
York. The queen this day here holds her parliament,

But little thinks we shall be of her council:
By words or blows here let us win our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.

War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd, 33

Unless Plantagenet, Duke of York, be king,
And bashful Henry depos'd, whose cowardice

Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

York. Then leave me not, my lords; be
resolute;

I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,

The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dares stir a wing if Warwick shake his bells.

I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares.
Resolve thee, Richard: claim the English
crown.

*WARWICK leads YORK to the throne,
who seats himself.*

*Flourish. Enter King HENRY, CLIFFORD,
NORTHUMBERLAND, WESTMORELAND, EXETER, and Others, with red roses in their hats.*

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits, 50

Even in the chair of state! belike he means,
Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false
peer,

To aspire unto the crown and reign as king.
Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father.

And thine, Lord Clifford; and you both have vow'd revenge

On him, his sons, his favourites, and his
friends.

North. If I be not, heavens be reveng'd
on me!

Cliff. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.

West. What! shall we suffer this? let's pluck him down:

My heart for anger burns; I cannot brook
it. 60

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle Earl of Westmoreland.

Cliff. Patience is for poltroons, such as he:
He durst not sit there had your father liv'd.
My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York.

North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin: be
it so.

K. Hen. Ah! know you not the city favours them,

And they have troops of soldiers at their beck?

Exe. But when the duke is slain they'll quickly fly.

K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart, 70

To make a shambles of the parliament-
house!

Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,
Shall be the war that Henry means to use.

They advance to the DUKE.
Thou factious Duke of York, descend my
throne,

And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet;
I am thy sovereign.

York. I am thine.

Exe. For shame! come down; he made thee Duke of York.

York. 'T was my inheritance, as the earldom was.

Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.
War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown

In following this usurping Henry. 81

Cliff. Whom should he follow but his natural king?

War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard,
Duke of York.

K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?

York. It must and shall be so: content
thyself.

War. Be Duke of Lancaster; let him be
king.

West. He is both king and Duke of Lancaster;

And that the Lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.

War. And Warwick shall disprove it.
You forget

That we are those which chas'd you from the
field. 90

And slew your fathers, and with colours
spread

March'd through the city to the palace gates.
North. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;

And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.

West. Plantagenet, of thee and these thy
sons,

Thy kinsmen and thy friends, I'll have more
lives

Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.

Cliff. Urge it no more; lest that instead of words

I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger
As shall revenge his death before I stir. 100

War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats.

York. Will you we show our title to the crown?
 If not, our sword shall plead it in the field.
K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?
 Thy father was, as thou art, Duke of York;
 Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, Earl of March.
 I am the son of Henry the Fifth,
 Who made the Dauphin and the French to stoop,
 And seiz'd upon their towns and provinces.
War. Talk not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.
K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I:
 When I was crown'd I was but nine months old.
Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks, you lose.
 Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head.
Edw. Sweet father, do so; set it on your head.
Mont. To YORK. Good brother, as thou lov'st and honour'st arms, Let's fight it out and not stand cavilling thus.
Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king will fly.
York. Sons, peace!
K. Hen. Peace thou! and give King Henry leave to speak.
War. Plantagenet shall speak first: hear him, lords;
 And be you silent and attentive too,
 For he that interrupts him shall not live.
K. Hen. Think'st thou that I will leave my kingly throne,
 Wherein my grandsire and my father sat?
 No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;
 Ay, and their colours, often borne in France,
 And now in England to our heart's great sorrow,
 Shall be my winding-sheet. Why faint you, lords?
 My title's good, and better far than his.
War. Prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.
K. Hen. Henry the Fourth by conquest got the crown.
York. 'T was by rebellion against his king.
K. Hen. Aside. I know not what to say: my title's weak.
 Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?
York. What then?
K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king;
 For Richard, in the view of many lords,
 Resign'd the crown to Henry the Fourth,
 Whose heir my father was, and I am his.
York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,
 And made him to resign his crown perforce.
War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstrain'd,
 Think you 't were prejudicial to his crown?
Exe. No; for he could not so resign his crown.

But that the next heir should succeed and reign.
K. Hen. Art thou against us, Duke of Exeter?
Exe. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.
York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?
Exe. My conscience tells me he is lawful king.
K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him.
North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,
 Think not that Henry shall be so depos'd.
War. Depos'd he shall be in despite of all.
North. Thou art deceiv'd: 't is not thy southern power,
 Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,
 Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,
 Can set the duke up in despite of me.
Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
 Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence: 160
 May that ground gape and swallow me alive,
 Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!
K. Hen. O Clifford! how thy words revive my heart.
York. Henry of Lancaster, resign thy crown.
 What mutter you, or what conspire you, lords?
War. Do right unto this princely Duke of York,
 Or I will fill the house with armed men,
 And o'er the chair of state, where now he sits,
 Write up his title with usurping blood.
He stamps with his foot, and the Soldiers show themselves.
K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick, hear me but one word: 170
 Let me for this my life-time reign as king.
York. Confirm the crown to me and to mine heirs,
 And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou liv'st.
K. Hen. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
 Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.
Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son!
War. What good is this to England and himself!
West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry!
Clif. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us!
West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.
North. Nor I.
Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.
West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,
 In whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.

North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in bands for this unmanly deed!
Clif. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome,

Or live in peace abandon'd and despis'd!
Exeunt NORTHUMBERLAND, CLIFFORD, and WESTMORELAND.

War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.

Exe. They seek revenge and therefore will not yield. 180

K. Hen. Ah! Exeter.

War. Why should you sigh, my lord?

K. Hen. Not for myself, Lord Warwick, but my son,

Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.

But be it as it may; I here entail

The crown to thee and to thine heirs for ever;

Conditionally, that here thou take an oath

To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,

To honour me as thy king and sovereign;

And neither by treason nor hostility

To seek to put me down and reign thyself. 200

York. This oath I willingly take and will perform. Coming from the throne.

War. Long live King Henry! Plantagenet, embrace him.

K. Hen. And long live thou and these thy forward sons!

York. Now York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Exe. Accurs'd be he that seeks to make them foes!

Sennet. The Lords come forward.

York. Farewell, my gracious lord: I'll to my castle.

War. And I'll keep London with my soldiers.

Norf. And I to Norfolk with my followers.

Mont. And I unto the sea from whence I came.

Exeunt YORK and his Sons, WARWICK, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, Soldiers, and Attendants.

K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court. 210

Enter Queen MARGARET and the Prince of WALES.

Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray her anger:

I'll steal away.

K. Hen. Exeter, so will I.

Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me; I will follow thee.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.

Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremes?

Ah! wretched man; would I had died a maid, And never seen thee, never borne thee son, Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnatural a father.

Hath he deserv'd to lose his birthright thus? Hadst thou but lov'd him half so well as I, 220 Or felt that pain which I did for him once, Or nourish'd him as I did with my blood,

Thou would'st have left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather than have made that savage duke thine heir,

And disinherited thine only son.

Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me. If you be king, why should not I succeed?

K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret; pardon me, sweet son:

The Earl of Warwick and the duke enforc'd me.

Q. Mar. Enforc'd thee! art thou king, and wilt be forc'd?

I shame to hear thee speak. Ah! timorous wretch;

Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me;

And given unto the house of York such head As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.

To entail him and his heirs unto the crown, What is it but to make thy sepulchre,

And creep into it far before thy time? Warwick is chancellor and the lord of Calais;

Stern Faulconbridge commands the narrow seas;

The duke is made protector of the realm; 240 And yet shalt thou be safe? such safety finds The trembling lamb environed with wolves.

Had I been there, which am a silly woman, The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes

Before I would have granted to that act; But thou preferrest thy life before thine honour:

And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,

Until that act of parliament be repeal'd Whereby my son is disinherited. 250

The northern lords that have forsworn thy colours

Will follow mine, if once they see them spread;

And spread they shall be, to thy foul disgrace,

And utter ruin of the house of York. Thus do I leave thee. Come, son, let's away;

Our army is ready; come, we'll after them.

K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak.

Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.

K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me?

Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies. 260

Prince. When I return with victory from the field

I'll see your grace: till then I'll follow her.

Q. Mar. Come, son, away; we may not linger thus.

Exeunt Queen MARGARET and the Prince of WALES.

K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me and to her son

Hath made her break out into terms of rage. Reveng'd may she be on that hateful duke,

Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire, Will cost my crown, and like an empty eagle

Tire on the flesh of me and of my son!

The loss of those three lords torments my heart: 270
 I'll write unto them and entreat them fair.
 Come, cousin; you shall be the messenger.
Exe. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them
 all. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield.

Enter EDWARD, RICHARD, and MONTAGUE.
Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.
Edw. No, I can better play the orator.
Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter YORK.

York. Why, how now, sons and brother! at a strife?

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

Edw. No quarrel, but a slight contention.

York. About what?

Rich. About that which concerns your grace and us;

The crown of England, father, which is yours.

York. Mine, boy? not till King Henry be dead. 10

Rich. Your right depends not on his life or death.

Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now:

By taking the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,

It will outrun you, father, in the end.

York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.

Edw. But for a kingdom any oath may be broken:

I would break a thousand oaths to reign one year.

Rich. No; God forbid your grace should be forsworn.

York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.

Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak. 20

York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible.

Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took

Before a true and lawful magistrate
 That hath authority over him that swears:
 Henry had none, but did usurp the place;
 Then seeing 't was he that made you to de-
 pose,

Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.
 Therefore, to arms! And, father, do but think

How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown,
 Within whose circuit is Elysium. 30
 And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.
 Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest
 Until the white rose that I wear be dyed
 Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's
 heart.

York. Richard, enough: I will be king, or die.

Brother, thou shalt to London presently,
 And whet on Warwick to this enterprise.

Thou, Richard, shalt to the Duke of Norfolk,
 And tell him privily of our intent.
 You, Edward, shall unto my Lord Cobham,
 With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise: 41

In them I trust; for they are soldiers,
 Witty, courtiers, liberal, full of spirit.
 While you are thus employ'd, what resteth
 more,

But that I seek occasion how to rise,
 And yet the king not privy to my drift.
 Nor any of the house of Lancaster?

Enter a Messenger.

But, stay: what news? why com'st thou in such post?

Mess. The queen with all the northern earls and lords

Intend here to besiege you in your castle. 50
 She is hard by with twenty thousand men.
 And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.

York. Ay, with my sword. What! think'st thou that we fear them?

Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me;
 My brother Montague shall post to London:
 Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
 Whom we have left protectors of the king,
 With powerful policy strengthen themselves,
 And trust not simple Henry nor his oaths.

Mont. Brother, I go; I'll win them, fear
 it not: 60

And thus most humbly I do take my leave.
Exit.

Enter Sir JOHN and Sir HUGH MORTIMER.

York. Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles,

You are come to Sandal in a happy hour;
 The army of the queen mean to besiege us.

Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the field.

York. What! with five thousand men?
Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.

A woman's general; what should we fear?
A march afar off.

Edw. I hear their drums: let's set our men in order,

And issue forth and bid them battle straight.
York. Five men to twenty! though the odds be great, 71

I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.
 Many a battle have I won in France,

Whenas the enemy hath been ten to one:
 Why should I not now have the like success?

Alarum. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Field of Battle between Sandal Castle and Wakefield.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter RUTLAND and his Tutor.

Rut. Ah! whither shall I fly to scape
 their hands?

Ah! tutor, look, where bloody Clifford comes.

Enter CLIFFORD and Soldiers.

Clif. Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life.

As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father, he shall die.
Tut. And I, my lord, will bear him company.

Clif. Soldiers, away with him!

Tut. Ah! Clifford, murder not this innocent child,
Lest thou be hated both of God and man.

Exit, forced off by Soldiers.

Clif. How now! is he dead already? or is it fear

That makes him close his eyes? I'll open them.

Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch

That trembles under his devouring paws;
And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey,
And so he comes to rend his limbs asunder.
Ah! gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword,
And not with such a cruel threatening look.

Sweet Clifford! hear me speak before I die:
I am too mean a subject for thy wrath;
Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.

Clif. In vain thou speak'st, poor boy; my father's blood

Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should enter.

Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again:

He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.

Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives and thine

Were not revenge sufficient for me;
No, if I digg'd up thy forefather's graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

The sight of all the house of York
Is as a fury to torment my soul;

And till I root out their accursed line,
And leave not one alive, I live in hell.

Therefore—Lifting his hand.

Rut. O! let me pray before I take my death.

To thee I pray; sweet Clifford, pity me!

Clif. Such pity as my rapier's point affords.

Rut. I never did thee harm: why wilt thou slay me?

Clif. Thy father hath.

Rut. But 't was ere I was born.

Thou hast one son; for his sake pity me, 40
Lest in revenge thereof, sith God is just,
He be as miserably slain as I.

Ah! let me live in prison all my days;
And when I give occasion of offence,

Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.

Clif. No cause!

Thy father slew my father; therefore, die.

Stabs him.

Rut. Di faciant laudis summa sit ista tui!

Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet!

And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade

Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood,
Congeal'd with this, do make me wipe off both.

Exit.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter YORK.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field:

My uncles both are slain in rescuing me;
And all my followers to the eager foe

Turn back and fly, like ships before the wind,

Or lambs pursu'd by hunger-starved wolves.
My sons, God knows what hath bechanced them:

But this I know, they have demean'd themselves

Like men born to renown by life or death.
Three times did Richard make a lane to me,

And thrice cried 'Courage, father! fight it out!'

And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With purple falchion, painted to the hilt

In blood of those that had encounter'd him:
And when the hardest warriors did retire,

Richard cried 'Charge! and give no foot of ground!'

And cried 'A crown, or else a glorious tomb!
A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!'

With this, we charg'd again; but, out, alas!
We bode'd again: as I have seen a swan

With bootless labour swim against the tide, 20
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.

A short alarum within.
Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue;

And I am faint and cannot fly their fury;
And were I strong I would not shun their fury:

The sands are number'd that make up my

life;

Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter Queen MARGARET, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERLAND, the young PRINCE, and Soldiers.

Come, bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,

I dare your quenchless fury to more rage:
I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clif. Ay, to such mercy as his ruthless arm 30
With downright payment show'd unto my father.

Now Phaethon hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noontide prick.

York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth

A bird that will revenge upon you all;
And in that hope I throw mine eyes to

heaven,
Scorning whate'er you can afflict me with.

Why come you not? what! multitudes, and fear?

Clif. So cowards fight when they can fly no further;

So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons;
So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their

lives,
Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers.

York. O Clifford! but bethink thee once again.

And in thy thought o'errun my former time;
And, if thou canst for blushing, view this
face,
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice

Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere this.

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for
word,

But buckle with thee blows, twice two for
one. Draws.

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes

I would prolong awhile the traitor's life.

Wrath makes him deaf: speak thou, North-
umberland,

North. Hold, Clifford! do not honour him
so much

To prick thy finger, though to wound his
heart.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot
away?

It is war's prize to take all vantages,
And ten to one is no impeach of valour.

They lay hands on YORK, who struggles.

Clif. Ay, ay: so strives the woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the cony struggle in the net.

York. So triumph thieves upon their con-quer'd booty;

So true men yield, with robbers so o'ermatch'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,

Come, make him stand upon this molehill
here,

That raught at mountains with outstretched
arms,

Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.
What! was it you that would be England's
king?

Was 't you that revell'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descend?

Where are your mess of sons to back you
now?

The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?
And where 's that valiant crook-back prodigy,
Dicky your boy, that with his grumbling voice
Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?

Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rut-
land?

Look! York: I stain'd this napkin with the
blood

That valiant Clifford with his rapier's point
Made issue from the bosom of the boy;

And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.

Alas! poor York, but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.

I prithee grieve, to make me merry, York.
What! hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine
entrails

That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?

Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad;

And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.
Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.

Thou would'st be fee'd, I see, to make me
sport:

York cannot speak unless he wear a crown.
A crown for York! and, lords, bow low to
him:

Hold you his hands whilst I do set it on.

Puts a paper crown on his head.
Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!

Ay, this is he that took King Henry's chair:
And this is he was his adopted heir.

But how is it that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?

As I bethink me, you should not be king Till our King Henry had shook hands with
death.

And will you pale your head in Henry's glory,
And rob his temples of the diadem,

Now in his life, against your holy oath?
O! 't is a fault too, too unpardonable.

Off with the crown; and, with the crown,
his head;

And, whilst we breathe, take time to do him
dead.

Clif. That is my office, for my father's sake.

Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons
he makes.

York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France,

Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth!

How ill-beseeming is it in thy sex
To triumph like an Amazonian trull,

Upon their woes whom fortune captivates!
But that thy face is, vizard-like, unchanging,

Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would assay, proud queen, to make thee
blush:

To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,

Were shame enough to shame thee, wert
thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils and Jerusalem,

Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?

It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud
queen,

Unless the adage must be verified,
That beggars mounted run their horse to
death.

'T is beauty that doth oft make women proud;

But, God he knows, thy share thereof is small:

'T is virtue that doth make them most ad-
mir'd;

The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at:
'T is government that makes them seem
divine;

The want thereof makes thee abominable.

Thou art as opposite to every good
As the Antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septentrion.
O! tiger's heart wrapp'd in a woman's hide.
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of
the child,

To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face? 140
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.

Bidd'st thou me rage? why, now thou hast
thy wish:

Would'st thou have me weep? why, now thou hast thy will.

For raging wind blows up incessant showers,
And when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies,

And every drop cries vengeance for his
death,

'Gainst thee, fell Clifford, and thee, false
Frenchwoman.

North. Beshrew me, but his passions move me so 150

That hardly can I check my eyes from
tears.

York. That face of his the hungry cannibals

Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood;

But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,
O! ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's
tears:

This cloth thou dipp'dst in blood of my sweet boy,

And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this;

And if thou tell'st the heavy story right, 160
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;

Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling
tears,

And say 'Alas! it was a piteous deed.'
There, take the crown, and with the crown

my curse,
And in thy need such comfort come to thee

As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the

world;
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your

heads!

North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,

I should not for my life but weep with
him,

To see how inly sorrow gripes his soul. 171
Q. Mar. What! weeping-ripe, my Lord

Northumberland?
Think but upon the wrong he did us all,

And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.
Clif. Here's for my oath; here's for my father's death. Stabbing him.

Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king. Stabbing him.

York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious
God!

My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee. Dies.

Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gates:

So York may overlook the town of York. 180
Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT II

SCENE I.—A Plain near Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire.

A March. Enter EDWARD and RICH-ARD, with their Power.

Edw. I wonder how our princely father
scap'd,

Or whether he be scap'd away or no
From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit.

Had he been ta'en we should have heard
the news;

Had he been slain we should have heard
the news;

Or had he scap'd, methinks we should have heard

The happy tidings of his good escape.
How fares my brother? why is he so sad?

Rich. I cannot joy until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. 10

I saw him in the battle range about,
And watch'd him how he singled Clifford

forth.
Methought he bore him in the thickest troop

As doth a lion in a herd of neat;
Or as a bear, encompass'd round with dogs,

Who having pinch'd a few and made them
cry,

The rest stand all aloof and bark at him.
So far'd our father with his enemies;

So fled his enemies my war-like father:
Methinks 't is prize enough to be his son. 20

See how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun;

How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trimmd like a younker prancing to his love.

Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?

Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;

Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.

See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,

As if they vow'd some league inviolable: 30
Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun.

In this the heaven figures some event.

Edw. 'T is wondrous strange, the like yet never heard of.

I think it cites us, brother, to the field,
That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,

Each one already blazing by our meeds,
Should notwithstanding join our lights together,

And over-shine the earth, as this the world.
Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear

Upon my target three fair-shining suns. 40
Rich. Nay, bear three daughters: by your leave I speak it,

You love the breeder better than the male.

Enter a Messenger.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks fore-
tell

Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Mess. Ah! one that was a woeful looker-on

Whenas the noble Duke of York was slain,
Your princely father and my loving lord.

Edw. O! speak no more, for I have heard too much.

Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it
all.

Mess. Environed he was with many foes,

And stood against them, as the hope of Troy
Against the Greeks that would have enter'd
Troy.

But Hercules himself must yield to odds;
And many strokes, though with a little axe,
Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.

By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford and the queen,
Who crown'd the gracious duke in high
despite;

Laugh'd in his face; and, when with grief
he wept,

The ruthless queen gave him to dry his
cheeks

A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford
slain:

And after many scorns, many foul taunts,
They took his head, and on the gates of
York

They set the same; and there it doth remain,

The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.

Edw. Sweet Duke of York! our prop to lean upon,

Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no
stay.

O Clifford! boisterous Clifford! thou hast
slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry;
And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,
For hand to hand he would have vanquish'd
thee.

Now my soul's palace is become a prison:
Ah! would she break from hence, that this my body

Might in the ground be closed up in rest,
For never henceforth shall I joy again,
Never, O! never, shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep, for all my body's moisture

Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heart:

Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great
burden;

For self-same wind that I should speak
withal

Is kindling coals that fire all my breast,
And burn me up with flames that tears would quench.

To weep is to make less the depth of grief:
Tears then for babes; blows and revenge
for me!

Richard, I bear thy name; I'll venge thy
death,

Or die renowned by attempting it.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with thee;

His dukedom and his chair with me is left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,

Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun:
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom
say;

Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter WARWICK and MON-TAGUE, with their Army.

War. How now, fair lords! What fare?
what news abroad?

Rich. Great Lord of Warwick, if we should recount

Our baleful news, and at each word's deliverance

Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,
The words would add more anguish than the wounds.

O valiant lord! the Duke of York is slain.

Edw. O Warwick! Warwick! that Plantagenet

Which held thee dearly as his soul's redemption,

Is by the stern Lord Clifford done to death.

War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news
in tears,

And now, to add more measure to your
woes,

I come to tell you things sith then befallen.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,

Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,

Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run,
Were brought me of your loss and his depart.

I, then in London, keeper of the king,
Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of
friends,

And very well appointed, as I thought,
March'd toward Saint Alban's to intercept the queen.

Bearing the king in my behalf along;
For by my scouts I was advertised

That she was coming with a full intent
To dash our late decree in parliament,

Touching King Henry's oath and your succession.

Short tale to make, we at Saint Alban's met,
Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely
fought:

But whether 't was the coldness of the king,
Who look'd full gently on his war-like queen,
That robb'd my soldiers of their heated
spleen;

Or whether 't was report of her success;
Or more than common fear of Clifford's
rigour,

Who thunders to his captives blood and
death,

I cannot judge: but, to conclude with
truth,

Their weapons like to lightning came and
went:

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like an idle thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.

I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause,
With promise of high pay and great rewards;
But all in vain; they had no heart to fight,
And we in them no hope to win the day;
So that we fled: the king unto the queen;
Lord George your brother, Norfolk and myself,

In haste, post-haste, are come to join with you;

For in the marches here we heard you were,

Making another head to fight again.

Edw. Where is the Duke of Norfolk, gentle Warwick?

And when came George from Burgundy to England?

War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers;

And for your brother, he was lately sent
From your kind aunt, Duchess of Burgundy,
With aid of soldiers to this needful war.

Rich. 'T was odds, belike, when valiant Warwick fled:

Oft have I heard his praises in pursuit,
But ne'er till now his scandal of retire.

War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou hear;

For thou shalt know this strong right hand of mine

Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,

And wring the awful sceptre from his fist,
Were he as famous and as bold in war

As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.

Rich. I know it well, Lord Warwick; blame me not:

'T is love I bear thy glories makes me speak.
But in this troublous time what's to be done?

Shall we go throw away our coats of steel,
And wrap our bodies in black mourning gowns,

Numbering our Ave-Maries with our beads?

Or shall we on the helmets of our foes
Tell our devotion with revengeful arms?

If for the last, say 'Ay,' and to it, lords.

War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you out,

And therefore comes my brother Montague.
Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,

With Clifford and the haught Northumberland,

And of their feather many more proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.

He swore consent to your succession,
His oath enrolled in the parliament;

And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his oath and what beside

May make against the house of Lancaster.
Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong:

Now, if the help of Norfolk and myself,
With all the friends that thou, brave Earl of March,

Amongst the loving Welshmen canst procure,

Will but amount to five-and-twenty thousand,

Why, Via! to London will we march amain,
And once again bestride our foaming steeds,

And once again cry 'Charge upon our foes!'
But never once again turn back and fly.

Rich. Ay, now methinks I hear great Warwick speak.

Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day,
That cries 'Retire,' if Warwick bid him stay.

Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean;

And when thou fail'st,—as God forbid the hour!

Must Edward fall, which peril heaven forbids!

War. No longer Earl of March, but Duke of York:

The next degree is England's royal throne;
For King of England shalt thou be proclaimed

In every borough as we pass along;
And he that throws not up his cap for joy

Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward, valiant Richard, Montague,

Stay we no longer dreaming of renown,
But sound the trumpets, and about our task.

Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel,

As thou hast shown it flinty by thy deeds,
I come to pierce it, or to give thee mine.

Edw. Then strike up, drums! God and Saint George for us!

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now! what news?

Mess. The Duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,

The queen is coming with a puissant host;
And craves your company for speedy council.

War. Why then it sorts; brave warriors, let's away.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before York.

Flourish. Enter King HENRY, Queen MARGARET, the Prince of WALES, CLIFFORD, and NORTHUMBERLAND, with drums and trumpets.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Yonder's the head of that arch-enemy
That sought to be encompass'd with your crown:

Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord?

K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their wreck:

To see this sight, it irks my very soul.
Withhold revenge, dear God! 't is not my fault,

Nor wittingly have I infrin'd my vow.

Clif. My gracious liege, this too much lenity
 And harmful pity must be laid aside. 10
 To whom do lions cast their gentle looks?
 Not to the beast that would usurp their den.
 Whose hand is that the forest bear doth lick?
 Not his that spoils her young before her face.
 Who scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting?
 Not he that sets his foot upon her back.
 The smallest worm will turn being trodden on,
 And doves will peck in safeguard of their brood.
 Ambitious York did level at thy crown; 19
 Thou smiling while he knit his angry brows:
 He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
 And raise his issue like a loving sire;
 Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son,
 Didst yield consent to disinherit him,
 Which argu'd thee a most unloving father.
 Unreasonable creatures feed their young;
 And though man's face be fearful to their eyes,
 Yet, in protection of their tender ones,
 Who hath not seen them, even with those wings
 Which sometime they have us'd with fearful flight, 30
 Make war with him that climb'd unto their nest,
 Offering their own lives in their young's defence?
 For shame, my liege! make them your precedent.
 Were it not pity that this goodly boy
 Should lose his birthright by his father's fault,
 And long hereafter say unto his child,
 'What my great-grandfather and grandsire got
 My careless father fondly gave away?'
 Ah! what a shame were this. Look on the boy;
 And let his manly face, which promiseth 40
 Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart
 To hold thine own and leave thine own with him.
K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator.
 Inferring arguments of mighty force.
 But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear
 That things ill got had ever bad success?
 And happy always was it for that son
 Whose father for his hoarding went to hell?
 I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind;
 And would my father had left me no more!
 For all the rest is held at such a rate 51
 As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep
 Than in possession any jot of pleasure.
 Ah! cousin York, would thy best friends did know
 How it doth grieve me that thy head is here.
Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits:
 our foes are nigh.
 And this soft courage makes your followers faint.

You promis'd knighthood to our forward son:
 Unsheathe your sword, and dub him presently.
Edward, kneel down. 60
K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;
 And learn this lesson: draw thy sword in right.
Prince. My gracious father, by your kingly leave,
 I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
 And in that quarrel use it to the death.
Clif. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.

Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness:
 For with a band of thirty thousand men
 Comes Warwick, backing of the Duke of York;
 And in the towns, as they do march along, 70
 Proclaims him king, and many fly to him.
 Darraign your battle, for they are at hand.
Clif. I would your highness would depart the field:
 The queen hath best success when you are absent.
Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortune.
K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore I'll stay.
North. Be it with resolution then to fight.
Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords,
 And hearten those that fight in your defence.
 Unsheathe your sword, good father: cry, 'Saint George!' 80

March. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD, WARWICK, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, and Soldiers.
Edw. Now, perjur'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace,
 And set thy diadem upon my head:
 Or bide the mortal fortune of the field?
Q. Mar. Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boy!
 Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
 Before thy sovereign and thy lawful king?
Edw. I am his king, and he should bow his knee;
 I was adopted heir by his consent:
 Since when, his oath is broke; for, as I hear,
 You, that are king, though he do wear the crown, 90
 Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
 To blot out me, and put his own son in.
Clif. And reason too:
 Who should succeed the father but the son?
Rich. Are you there, butcher? O! I cannot speak.
Clif. Ay, crook-back; here I stand to answer thee,
 Or any he the proudest of thy sort.
Rich. 'T was you that kill'd young Rutland, was it not?

Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.

Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight. 100

War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield the crown?

Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongu'd Warwick! dare you speak?

When you and I met at Saint Alban's last, Your legs did better service than your hands.

War. Then 't was my turn to fly, and now 't is thine.

Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.

War. 'T was not your valour, Clifford, drove me thence.

North. No, nor your manhood that durst make you stay.

Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently.

Break off the parley; for scarce I can refrain The execution of my big-swoln heart 111 Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.

Clif. I slew thy father: call'st thou him a child?

Rich. Ay, like a dastard and a treacherous coward,

As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland;

But ere sunset I'll make thee curse the deed.

K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak.

Q. Mar. Defy them then, or else hold close thy lips.

K. Hen. I prithee, give no limits to my tongue:

I am a king, and privileg'd to speak. 120

Clif. My liege, the wound that bred this meeting here

Cannot be cur'd by words; therefore be still.

Rich. Then, executioner, unsheathe thy sword.

By him that made us all, I am resolv'd That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.

Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have my right or no?

A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,

That ne'er shall dine unless thou yield the crown.

War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy head;

For York in justice puts his armour on. 130

Prince. If that be right which Warwick says is right,

There is no wrong, but every thing is right.

Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother stands;

For well I wot thou hast thy mother's tongue.

Q. Mar. But thou art neither like thy sire nor dam,

But like a foul misshapen stigmatic, Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,

As venom toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.

Rich. Iron of Naples hid with English gilt, Whose father bears the title of a king, 140

As if a channel should be call'd the sea, Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art

extraught,

To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?

Edw. A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns.

To make this shameless callat know herself. Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,

Although thy husband may be Menelaus; And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother

wrong'd

By that false woman as this king by thee. His father revell'd in the heart of France, 150

And tam'd the king, and made the dauphin stoop;

And had he match'd according to his state, He might have kept that glory to this day;

But when he took a beggar to his bed, And grac'd thy poor sire with his bridal day,

Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for him,

That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,

And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. For what hath broach'd this tumult but thy pride? Hadst thou been meek our title still had slept, 160

And we, in pity of the gentle king, Had slipp'd our claim until another age.

Geo. But when we saw our sunshine made thy spring,

And that thy summer bred us no increase, We set the axe to thy usurping root;

And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,

Yet know thou, since we have begun to strike,

We'll never leave till we have hewn thee down,

Or bath'd thy growing with our heated bloods.

Edw. And in this resolution I defy thee; 170

Not willing any longer conference, Since thou deniest the gentle king to speak.

Sound trumpets! let our bloody colours wave!

And either victory, or else a grave.

Q. Mar. Stay, Edward.

Edw. No, wrangling woman, we'll no longer stay:

These words will cost ten thousand lives this day. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle near Towton.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter WARWICK.

War. Forspent with toil, as runners with a race,

I lay me down a little while to breathe;

For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repaid, Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength, And spite of spite needs must I rest awhile.

Enter EDWARD, running.

Edw. Smile, gentle heaven! or strike, ungentle death!
For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.

War. How now, my lord! what hap! what hope of good?

Enter GEORGE

Geo. Our hap is loss, our hope but sad despair,
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us. 10
What counsel give you? whither shall we fly?

Edw. Bootless is flight, they follow us with wings;
And weak we are and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter RICHARD

Rich. Ah! Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn thyself?
Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance.

And in the very pangs of death he cried,
Like to a dismal clangor heard from far,
'Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!'

So, underneath the belly of their steeds, 20
That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.

War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:
I'll kill my horse because I will not fly.

Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
Wailing our losses, whiles the foe doth rage;

And look upon, as if the tragedy
Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors?

Here on my knee I vow to God above,
I'll never pause again, never stand still, 30
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,

Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Edw. O Warwick! I do bend my knee with thine;

And in this vow do chain my soul to thine.

And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face,

I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,

Thou setter up and plucker down of kings,
Beseeching thee, if with thy will it stands
That to my foes this body must be prey,

Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
And give sweet passage to my sinful soul! 41
Now, lords, take leave until we meet again,
Where'er it be, in heaven or in earth.

Rich. Brother, give me thy hand; and, gentle Warwick,

Let me embrace thee in my weary arms:
I, that did never weep, now melt with woe
That winter should cut off our spring-time so.

War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, farewell.

Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops,
And give them leave to fly that will not stay,

And call them pillars that will stand to us; 51
And if we thrive promise them such rewards
As victors wear at the Olympian games.
This may plant courage in their quailing breasts;

For yet is hope of life and victory.
Forslow no longer; make we hence amain.
Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Excursions. Enter RICHARD and CLIFFORD.

Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone.

Suppose this arm is for the Duke of York,
And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,

Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.

Clif. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone.

This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York,

And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;

And here 's the heart that triumphs in their death

And cheers these hands that slew thy sire and brother,

To execute the like upon thyself; 10
And so, have at thee!

They fight. WARWICK comes; CLIFFORD flies.

Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase;

For I myself will hunt this wolf to death.

Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarm. Enter King HENRY.

K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning's war,

When dying clouds contend with growing light,

What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,

Can neither call it perfect day nor night.

Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea
Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind;

Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea

Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind:

Sometime the flood prevails, and then the wind;

Now one the better, then another best; 10
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror nor conquered:

So is the equal poise of this fell war.

Here on this molehill will I sit me down.

To whom God will, there be the victory!
For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,

Have chid me from the battle; swearing both

They prosper best of all when I am thence.
Would I were dead! if God's good will were so;

For what is in this world but grief and woe? 21
O God! methinks it were a happy life,
To be no better than a homely swain;

To sit upon a hill, as I do now,

To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,
 Thereby to see the minutes how they run,
 How many make the hour full complete;
 How many hours bring about the day;
 How many days will finish up the year;
 How many years a mortal man may live.
 When this is known, then to divide the
 times: 30

So many hours must I tend my flock;
 So many hours must I take my rest;
 So many hours must I contemplate;
 So many hours must I sport myself;
 So many days my ewes have been with young;

So many weeks ere the poor fools will ean;
 So many years ere I shall shear the fleece:
 So minutes, hours, days, months, and years,
 Pass'd over to the end they were created,
 Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.
 Ah! what a life were this; how sweet!
 how lovely! 41

Gives not the hawthorn-bush a sweeter shade

To shepherds looking on their silly sheep,
 Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy
 To kings that fear their subjects' treachery?
 O yes! it doth; a thousand-fold it doth.
 And to conclude, the shepherd's homely
 curds,

His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
 His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade,
 All which secure and sweetly he enjoys, 50
 Is far beyond a prince's delicates,
 His viands sparkling in a golden cup,
 His body couched in a curious bed,
 When care, mistrust, and treason waits on
 him.

Alarum. Enter a Son that has killed his Father, with the dead body.

Son. Ill blows the wind that profits nobody.

This man, whom hand to hand I slew in
 fight,

May be possessed with some store of crowns;

And I, that haply take them from him now,
 May yet ere night yield both my life and
 them

To some man else, as this dead man doth
 me. 51

Who's this? O God! it is my father's face,
 Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd.
 O heavy times! begetting such events.
 From London by the king was I press'd
 forth;

My father, being the Earl of Warwick's man, Came on the part of York, press'd by his
 master:

And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life,
 Have by my hands of life bereaved him.
 Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did!
 And pardon, father, for I knew not thee! 70
 My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks;

And no more words till they have flow'd their fill.

K. Hen. O piteous spectacle! O bloody
 times!

Whiles lions war and battle for their dens,
 Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity.
 Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee tear for tear;

And let our hearts and eyes, like civil war,
 Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd
 with grief.

Enter a Father who has killed his Son, with the body in his arms.

Fath. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted
 me,

Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold, 80
 For I have bought it with an hundred blows.
 But let me see: is this our foeman's face?
 Ah! no, no, no; it is mine only son.

Ah! boy, if any life be left in thee,
 Throw up thine eye: see, see! what showers arise,

Blown with the windy tempest of my heart,
 Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and
 heart.

O! pity, God, this miserable age.
 What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,
 Erroneous, mutinous and unnatural, 90

This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!
 O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
 And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than common grief!

O! that my death would stay these ruthless
 deeds.

O! pity, pity; gentle heaven, pity.
 The red rose and the white are on his face,
 The fatal colours of our striving houses:
 The one his purple blood right well resembles;

The other his pale cheeks, methinks, presenteth; 100

Wither one rose, and let the other flourish!
 If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.

Son. How will my mother for a father's
 death

Take on with me and ne'er be satisfied!
Fath. How will my wife for slaughter of my son

Shed seas of tears and ne'er be satisfied!
K. Hen. How will the country for these woeful chances

Misthink the king and not be satisfied!
Son. Was ever son so rued a father's
 death?

Fath. Was ever father so bemoan'd his
 son? 111

K. Hen. Was ever king so griev'd for subjects' woe?

Much is your sorrow; mine ten times so
 much.

Son. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill. Exit with the body.

Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet;

My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,
 For from my heart thine image ne'er shall
 go:

My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
 And so obsequious will thy father be,

Son, for the loss of thee, having no more,

As Priam was for all his valiant sons. 120
I'll bear thee hence; and let them fight that
will,

For I have murder'd where I should not kill.

Exit with the body.

K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much over-gone with care,
Here sits a king more woeful than you are.

Alarm. Excursions. Enter Queen MAR-GARET, the Prince of WALES, and EXETER.

Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,
And Warwick rages like a chafed bull.
Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.

Q. Mar. Mount you, my lord; towards Berwick post amain.
Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds

Having the fearful flying hare in sight, 130
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
And bloody steel grasp'd in their ireful
hands,

Are at our backs; and therefore hence amain!

Exe. Away! for vengeance comes along
with them.

Nay, stay not to expostulate; make speed,
Or else come after: I'll away before.

K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exeter:

Not that I fear to stay, but love to go
Whither the queen intends. Forward! away! Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.

*A loud alarm. Enter CLIFFORD,
wounded.*

Clif. Here burns my candle out; ay, here
it dies,

Which, whilst it lasted, gave King Henry
light.

O Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul.
My love and fear glued many friends to
thee;

And, now I fall, thy tough commixture melts,
Impairing Henry, strengthening misproud
York:

The common people swarm like summer
flies;

And whither fly the gnats but to the sun?
And who shines now but Henry's enemies? 10

O Phœbus! hadst thou never given consent
That Phaethon should check thy fiery steeds,

Thy burning car never had scorch'd the
earth;

And, Henry, hadst thou sway'd as kings
should do,

Or as thy father and his father did,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer
flies;

I and ten thousand in this luckless realm
Had left no mourning widows for our death,

And thou this day hadst kept thy chair in
peace. 20

For what doth cherish weeds but gentle
air?

And what makes robbers bold but too much lenity?

Bootless are plaints, and cureless are my
wounds;

No way to fly, nor strength to hold out
flight:

The foe is merciless, and will not pity;
For at their hands I have deserv'd no
pity.

The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.

Come, York and Richard, Warwick and the
rest;

I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast. He faints.

*Alarm and retreat. Enter EDWARD,
GEORGE, RICHARD, MONTAGUE, WAR-WICK, and Soldiers.*

Edw. Now breathe we, lords: good fortune bids us pause, 31

And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful
looks.

Some troops pursue the bloody-minded
queen,

That led calm Henry, though he were a
king,

As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosy to stem the waves.

But think you, lords, that Clifford fled with
them?

War. No, 't is impossible he should escape;

For, though before his face I speak the
words,

Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave; 40

And wheresoe'er he is, he's surely dead.
CLIFFORD groans and dies.

Edw. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave?

Rich. A deadly groan, like life and death's departing.

Edw. See who it is: and, now the battle
's ended,

If friend or foe let him be gently us'd.
Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy, for 't is Clifford;

Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch

In hewing Rutland when his leaves put
forth,

But set his murdering knife unto the root
From whence that tender spray did sweetly
spring, 50

I mean our princely father, Duke of York.

War. From off the gates of York fetch down the head,

Your father's head, which Clifford placed
there;

Instead whereof let this supply the room:
Measure for measure must be answered.

Edw. Bring forth that fatal screech-owl to our house,

That nothing sung but death to us and ours:
Now death shall stop his dismal threatening
sound,
And his ill-boding tongue no more shall
speak.

Attendants bring the body forward.

War. I think his understanding is bereft.
Speak, Clifford; dost thou know who speaks to thee? 61

Dark cloudy death o'er shades his beams of
life.

And he nor sees nor hears us what we say.

Rich. O! would he did; and so perhaps he doth:

'T is but his policy to counterfeit,
Because he would avoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gave our
father.

Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.

Rich. Clifford! ask mercy and obtain no
grace.

Edw. Clifford! repent in bootless penitence. 71

War. Clifford! devise excuses for thy faults.

Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.

Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.

Edw. Thou pitied'st Rutland; I will pity
thee.

Geo. Where's Captain Margaret, to fence
you now?

War. They mock thee, Clifford: swear
as thou wast wont.

Rich. What! not an oath? nay, then the world goes hard

When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath.

I know by that he's dead; and, by my soul,
If this right hand would buy two hours'
life, 80

That I in all despite might rail at him,
This hand should chop it off, and with the issuing blood

Stifle the villain whose unstanched thirst
York and young Rutland could not satisfy.

War. Ay, but he's dead: off with the traitor's head.

And rear it in the place your father's stands.

And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned England's royal king.

From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to
France.

And ask the Lady Bona for thy queen. 90
So shalt thou sinew both these lands together;

And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread

The scatter'd foe that hopes to rise again;
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,

Yet look to have them buzz to offend thine
ears.

First will I see the coronation;
And then to Brittany I'll cross the sea,

To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.

Edw. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick,
let it be;

For in thy shoulder do I build my seat, 100
And never will I undertake the thing
Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.
Richard, I will create thee Duke of Gloucester;

And George, of Clarence; Warwick, as
ourselves,

Shall do and undo as him pleaseth best.

Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence,
George of Gloucester,

For Gloucester's dukedom is too ominous.

War. Tut! that's a foolish observation: Richard, be Duke of Gloucester. Now to London,

To see these honours in possession. 110
Exeunt.

ACT III

SCENE I.—A Chase in the North of England.

Enter two Keepers, with cross-bows in their hands.

First Keeper. Under this thick-grown brake
we'll shroud ourselves;

For through this laund anon the deer will
come;

And in this covert will we make our stand,
Culling the principal of all the deer.

Second Keeper. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.

First Keeper. That cannot be; the noise of thy cross-bow

Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.

Here stand we both, and aim we at the best:

And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befell me on a day 10

In this self place where now we mean to stand.

Second Keeper. Here comes a man; let's stay till he be past.

Enter King HENRY, disguised, with a prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love

To greet mine own land with my wishful
sight.

No, Harry, Harry, 't is no land of thine;
Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from
thee,

Thy balm wash'd off wherewith thou wast
anointed:

No bending knee will call thee Cæsar now,
No humble suitors press to speak for right,

No, not a man comes for redress of thee: 20
For how can I help them, and not myself?

First Keeper. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's fee:

This is the quondam king; let's seize upon
him.

K. Hen. Let me embrace thee, sour adversity,

For wise men say it is the wisest course.

Second Keeper. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon him.

First Keeper. Forbear awhile; we'll hear a little more.

K. Hen. My queen and son are gone to France for aid;

And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick

Is whether gone, to crave the French king's sister <sup>30</sup>

To wife for Edward. If this news be true,
Poor queen and son, your labour is but lost;
For Warwick is a subtle orator,
And Lewis a prince soon won with moving words.

By this account then Margaret may win him,

For she's a woman to be pitied much:
Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;
Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;
The tiger will be mild whiles she doth mourn;

And Nero will be tainted with remorse, <sup>40</sup>
To hear and see her plaints, her brinish tears.

Ay, but she's come to beg; Warwick, to give;

She on his left side craving aid for Henry,
He on his right asking a wife for Edward.
She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;
That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more:

Whiles Warwick tells his title, smooths the wrong,

Inferreth arguments of mighty strength,
And in conclusion wins the king from her, <sup>50</sup>
With promise of his sister, and what else,
To strengthen and support King Edward's place.

O Margaret! thus 't will be; and thou, poor soul,

Art then forsaken, as thou went'st forlorn.

Second Keep. Say, what art thou that talk'st of kings and queens?

K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was born to:

A man at least, for less I should not be;
And men may talk of kings, and why not I?

Second Keep. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king.

K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind; and that's enough. <sup>60</sup>

Second Keep. But if thou be a king, where is thy crown?

K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my head;

Not deck'd with diamonds and Indian stones,

Nor to be seen: my crown is call'd content;

A crown it is that seldom kings enjoy.

Second Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with content,

Your crown content and you must be contented

To go along with us; for, as we think,
You are the king King Edward hath depos'd;

And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,
Will apprehend you as his enemy. <sup>71</sup>

K. Hen. But did you never swear, and break an oath?

Second Keep. No, never such an oath; nor will not now.

K. Hen. Where did you dwell when I was King of England?

Second Keep. Here in this country, where we now remain.

K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old;

My father and my grandfather were kings,
And you were sworn true subjects unto me:
And tell me then, have you not broke your oaths?

First Keep. No;

For we were subjects but while you were king.

K. Hen. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe, a man?

Ah! simple men, you know not what you swear,

Look! as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,

Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,

Commanded always by the greater gust;
Such is the likeness of you common men.

But do not break your oaths; for of that sin <sup>90</sup>

My mild entreaty shall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the king shall be commanded;

And be you kings: command, and I'll obey.

First Keep. We are true subjects to the king King Edward.

K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry, if he were seated as King Edward is.

First Keep. We charge you, in God's name, and the king's,

To go with us unto the officers.

K. Hen. In God's name, lead; your king's name be obey'd:

And what God will, that let your king perform; <sup>100</sup>

And what he will, I humbly yield unto.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King EDWARD, GLOUCESTER, CLARENCE, and Lady GREY.

K. Edw. Brother of Gloucester, at Saint Alban's field

This lady's husband, Sir Richard Grey, was slain.

His lands then seiz'd on by the conqueror:
Her suit is now to repossess those lands;

Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because in quarrel of the house of York

The worthy gentleman did lose his life.

Glou. Your highness shall do well to grant her suit;

It were dishonour to deny it her.

K. Edw. It were no less; but yet I'll make a pause. <sup>10</sup>

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. Yea; is it so? I see the lady hath a thing to grant,

Before the king will grant her humble suit.

Clar. Aside to GLOUCESTER. He knows the game: how true he keeps the wind!

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. Silence!

K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our mind.

L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:

May it please your highness to resolve me now,

And what your pleasure is shall satisfy me. 20

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. Ay, widow? then I'll warrant you all your lands,

An if what pleases him shall pleasure you. Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow.

Clar. Aside to GLOUCESTER. I fear her not, unless she chance to fall.

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. God forbid that! for he'll take vantages.

K. Edw. How many children hast thou, widow? tell me.

Clar. Aside to GLOUCESTER. I think he means to beg a child of her.

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. Nay, whip me then; he'll rather give her two.

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. You shall have four, if you'll be rul'd by him. 30

K. Edw. 'T were pity they should lose their father's lands.

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.

K. Edw. Lords, give us leave: I'll try this widow's wit.

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. Ay, good leave have you; for you will have leave, Till youth take leave and leave you to the crutch.

GLOUCESTER and CLARENCE stand apart.
K. Ed. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?

L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edw. And would you not do much to do them good?

L. Grey. To do them good I would sustain some harm.

K. Edw. Then get your husband's lands, to do them good. 40

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.

K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.

L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness' service.

K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me, if I give them?

L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me to do.

K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon.

L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.

K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to ask.

L. Grey. Why, then I will do what your grace commands.

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. He plies her hard; and much rain wears the marble. 50

Clar. Aside to GLOUCESTER. As red as fire! nay, then her wax must melt.

L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?

K. Edw. An easy task: 't is but to love a king.

L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject.

K. Edw. Why then, thy husband's lands I freely give thee.

L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. The match is made; she seals it with a court'sy.

K. Edw. But stay thee; 't is the fruits of love I mean.

L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.

K. Edw. Ay, but, I fear me, in another sense. 60

What love think'st thou I sue so much to get?

L. Grey. My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers:

That love which virtue begs and virtue grants.

K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.

L. Grey. Why, then you mean not as I thought you did.

K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my mind.

L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive

Your highness aims at, if I aim aright.

K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.

L. Grey. To tell you plain, I had rather lie in prison. 70

K. Ed. Why, then thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

L. Grey. Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower;

For by that loss I will not purchase them.

K. Edw. Therein thou wrong'st thy children mightily.

L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both them and me.

But, mighty lord, this merry inclination

Accords not with the sadness of my suit:

Please you dismiss me, either with 'ay' or 'no.'

K. Edw. Ay, if thou wilt say 'ay' to my request;

No, if thou dost say 'no' to my demand. 80

L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. The widow likes him not, she knits her brows.

Clar. Aside to GLOUCESTER. He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom.

K. Edw. Aside. Her looks do argue her replete with modesty;

Her words do show her wit incomparable;

All her perfections challenge sovereignty:

One way or other, she is for a king;

And she shall be my love, or else my queen.

Say that King Edward take thee for his queen?

L. Grey. 'T is better said than done, my gracious lord: 90

I am a subject fit to jest withal,
But far unfit to be a sovereign.

K. Edw. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee

I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that is, to enjoy thee for my love.

L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto.

I know I am too mean to be your queen,
And yet too good to be your concubine.

K. Edw. You caviil, widow: I did mean, my queen.

L. Grey. 'T will grieve your grace my sons should call you father. 100

K. Edw. No more than when my daughters call thee mother.

Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children;

And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor,

Have other some: why, 't is a happy thing To be the father unto many sons.

Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.

Glou. Aside to CLARENCE. The ghostly father now hath done his shrift.

Clar. Aside to GLOUCESTER. When he was made a shriver, 't was for shift.

K. Edw. Brothers, you muse what chat we two have had. 110

Glou. The widow likes it not, for she looks very sad.

K. Edw. You'd think it strange if I should marry her.

Clar. To whom, my lord?

K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself.

Glou. That would be ten days' wonder at the least.

Clar. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.

Glou. By so much is the wonder in extremes.

K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you both

Her suit is granted for her husband's lands.

Enter a Nobleman.

Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken,
And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.

K. Edw. See that he be convey'd unto the Tower: 120

And go we, brothers, to the man that took him,

To question of his apprehension.

Widow, go you along. Lords, use her honourably.

Exeunt all but GLOUCESTER.

Glou. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.

Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,

That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring,

To cross me from the golden time I look for!
And yet, between my soul's desire and me,
The lustful Edward's title buried,

Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward, 130

And all the unlook'd for issue of their bodies,

To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:
A cold premeditation for my purpose!

Why then, I do but dream on sovereignty;
Like one that stands upon a promontory,

And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,

Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;
And chides the sea that sunders him from thence,

Saying, he'll lade it dry to have his way:
So do I wish the crown, being so far off, 140

And so I chide the means that keeps me from it,

And so I say, I'll cut the causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities.

My eye's too quick, my heart o'erweens too much,

Unless my hand and strength could equal them.

Well, say there is no kingdom then for Richard;

What other pleasure can the world afford?
I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,

And deck my body in gay ornaments,
And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. 150

O miserable thought! and more unlikely Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns.

Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb:

And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,

To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;

To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body;

To shape my legs of an unequal size;
To disproportion me in every part, 160

Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd bear-whelp That carries no impression like the dam.

And am I then a man to be belov'd?

O monstrous fault! to harbour such a thought.

Then, since this earth affords no joy to me But to command, to check, to o'erbear such As are of better person than myself.

I'll make my heaven to dream upon the crown;

And, whiles I live, to account this world but hell,

Until my misshap'd trunk that bears this head 170

Be round impaled with a glorious crown.

And yet I know not how to get the crown,
For many lives stand between me and home:

And I, like one lost in a thorny wood,
That rends the thorns and is rent with the thorns,

Seeking a way and straying from the way;
Not knowing how to find the open air,

But toiling desperately to find it out,
Torment myself to catch the English crown;

And from that torment I will free myself, 180

Or hew my way out with a bloody axe.
 Why, I can smile, and murder whiles I smile,
 And cry 'Content' to that which grieves my heart,
 And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,
 And frame my face to all occasions.
 I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;
 I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
 I'll play the orator as well as Nestor,
 Deceive more slyly than Ulysses could,
 And, like a Sinon, take another Troy. 190
 I can add colours to the chameleon,
 Change shapes with Proteus for advantages,
 And set the murd'rous Machiavel to school.
 Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
 Tut! were it further off, I'll pluck it down.

Exit.

SCENE III.—France. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter LEWIS the French King, his sister BONA, attended: his Admiral, called BOURBON; the King takes his state. Then enter Queen MARGARET; Prince EDWARD, and the Earl of OXFORD. LEWIS sits, and riseth up again.

K. Lew. Fair Queen of England, worthy Margaret,

Sit down with us: it ill befits thy state
 And birth that thou should'st stand while Lewis doth sit.

Q. Mar. No, mighty King of France;
 now Margaret

Must strike her sail, and learn awhile to serve

Where kings command. I was, I must confess,

Great Albion's queen in former golden days;
 But now mischance hath trod my title down,
 And with dishonour laid me on the ground,
 Where I must take like seat unto my fortune, 10

And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?

Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears

And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.

K. Lew. Whate'er it be, be thou still like thyself,

And sit thee by our side. Seats her by him.

To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
 Still ride in triumph over all mischance.
 Be plain, Queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;

It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief. 20

Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping thoughts,

And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to speak.

Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,
 That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
 Is of a king become a banish'd man,

And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn;
 While proud ambitious Edward Duke of York

Usurps the regal title and the seat
 Of England's true-anointed lawful king.
 This is the cause that I, poor Margaret, 30
 With this my son, Prince Edward, Henry's heir,

Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
 And if thou fail us, all our hope is done.

Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;

Our people and our peers are both misled;
 Our treasure seiz'd, our soldiers put to flight,

And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.

K. Lew. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,

While we bethink a means to break it off.

Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our foe. 40

K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I'll succour thee.

Q. Mar. O! but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:

And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter WARWICK, attended.

K. Lew. What's he approacheth boldly to our presence?

Q. Mar. Our Earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest friend.

K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France?

Descending from his state. Queen MARGARET rises.

Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;

For this is he that moves both wind and tide.

War. From worthy Edward, King of Albion,

My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend, 50

I come, in kindness and unfeigned love,
 First to do greetings to thy royal person;

And then to crave a league of amity;
 And lastly to confirm that amity

With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant

That virtuous Lady Bona, thy fair sister,
 To England's king in lawful marriage.

Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry's hope is done.

War. To BONA. And, gracious madam, in our king's behalf,

I am commanded, with your leave and favour, 60

Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue

To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
 Where fame, late entering at his heedful

ears,
 Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue.

Q. Mar. King Lewis and Lady Bona, hear me speak,

Before you answer Warwick. His demand Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love,

But from deceit bred by necessity;
For how can tyrants safely govern home, 69
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
To prove him tyrant this reason may suffice,
That Henry liveth still; but were he dead;
Yet here Prince Edward stands, King
Henry's son.

Look, therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage

Thou draw not on thy danger and dis-
honour;

For though usurpers sway the rule awhile,
Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth
wrongs.

War. Injurious Margaret!

Prince. And why not queen?

War. Because thy father Henry did usurp,
And thou no more art prince than she is
queen. 83

Oxf. Then Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt.

Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;

And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,
Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
And after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth,

Who by his prowess conquered all France:
From these our Henry lineally descends.

War. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth discourse,

You told not how Henry the Sixth hath lost
All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten?
Methinks these peers of France should smile at that. 91

But for the rest, you tell a pedigree
Of threescore and two years; a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom's
worth.

Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege,

Whom thou obeyedst thirty and six years,
And not bewray thy treason with a blush?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence
the right,

Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?
For shame! leave Henry, and call Edward
king. 100

Oxf. Call him my king, by whose injurious doom

My elder brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere, Was done to death? and more than so, my
father,

Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years,
When nature brought him to the door of
death?

No, Warwick, no; while life upholds this
arm,

This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.
War. And I the house of York.

K. Lew. Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, and Oxford,

Vouchsafe at our request to stand aside, 110
While I use further conference with Warwick.

They stand aloof.

Q. Mar. Heavens grant that Warwick's words bewitch him not!

K. Lew. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,

Is Edward your true king? for I were loath
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.

War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour.

K. Lew. But is he gracious in the people's
eye?

War. The more that Henry was unfortunate.

K. Lew. Then further, all dissembling set aside,

Tell me for truth the measure of his love 120
Unto our sister Bona.

War. Such it seems
As may beseem a monarch like himself.

Myself have often heard him say and swear
That this his love was an eternal plant, Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's
ground,

The leaves and fruit maintain'd with
beauty's sun,

Exempt from envy, but not from disdain,
Unless the Lady Bona quit his pain.

K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.

Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine. 130

To WARWICK. Yet I confess that often ere this day,

When I have heard your king's desert recounted,

Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus: our sister shall be Edward's;

And now forthwith shall articles be drawn Touching the jointure that your king must make

Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd.

Draw near, Queen Margaret, and be a witness

That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English
king. 140

Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device

By this alliance to make void my suit:
Before thy coming Lewis was Henry's
friend.

K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret:

But if your title to the crown be weak,
As may appear by Edward's good success,

Then 'tis but reason that I be releas'd
From giving aid which late I promised.

Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand
That your estate requires and mine can
yield. 150

War. Henry now lives in Scotland at his
ease,

Where having nothing, nothing can he lose.
And as for you yourself, our quondam
queen,

You have a father able to maintain you,
And better 't were you troubled him than
France.

Q. Mar. Peace! impudent and shameless Warwick, peace,
Proud setter up and puller down of kings;
I will not hence, till, with my talk and tears,
Both full of truth, I make King Lewis behold Thy sly conveyance and thy lord's false
love; 130
For both of you are birds of self-same feather. A horn sounded within.
K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us or thee.

Enter a Post.

Post. My lord ambassador, these letters are for you,
Sent from your brother, Marquess Mon-
tague:

These from our king unto your majesty;
And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not. They all read their letters.

Oxf. I like it well that our fair queen and mistress
Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns
at his.

Prince. Nay, mark how Lewis stamps as he were nettled:

I hope all 's for the best. 170

K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news?
and yours, fair queen?

Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhop'd joys.

War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent.

K. Lew. What! has your king married the Lady Grey?

And now, to soothe your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience?
Is this the alliance that he seeks with
France?

Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner?

Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much
before:

This proveth Edward's love and Warwick's honesty. 180

War. King Lewis, I here protest, in sight of heaven,

And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,
That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's;

No more my king, for he dishonours me;
But most himself, if he could see his shame.

Did I forget that by the house of York
My father came untimely to his death?

Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece?
Did I impale him with the regal crown?

Did I put Henry from his native right? 190
And am I guerdon'd at the last with
shame?

Shame on himself! for my desert is
honour:

And to repair my honour lost for him,
I here renounce him and return to Henry.

My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
And henceforth I am thy true servitor.

I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bona,
And replant Henry in his former state.

Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd my hate to love;

And I forgive and quite forget old faults, 200

And joy that thou becom'st King Henry's
friend.

War. So much his friend, ay, his unfeigned friend,

That if King Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,

I'll undertake to land them on our coast,
And force the tyrant from his seat by war.

'T is not his new-made bride shall succour
him:

And as for Clarence, as my letters tell me,
He's very likely now to fall from him,

For matching more for wanton lust than
honour, 210

Or than for strength and safety of our country.

Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be reveng'd

But by thy help to this distressed queen?

Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry live,

Unless thou rescue him from foul despair?

Bona. My quarrel and this English queen's are one.

War. And mine, fair Lady Bona, joins with yours.

K. Lew. And mine with hers, and thine and Margaret's.

Therefore at last I firmly am resolv'd
You shall have aid. 220

Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.

K. Lew. Then, England's messenger, return in post,

And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over masquers

To revel it with him and his new bride.
Thou seest what's past; go fear thy king
withal.

Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,

I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.

Q. Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are laid aside,

And I am ready to put armour on. 230

War. Tell him from me that he hath done me wrong,

And therefore I'll uncrown him ere 't be
long.

There's thy reward: be gone. Exit Post.

K. Lew. But, Warwick, thou
And Oxford, with five thousand men,

Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle;

And, as occasion serves, this noble queen
And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.

Yet ere thou go, but answer me one
doubt:

What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?

War. This shall assure my constant loyalty: 240

That if our queen and this young prince agree,

I'll join mine eldest daughter and my joy
To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.

Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion.

Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous,

Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick;

And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.

Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it; 249

And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.
He gives his hand to WARWICK.

K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied,

And thou, Lord Bourbon, our high admiral,
Shall waft them over with our royal fleet.
I long till Edward fall by war's mischance,
For mocking marriage with a dame of France.
Exeunt all but WARWICK.

War. I came from Edward as ambassador,

But I return his sworn and mortal foe:
Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,

But dreadful war shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a stale but me? 250

Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.
I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again:
Not that I pity Henry's misery,

But seek revenge on Edward's mockery.
Exit.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter GLOUCESTER, CLARENCE, SOMERSET, and MONTAGUE.

Glou. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you

Of this new marriage with the Lady Grey?
Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?

Clar. Alas! you know 't is far from hence to France;

How could he stay till Warwick made return?

Som. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the king.

Glou. And his well-chosen bride.
Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

Flourish. Enter King EDWARD, attended; Lady GREY, as Queen; PEMBROKE, STAFFORD, and HASTINGS.

K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice,

That you stand pensive as half malcontent?

Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the Earl of Warwick, 11

Which are so weak of courage and in judgment

That they'll take no offence at our abuse.

K. Edw. Suppose they take offence without a cause,

They are but Lewis and Warwick: I am Edward,

Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will.

Glou. And you shall have your will, because our king:

Yet hasty marriage seldom proveth well.

K. Edw. Yea, brother Richard, are you offended too?

Glou. Not I: 20
No, God forbid that I should wish them sever'd

Whom God hath join'd together; ay, and 't were pity

To sunder them that yoke so well together.

K. Edw. Setting your scorns and your mislike aside,

Tell me some reason why the Lady Grey Should not become my wife and England's queen.

And you too, Somerset and Montague, Speak freely what you think.

Clar. Then this is mine opinion: that King Lewis

Becomes your enemy for mocking him About the marriage of the Lady Bona. 30

Glou. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge,

Is now dishonoured by this new marriage.

K. Edw. What if both Lewis and Warwick be appeas'd

By such inventions as I can devise?

Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance

Would more have strengthen'd this our commonwealth

'Gainst foreign storms than any home-bred marriage.

Hast. Why, knows not Montague that of itself

England is safe, if true within itself? 40

Mont. Yes; but the safer when 't is back'd with France.

Hast. 'T is better using France than trusting France.

Let us be back'd with God and with the seas Which he hath given for fence impregnable,

And with their helps only defend ourselves: In them and in ourselves our safety lies.

Clar. For this one speech Lord Hastings well deserves

To have the heir of the Lord Hungerford.

K. Edw. Ay, what of that? it was my will and grant;

And for this once my will shall stand for law.

Glou. And yet methinks your grace hath not done well, 51

To give the heir and daughter of Lord Scales Unto the brother of your loving bride:

She better would have fitted me or Clarence;

But in your bride you bury brotherhood.

Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir

Of the Lord Bonville on your new wife's son,

And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.

K. Edw. Alas! poor Clarence, is it for a wife

That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee. 60

Clar. In choosing for yourself you show'd your judgment,
Which being shallow, you shall give me leave
To play the broker in mine own behalf;
And to that end I shortly mind to leave you.

K. Edw. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king.

And not be tied unto his brother's will.

Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleas'd his majesty

To raise my state to title of a queen,
Do me but right, and you must all confess
That I was not ignoble of descent;
And meaner than myself have had like fortune.

But as this title honours me and mine,
So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.

K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns:
What danger or what sorrow can befall thee,

So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
And their true sovereign, whom they must obey?

Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,

Unless they seek for hatred at my hands; so
Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.

Glou. Aside. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more.

Enter a Post.

K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters or what news
From France?

Post. My sovereign liege, no letters; and few words,

But such as I, without your special pardon,
Dare not relate.

K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore, in brief,

Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them.

What answer makes King Lewis unto our letters?

Post. At my depart these were his very words:

'Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over masquers

To revel it with him and his new bride.'

K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave? belike he thinks me Henry.

But what said Lady Bona to my marriage?

Post. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain:

'Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,

I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.' 100

K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less;

She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen?

For I have heard that she was there in place.

Post. 'Tell him,' quoth she, 'my mourning weeds are done,
And I am ready to put armour on.'

K. Edw. Belike she minds to play the Amazon.

But what said Warwick to these injuries?

Post. He, more incens'd against your majesty

Than all the rest, discharg'd me with these words: 100

'Tell him from me that he hath done me wrong,

And therefore I'll uncrown him ere 't be long.'

K. Edw. Ha! durst the traitor breathe out so proud words?

Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd:
They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption.

But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret?

Post. Ay, gracious sovereign; they are so link'd in friendship,

That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

Clar. Belike the elder; Clarence will have the younger.

Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,

For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter; 120

That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage

I may not prove inferior to yourself.

You that love me and Warwick follow me.

Exit CLARENCE, and SOMERSET follows.

Glou. Aside. Not I:

My thoughts aim at a further matter; I
Stay not for the love of Edward, but the crown.

K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick!

Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen,

And haste is needful in this desperate case.
Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf 130

Go levy men, and make prepare for war;
They are already, or quickly will be landed:

Myself in person will straight follow you.

Exeunt PEMBROKE and STAFFORD.

But, ere I go, Hastings and Montague, Resolve my doubt. You twain, of all the

rest,

Are near to Warwick by blood and by alliance:

Tell me if you love Warwick more than me?
If it be so, then both depart to him;

I rather wish you foes than hollow friends:
But if you mind to hold your true obedience,

Give me assurance with some friendly vow, 141

That I may never have you in suspect.

Mont. So God help Montague as he proves true!

Hast. And Hastings as he favours Edward's cause!

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?

Glou. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you.

K. Edw. Why so! then am I sure of victory.

Now therefore let us hence; and lose no hour

Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Plain in Warwickshire.

Enter WARWICK and OXFORD with French and other Forces.

War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well;

The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter CLARENCE and SOMERSET.

But see where Somerset and Clarence come! Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends?

Clar. Fear not that, my lord.

War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwick:

And welcome, Somerset: I hold it cowardice

To rest mistrustful where a noble heart Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love; Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's brother,

Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings:

But welcome, sweet Clarence; my daughter shall be thine.

And now what rests, but in night's coverture,

Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd, His soldiers lurking in the towns about, And but attended by a simple guard, We may surprise and take him at our pleasure?

Our scouts have found the adventure very easy:

That as Ulysses and stout Diomedé With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents,

And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds,

So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle,

At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,

And seize himself; I say not, slaughter him, For I intend but only to surprise him.

You that will follow me to this attempt, Applaud the name of Henry with your leader.

They all cry 'Henry!'

Why, then let's on our way in silent sort. For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George!

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—King EDWARD'S Camp near Warwick.

Enter three Watchmen, to guard the KING'S tent.

First Watch. Come on, my masters, each man take his stand:

The king by this is set him down to sleep.

Second Watch. What! will he not to bed?

First Watch. Why, no; for he hath made a solemn vow

Never to lie and take his natural rest

Till Warwick or himself be quite suppress'd.

Second Watch. To-morrow then belike shall be the day,

If Warwick be so near as men report.

Third Watch. But say, I pray, what nobleman is that

That with the king here resteth in his tent?

First Watch. 'Tis the Lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend.

Third Watch. O! is it so? But why commands the king

That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,

While he himself keeps in the cold field?

Second Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because more dangerous.

Third Watch. Ay, but give me worship and quietness;

I like it better than a dangerous honour.

If Warwick knew in what estate he stands, 'Tis to be doubted he would waken him.

First Watch. Unless our halberds did shut up his passage.

Second Watch. Ay; wherefore else guard we his royal tent,

But to defend his person from night-foes?

Enter WARWICK, CLARENCE, OXFORD, SOMERSET, and Forces.

War. This is his tent; and see where stand his guard.

Courage, my masters! honour now or never! But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

First Watch. Who goes there?

Second Watch. Stay, or thou diest.

WARWICK and the rest cry all, 'Warwick! Warwick!' and set upon the Guard; who fly crying, 'Arm! arm!' WARWICK and the rest following them.

Drums beating, and trumpets sounding, re-enter WARWICK and the rest bringing the King out in his gown, sitting in a chair. GLOUCESTER and HASTINGS fly over the stage.

Som. What are they that fly there? War. Richard and Hastings: let them go; here's the duke.

K. Edw. The duke! Why, Warwick, when we parted last,

Thou call'dst me king!

War. Ay, but the case is alter'd: When you disgrac'd me in my embassy,

Then I degraded you from being king, And come now to create you Duke of York.

Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,

That know not how to use ambassadors, Nor how to be contented with one wife,

Nor how to use your brothers brotherly, Nor how to study for the people's welfare,

Nor how to shroud yourself from enemies? 40

K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here too?

Nay, then I see that Edward needs must down.

Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance, Of thee thyself and all thy complices, Edward will always bear himself as king: Though fortune's malice overthrow my state, My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

War. Then, for his mind, be Edward England's king: Takes off his crown.

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,

And be true king indeed, thou but the shadow. 50

My Lord of Somerset, at my request, See that forthwith Duke Edward be conveyed Unto my brother, Archbishop of York. When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows

I'll follow you, and tell what answer Lewis and the Lady Bona send to him.

Now, for a while farewell, good Duke of York.

K. Edw. What fates impose, that men must needs abide:

It boots not to resist both wind and tide. Exeunt King EDWARD, led out; and SOMERSET.

Oxf. What now remains, my lords, for us to do 60

But march to London with our soldiers? War. Ay, that's the first thing that we have to do:

To free King Henry from imprisonment, And see him seated in the regal throne. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen ELIZABETH and RIVERS.

Riv. Madam, what makes you in this sudden change?

Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to learn

What late misfortune is befall'n King Edward?

Riv. What! loss of some pitch'd battle against Warwick?

Q. Eliz. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

Riv. Then is my sovereign slain?

Q. Eliz. Ay, almost slain, for he is taken prisoner;

Either betray'd by falsehood of his guard Or by his foe surpris'd at unawares: 10

And, as I further have to understand, Is new committed to the Bishop of York,

Fell Warwick's brother, and by that our foe.

Riv. These news I must confess are full of grief;

Yet, gracious madam, bear it as you may: Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.

Q. Eliz. Till then fair hope must hinder life's decay:

And I the rather wean me from despair,

For love of Edward's offspring in my womb: This is it that makes me bridle passion, And bear with mildness my misfortune's cross; 23

Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear, And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs, Lest with my sighs or tears I blast or drown King Edward's fruit, true heir to the English crown.

Riv. But, madam, where is Warwick then become?

Q. Eliz. I am informed that he comes towards London.

To set the crown once more on Henry's head.

Guess thou the rest; King Edward's friends must down:

But to prevent the tyrant's violence, For trust not him that hath once broken faith, 33

I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary, To save at least the heir of Edward's right:

There shall I rest secure from force and fraud.

Come therefore; let us fly while we may fly:

If Warwick take us we are sure to die. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.

Enter GLOUCESTER, HASTINGS, Sir WILLIAM STANLEY, and Others.

Glou. Now, my Lord Hastings and Sir William Stanley,

Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither, Into this chiefest thicket of the park.

Thus stands the case. You know our king, my brother,

Is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands

He hath good usage and great liberty, And often, but attended with weak guard,

Comes hunting this way to disport himself. I have advertis'd him by secret means

That if about this hour he make this way, 10 Under the colour of his usual game,

He shall here find his friends with horse and men

To set him free from his captivity.

Enter King EDWARD and a Huntsman.

Hunt. This way, my lord, for this way lies the game.

K. Ed. Nay, this way, man: see where the huntsmen stand.

Now, brother of Gloucester, Lord Hastings, and the rest,

Stand you thus close, to steal the bishop's deer?

Glou. Brother, the time and case requireth haste.

Your horse stands ready at the park corner.

K. Edw. But whither shall we then? 20

Hast. To Lynn, my lord; and ship from thence to Flanders.

Glou. Well guess'd, believe me; for that was my meaning.

K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.

Glou. But wherefore stay we? 't is no time to talk.

K. Edw. Huntsman, what say'st thou? wilt thou go along?

Hunt. Better do so than tarry and be hang'd.

Glou. Come then, away; let's have no more ado.

K. Edw. Bishop, farewell: shield thee from Warwick's frown,

And pray that I may repossess the crown.
Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—London. The Tower.

Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, WARWICK, SOMERSET, young RICHMOND, OXFORD, MONTAGUE, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and friends

Have shaken Edward from the regal seat, And turn'd my captive state to liberty,

My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys, At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Lieu. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;

But if an humble prayer may prevail, I then crave pardon of your majesty.

K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?

Nay, be thou sure I'll well requite thy kindness, 10

For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure;

Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds

Conceive, when after many moody thoughts

At last by notes of household harmony

They quite forget their loss of liberty.

But, Warwick, after God, thou sett'st me free,

And chiefly therefore I thank God and thee; He was the author, thou the instrument.

Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite

By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me, And that the people of this blessed land 21

May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars,

Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,

I here resign my government to thee,

For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous,

And now may seem as wise as virtuous,

By spying and avoiding fortune's malice;

For few men rightly temper with the stars:

Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace, 30

For choosing me when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,

To whom the heavens in thy nativity

Adjudg'd an olive branch and laurel crown,

As likely to be blest in peace and war;

And therefore I yield thee my free consent.

War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.

K. Hen. Warwick and Clarence, give me both your hands:

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,

That no dissension hinder government: 30

I make you both protectors of this land,

While I myself will lead a private life,

And in devotion spend my latter days,

To sin's rebuke and my Creator's praise.

War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's will?

Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent;

For on thy fortune I repose myself. War. Why then, though loath, yet must I be content.

We'll yoke together, like a double shadow To Henry's body, and supply his place; 50

I mean, in bearing weight of government, While he enjoys the honour and his ease.

And, Clarence, now then it is more than needful

Forthwith that Edward be pronounc'd a traitor,

And all his lands and goods be confiscate.

Clar. What else? and that succession be determin'd.

War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.

K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,

Let me entreat, for I command no more, That Margaret your queen and my son 60

Edward Be sent for, to return from France with speed:

For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear My joy of liberty is half eclips'd.

Clar. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed.

K. Hen. My Lord of Somerset, what youth is that

Of whom you seem to have so tender care?

Som. My liege, it is young Henry, Earl of Richmond.

K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope. Lays his hand on his head.

If secret powers Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,

This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss. 70

His looks are full of peaceful majesty, His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,

His hand to wield a sceptre, and himself Likely in time to bless a regal throne.

Make much of him, my lords, for this is he Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Post.

War. What news, my friend?

Post. That Edward is escaped from your brother,

And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.

War. Unsavoury news! but how made he escape? <sup>80</sup>

Post. He was convey'd by Richard Duke of Gloucester

And the Lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush on the forest side,
And from the bishop's huntsmen rescu'd him;

For hunting was his daily exercise.

War. My brother was too careless of his charge.

But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may betide.

Exeunt all but SOMERSET, RICHMOND, and OXFORD.

Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's; <sup>89</sup>

For doubtless Burgundy will yield him help,
And we shall have more wars before 't be long.

As Henry's late presaging prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond,

So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts

What may befall him to his harm and ours:
Therefore, Lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,

Forthwith we 'll send him hence to Brittany,
Till storms be past of civil enmity.

Oxf. Ay, for if Edward repossess the crown,

'T is like that Richmond with the rest shall down. <sup>100</sup>

Som. It shall be so; he shall to Brittany.
Come, therefore, let 's about it speedily.

Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Before York.

Enter King EDWARD, GLOUCESTER, HASTINGS, and Forces.

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest,

Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends,
And says that once more I shall interchange
My waned state for Henry's regal crown.
Well have we pass'd, and now repass'd the seas,

And brought desired help from Burgundy:
What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
From Ravenspurgh haven before the gates of York,

But that we enter as into our dukedom?
Glou. The gates made fast! Brother, I like not this; <sup>10</sup>

For many men that stumble at the threshold
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.

K. Edw. Tush, man! abodements must not now affright us:

By fair or foul means we must enter in.
For which will our friends repair to us.

Hast. My liege, I 'll knock once more to summon them.

Enter, on the walls, the Mayor of York, and his brethren.

May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,

And shut the gates for safety of ourselves;
For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.

K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your king, <sup>20</sup>

Yet Edward at the least is Duke of York.

May. True, my good lord; I know you for no less.

K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my dukedom,

As being well content with that alone.

Glou. Aside. But when the fox hath once got in his nose,

He 'll soon find means to make the body follow.

Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?

Open the gates; we are King Henry's friends.

May. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open'd. Exeunt from above.

Glou. A wise stout captain, and soon persuaded! <sup>30</sup>

Hast. The good old man would fain that all were well,

So 't were not 'long of him; but being enter'd,

I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade Both him and all his brothers unto reason.

Enter the Mayor and two Aldermen.

K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not be shut

But in the night or in the time of war.

What! fear not, man, but yield me up the keys; Takes his keys.

For Edward will defend the town and thee,
And all those friends that deign to follow me.

March. Enter MONTGOMERY and Forces.

Glou. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery, <sup>40</sup>

Our trusty friend, unless I be deceiv'd.

K. Ed. Welcome, Sir John! but why come you in arms?

Mont. To help King Edward in his time of storm,

As every loyal subject ought to do.

K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery; but we now forget

Our title to the crown, and only claim

Our dukedom till God please to send the rest.

Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again:

I came to serve a king and not a duke.
Drummer, strike up, and let us march away. A march begun. <sup>50</sup>

K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, awhile; and we 'll debate

By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.

Mont. What talk you of debating? in few words,

If you 'll not here proclaim yourself our king,
I 'll leave you to your fortune, and be gone

To keep them back that come to succour you.

Why shall we fight, if you pretend no title?

Glou. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points?

K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make our claim.

Till then, 't is wisdom to conceal our meaning.

Hast. Away with scrupulous wit! now arms must rule.

Glou. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crowns.

Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand;

The bruit thereof will bring you many friends.

K. Edw. Then be it as you will; for 't is my right,

And Henry but usurps the diadem.

Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like himself;

And now will I be Edward's champion.

Hast. Sound, trumpet! Edward shall be here proclaim'd.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

Gives him a paper. Flourish.

Sold. Edward the Fourth, by the grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, etc.

Mont. And whosoe'er gainsays King Edward's right,

By this I challenge him to single fight.

Throws down his gauntlet.

All. Long live Edward the Fourth!

K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery, and thanks unto you all:

If fortune serve me, I'll requite this kindness.

Now, for this night, let's harbour here in York,

And when the morning sun shall raise his car

Above the border of this horizon, We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates;

For well I wot that Henry is no soldier.

Ah! froward Clarence, how evil it besseems thee

To flatter Henry, and forsake thy brother.

Yet, as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwick.

Come on, brave soldiers: doubt not of the day;

And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay.

Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter King HENRY, WARWICK, CLARENCE, MONTAGUE, EXETER, and OXFORD.

War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belgia,

With hasty Germans and blunt Hollanders, Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas,

And with his troops doth march amain to London;

And many giddy people flock to him.

K. Hen. Let's levy men, and beat him back again.

Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out, Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.

War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends,

Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war;

Those will I muster up: and thou, son Clarence,

Shalt stir up in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent,

The knights and gentlemen to come with thee:

Thou, brother Montague, in Buckingham, Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find

Men well inclin'd to hear what thou command'st:

And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well belov'd

In Oxfordshire, shalt muster up thy friends.

My sovereign, with the loving citizens,

Like to his island girt in with the ocean,

Or modest Dian circled with her nymphs, Shall rest in London till we come to him.

Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply.

Farewell, my sovereign.

K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's true hope.

Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness' hand.

K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate!

Mont. Comfort, my lord; and so I take my leave.

Oxf. Kissing King HENRY'S hand. And thus I seal my truth, and bid adieu.

K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,

And all at once, once more a happy farewell.

War. Farewell, sweet lords: let's meet at Coventry.

Exeunt all but King HENRY and EXETER.

K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest awhile.

Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship? Methinks the power that Edward hath in field

Should not be able to encounter mine.

Exe. The doubt is that he will seduce the rest.

K. Hen. That's not my fear; my meed hath got me fame:

I have not stopp'd mine ears to their demands,

Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;

My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,

My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears;

I have not been desirous of their wealth,

Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,

Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd.

Then why should they love Edward more than me?

No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace:
And when the lion fawns upon the lamb,
The lamb will never cease to follow him. 50
Shout within, 'A Lancaster! a Lancaster!'

Exe. Hark, hark, my lord! what shouts are these?

Enter King EDWARD, GLOUCESTER, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Seize on the shame-fac'd Henry! bear him hence.

And once again proclaim us King of England.
You are the fount that makes small brooks to flow:

Now stops thy spring: my sea shall suck them dry,

And swell so much the higher by their ebb.
Hence with him to the Tower! let him not speak.

Exeunt some with King HENRY.

And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course.

Where peremptory Warwick now remains:
The sun shines hot; and, if we use delay, 60

Cold biting winter mars our hop'd-for hay.
Glou. Away betimes, before his forces join,

And take the great-grown traitor unawares:
Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry. Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—Coventry.

Enter, upon the walls, WARWICK, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and Others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?

First Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How far off is our brother Montague?

Where is the post that came from Montague?

Second Mess. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troop.

Enter Sir JOHN SOMERVILLE.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?

Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces,

And do expect him here some two hours hence. Drum heard. 13

War. Then Clarence is at hand, I hear his drum.

Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies:

The drum you honour hears marcheth from Warwick.

War. Who should that be? belike, unlook'd-for friends.

Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

March. Flourish. Enter King EDWARD, GLOUCESTER, and Forces.

K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle.

Glou. See how the surly Warwick mans the wall.

War. O unbid spite! is sportful Edward come?

Where slept our scouts, or how are they seduc'd,

That we could hear no news of his repair? 20

K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city gates,

Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee,

Call Edward king, and at his hands beg mercy?

And he shall pardon thee these outrages.
War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,

Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down,

Call Warwick patron, and be penitent;
And thou shalt still remain the Duke of York.

Glou. I thought, at least, he would have said the king;

Or did he make the jest against his will? 30

War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

Glou. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give:

I'll do thee service for so good a gift.
War. 'T was I that gave the kingdom to thy brother.

K. Edw. Why then 't is mine, if but by Warwick's gift.

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:

And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again;
And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

K. Edw. But Warwick's king is Edward's prisoner;

And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this: 40
What is the body when the head is off?

Glou. Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,

But, whiles he thought to steal the single ten,
The king was slyly finger'd from the deck.

You left poor Henry at the bishop's palace,
And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.

K. Edw. 'T is even so: yet you are Warwick still.

Glou. Come, Warwick, take the time; kneel down, kneel down.

Nay, when? strike now, or else the iron cools.

War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,

And with the other fling it at thy face,
Than bear so low a sail to strike to thee.

K. Edw. Sail how thou canst, have wind and tide thy friend,

This hand, fast wound about thy coal-black hair,

Shall, whiles thy head is warm and new cut
off,
Write in the dust this sentence with thy
blood:
'Wind-changing Warwick now can change
no more.'

Enter OXFORD, with drum and colours.

War. O cheerful colours! see where Oxford comes!

Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaster!

OXFORD and his Forces enter the city.

Glou. The gates are open, let us enter too.

K. Edw. So other foes may set upon our backs.

Stand we in good array; for they, no doubt,
Will issue out again and bid us battle:

If not, the city being but of small defence,
We'll quickly rouse the traitors in the same.

War. O! welcome, Oxford, for we want thy help.

Enter MONTAGUE, with drum and colours.

Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaster!

He and his Forces enter the city.

Glou. Thou and thy brother both shall buy this treason

Even with the dearest blood your bodies
bear.

K. Edw. The harder match'd, the greater victory:

My mind presageth happy gain and conquest.

Enter SOMERSET, with drum and colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster!

He and his Forces enter the city.

Glou. Two of thy name, both Dukes of Somerset,

Have sold their lives unto the house of
York;

And thou shalt be the third, if this sword
hold.

Enter CLARENCE, with drum and colours.

War. And lo! where George of Clarence sweeps along,

Of force enough to bid his brother battle;
With whom an upright zeal to right prevails

More than the nature of a brother's love.

GLOUCESTER and CLARENCE whisper.

Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick call.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means?

Taking the red rose out of his hat.

Look here, I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruin my father's house,

Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,

And set up Lancaster. Why, trow'st thou,
Warwick,

That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, unnatural,

To bend the fatal instruments of war
Against his brother and his lawful king?

Perhaps thou wilt object my holy oath:

To keep that oath were more impiety Than Jephthah's, when he sacrific'd his daughter.

I am so sorry for my trespass made
That, to deserve well at my brother's hands,

I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe;
With resolution, whereso'er I meet thee,

As I will meet thee if thou stir abroad,
To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.

And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee,
And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.

Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends: 100
And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,

For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd,

Than if thou never hadst deserv'd our hate.

Glou. Welcome, good Clarence; this is brother-like.

War. O passing traitor, perjur'd and unjust!

K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town, and fight?

Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears?

War. Alas! I am not coop'd here for defence:

I will away towards Barnet presently, 110
And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st.

K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way.

Lords, to the field! Saint George and victory!

March. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Field of Battle near Barnet.

Alarums, and excursions. Enter King EDWARD, bringing in WARWICK wounded.

K. Edw. So lie thou there: die thou, and die our fear:

For Warwick was a bug that fear'd us all.
Now, Montague, sit fast; I seek for thee,

That Warwick's bones may keep thine company.

Exit.
War. Ah! who is nigh? come to me,
friend or foe,

And tell me who is victor, York or Warwick?
Why ask I that? my mangled body shows,

My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows

That I must yield my body to the earth,
And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe. 10

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely
eagle,

Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,
Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree

And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.

These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's
black veil,

Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun
To search the secret treasons of the world:

The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with
blood,

Were liken'd oft to kingly sepulchres; 20
For who liv'd king but I could dig his grave?

And who durst smile when Warwick bent his brow?

Lo! now my glory smear'd in dust and blood;
My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Even now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me but my body's length.
Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust?

And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter OXFORD and SOMERSET.

Som. Ah! Warwick, Warwick, wert thou as we are,
We might recover all our loss again. 30
The queen from France hath brought a puissant power;

Even now we heard the news. Ah! could'st thou fly.

War. Why, then I would not fly. Ah!
Montague,

If thou be there, sweet brother, take my
hand,

And with thy lips keep in my soul awhile.
Thou lov'st me not; for, brother, if thou
didst,

Thy tears would wash this cold congealed
blood

That glues my lips and will not let me speak.
Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.

Som. Ah! Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last: 40

And to the latest gasp cried out for Warwick,
And said 'Commend me to my valiant
brother.'

And more he would have said; and more
he spoke,

Which sounded like a clamour in a vault,
That might not be distinguish'd; but at last

I well might hear, deliver'd with a groan,
'O! farewell, Warwick.'

War. Sweet rest his soul! Fly, lords, and save yourselves;

For Warwick bids you all farewell, to meet in heaven. Dies.

Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power! 50

Exeunt, bearing off WARWICK'S body.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.

*Flourish. Enter King EDWARD in triumph; with CLARENCE, GLOUCESTER, and the
rest.*

K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course,

And we are grac'd with wreaths of victory.
But, in the midst of this bright-shining day,

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud
That will encounter with our glorious sun,

Ere he attain his easeful western bed:
I mean, my lords, those powers that the
queen

Hath rais'd in Gallia have arriv'd our coast,
And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud, 10

And blow it to the source from whence it came:

Thy very beams will dry those vapours up,
For every cloud engenders not a storm.

Glou. The queen is valu'd thirty thousand strong,

And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her:
If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

K. Edw. We are advertis'd by our loving
friends

That they do hold their course toward Tewksbury.

We, having now the best at Barnet field, 20
Will thither straight, for willingness rids
way;

And, as we march, our strength will be augmented

In every county as we go along.
Strike up the drum! cry 'Courage!' and away. Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.

March. Enter Queen MARGARET, Prince EDWARD, SOMERSET, OXFORD, and Soldiers.

Q. Mar. Great Lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss,

But cheerly seek how to redress their harms.
What though the mast be now blown overboard,

The cable broke, the holding-anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood;

Yet lives our pilot still: is 't meet that he Should leave the helm and like a fearful lad

With tearful eyes add water to the sea,
And give more strength to that which hath
too much;

Whiles in his moan the ship splits on the rock, 10

Which industry and courage might have sav'd?

Ah! what a shame, ah! what a fault were
this.

Say Warwick was our anchor; what of that?
And Montague our topmast; what of him?

Our slaughter'd friends the tackles; what of these?

Why, is not Oxford here another anchor?
And Somerset another goodly mast?

The friends of France our shrouds and tacklings?

And, though unskilful, why not Ned and I
For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge? 20

We will not from the helm to sit and weep,
But keep our course, though the rough wind
say no,

From shelves and rocks that threaten us
with wreck.

As good to chide the waves as speak them
fair.

And what is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit?

And Richard but a ragged fatal rock?
All these the enemies to our poor bark.

Say you can swim; alas! 't is but a while:
Tread on the sand; why, there you quickly sink: 30

Bestride the rock; the tide will wash you off.
Or else you famish; that's a threefold death.

This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
In case some one of you would fly from us,

That there's no hop'd-for mercy with the brothers
More than with ruthless waves, with sands and rocks.

Why, courage then! what cannot be avoided
'T were childish weakness to lament or fear.

Prince. Methinks a woman of this valiant spirit

Should, if a coward heard her speak these words, 40

Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.
I speak not this as doubting any here;
For did I but suspect a fearful man,
He should have leave to go away betimes,
Least in our need he might infect another,
And make him of like spirit to himself.
If any such be here, as God forbid!

Let him depart before we need his help.

Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage, 50
And warriors faint! why, 't were perpetual shame.

O brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee: long may'st thou live

To bear his image and renew his glories!
Som. And he that will not fight for such a hope,

Go home to bed, and like the owl by day,
If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at.

Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset: sweet Oxford, thanks.

Prince. And take his thanks that yet hath nothing else.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand, 60

Ready to fight; therefore be resolute.

Oxf. I thought no less: it is his policy
To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.

Som. But he's deceived; we are in readiness.

Q. Mar. This cheers my heart to see your forwardness.

Oxf. Here pitch our battle; hence we will not budge.

Flourish and March. Enter King EDWARD, CLARENCE, GLOUCESTER, and Forces.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heavens' assistance and your strength,

Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
I need not add more fuel to your fire, 70
For well I wot ye blaze to burn them out:

Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords!

Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say

My tears gainsay; for every word I speak,
Ye see, I drink the water of mine eyes.

Therefore, no more but this: Henry, your sovereign,

Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd,

His realm a slaughter-house, his subjects slain,

His statutes cancell'd, and his treasure spent;

And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil. 80

You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,

Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

Alarum. Retreat. Excursions. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Flourish. Enter King EDWARD, CLARENCE, GLOUCESTER, and Forces; with Queen MARGARET, OXFORD, and SOMERSET, Prisoners.

K. Edw. Now here a period of tumultuous broils.

Away with Oxford to Hames castle straight:
For Somerset, off with his guilty head.

Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them speak.

Oxf. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words.

Som. Nor I; but stoop with patience to my fortune.

Exeunt OXFORD and SOMERSET, guarded.

Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublous world,

To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.

K. Edw. Is proclamation made, that who finds Edward

Shall have a high reward, and he his life? 10
Glou. It is: and lo! where youthful Edward comes.

Enter Soldiers, with Prince EDWARD.

K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant: let us hear him speak.

What! can so young a thorn begin to prick?
Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make

For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,
And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?

Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York.

Suppose that I am now my father's mouth:
Resign thy chair, and where I stand kneel

thou, Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee, Which, traitor, thou would'st have me

answer to. 21

Q. Mar. Ah! that thy father had been so resolv'd.

Glou. That you might still have worn the petticoat,

And ne'er have stol'n the breech from Lancaster.

Prince. Let Æsop fable in a winter's night;

His currish riddles sort not with this place.

Glou. By heaven, brat, I'll plague ye for that word.

Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to men.

Glou. For God's sake, take away this captive scold.

Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back rather. 20

K. Edw. Peace, wilful boy, or I will charm your tongue.
Clar. Untutor'd lad, thou art too malapert.
Prince. I know my duty; you are all undutiful.
 Lascivious Edward, and thou perjurd George,
 And thou misshapen Dick, I tell ye all I am your better, traitors as ye are; And thou usurp'st my father's right and mine.
K. Edw. Take that, thou likeness of this railer here. Stabs him.
Glou. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agony. Stabs him.
Clar. And there's for twitting me with perjury. Stabs him.
Q. Mar. O! kill me too.
Glou. Marry, and shall. Offers to kill her.
K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold! for we have done too much.
Glou. Why should she live, to fill the world with words?
K. Edw. What! doth she swoon? use means for her recovery.
Glou. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother;
 I'll hence to London on a serious matter: Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.
Clar. What? what?
Glou. The Tower! the Tower! Exit.
Q. Mar. O Ned! sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy!
 Canst thou not speak? O traitors! murderers!
 They that stabb'd Cæsar shed no blood at all,
 Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame, If this foul deed were by to equal it: He was a man; this, in respect, a child; And men ne'er spend their fury on a child. What's worse than murderer, that I may name it?
 No, no; my heart will burst an if I speak; And I will speak, that so my heart may burst. Butchers and villains! bloody cannibals! 61 How sweet a plant have you untimely cropp'd!
 You have no children, butchers! if you had,
 The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse;
 But if you ever chance to have a child,
 Look in his youth to have him so cut off
 As, deathsmen, you have rid this sweet young prince!
K. Edw. Away with her! go, bear her hence perforce.
Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, dispatch me here:
 Here sheathe thy sword, I'll pardon thee my death. 70
 What! wilt thou not? then, Clarence, do it thou.
Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.
Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it.

Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear I would not do it?
Q. Mar. Ay, but thou usest to forswear thyself:
 'T was sin before, but now 't is charity. What! wilt thou not? Where is that devil's butcher, Hard-favour'd Richard? Richard, where art thou?
 Thou art not here: murder is thy alms-deed; Petitioners for blood thou ne'er putt'st back. 80
K. Edw. Away, I say! I charge ye, bear her hence.
Q. Mar. So come to you and yours, as to this price! Exit.
K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?
Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess,
 To make a bloody supper in the Tower.
K. Edw. He's sudden if a thing comes in his head.
 Now march we hence: discharge the common sort
 With pay and thanks, and let's away to London
 And see our gentle queen how well she fares:
 By this, I hope, she hath a son for me. Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—London. The Tower.

King HENRY is discovered sitting with a book in his hand, the Lieutenant attending. Enter GLOUCESTER.
Glou. Good day, my lord. What! at your book so hard?
K. Hen. Ay, my good lord: my lord, I should say rather;
 'T is sin to flatter; 'good' was little better: 'Good Gloucester' and 'good devil' were alike,
 And both preposterous; therefore, not 'good lord.'
Glou. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer. Exit Lieutenant.
K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf;
 So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,
 And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.
 What scene of death hath Roscius now to act? 10
Glou. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind;
 The thief doth fear each bush an officer.
K. Hen. The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
 With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush;
 And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
 Have now the fatal object in my eye
 Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.
Glou. Why, what a peevish fool was that of Crete,
 That taught his son the office of a fowl!

And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd. 20

K. Hen. I, Dædalus; my poor boy,
Icarus;

Thy father, Minos, that denied our course;
The sun that sear'd the wings of my sweet
boy.

Thy brother Edward, and thyself the sea
Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life.
Ah! kill me with thy weapon, not with
words.

My breast can better brook thy dagger's point

Than can my ears that tragic history.
But wherefore dost thou come? is 't for my
life?

Glou. Think'st thou I am an executioner? 30

K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou
art:

If murdering innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner.

Glou. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.

K. Hen. Hadst thou been kill'd when first thou didst presume,

Thou hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine.
And thus I prophesy: that many a thousand,

Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear,
And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's,

And many an orphan's water-standing
eye, 40

Men for their sons', wives for their husbands',

And orphans for their parents' timeless
death,

Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born.
The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;

The night-crow cried, aboding luckless
time;

Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempest shook down trees;

The raven rook'd her on the chimney's
top,

And chattering pies in dismal discords sung.
Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,

And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope; 50

To wit an undigest deformed lump,
Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree.

Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born,

To signify thou cam'st to bite the world:
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,

Thou cam'st—
Glou. I'll hear no more: die, prophet, in thy speech: 55 Stabs him.

For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd.
K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after this.

O! God forgive my sins, and pardon thee. 60
Dies.

Glou. What! will the aspiring blood of Lancaster

Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted.

See how my sword weeps for the poor king's
death!

O! may such purple tears be always shed
From those that wish the downfall of our house.

If any spark of life be yet remaining.
Down, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither, 65 Stabs him again.

I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear.
Indeed, 't is true that Henry told me of;

For I have often heard my mother say 70
I came into the world with my legs forward.

Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste,
And seek their ruin that usurp'd our right?

The midwife wonder'd, and the women cried
'O! Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth.'

And so I was; which plainly signified
That I should snarl and bite and play the dog.

Then, since the heavens have shap'd my body so,

Let hell make crook'd my mind to answer it.
I have no brother, I am like no brother; 80

And this word 'love,' which greybeards call
divine,

Be resident in men like one another
And not in me: I am myself alone.

Clarence, beware; thou keep'st me from the light;

But I will sort a pitchy day for thee;
For I will buzz abroad such prophecies

That Edward shall be fearful of his life;
And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death.

King Henry and the prince his son are gone:
Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest,

Counting myself but bad till I be best. 91
I'll throw thy body in another room,

And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom.
Exit, with the body.

SCENE VII.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

King EDWARD is discovered sitting on his throne; Queen ELIZABETH, CLARENCE,

GLOUCESTER, HASTINGS, a Nurse with the young Prince, and Attendants.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal throne,

Re-purchas'd with the blood of enemies.
What valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn,

Have we mow'd down in tops of all their
pride!

Three Dukes of Somerset, threefold re-nown'd

For hardy and undoubted champions;
Two Cliffords, as the father and the son;

And two Northumberland: two braver men
Ne'er spurr'd their coursers at the trumpet's
sound;

With them, the two brave bears, Warwick
and Montague, 10

That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roar'd.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,

And made our footstool of security.
Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy.

Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles and myself

Have in our armours watch'd the winter's
night,

Went all a-foot in summer's scalding heat,
That thou might'st repossess the crown in
peace;

And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain. 20

Glou. Aside. I'll blast his harvest, if your head were laid;

For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thick to heave;
And heave it shall some weight, or break my back.

Work thou the way, and that shall execute.
K. Edw. Clarence and Gloucester, love my lovely queen;

And kiss your princely nephew, brothers
both.

Clar. The duty that I owe unto your
majesty

I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe.

Q. Eliz. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother, thanks. 30

Glou. And, that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st,

Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit.

Aside. To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his
master,

And cried 'all hail!' whenas he meant all
harm.

K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights,

Having my country's peace and brothers'
loves.

Clar. What will your grace have done with Margaret?

Reignier, her father, to the King of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,
And hither have they sent it for her ran-
som. 40

K. Edw. Away with her, and waft her hence to France.

And now what rests but that we spend the
time

With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
Such as befits the pleasure of the court?

Sound drums and trumpets! farewell sour annoy!

For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy.

Exeunt.

THE TRAGEDY OF KING RICHARD THE THIRD

TO us who are familiar with Henry VI, Part III, it is a little disturbing that Richard, when the curtain rises upon his own tragedy, should announce his determination to play the villain for no other reason than that he is forbidden to play the lover. We know that this is not true; that the ennui of which he complains is not his real motive. His ambition for the crown, his plans to secure it and the principles that are to guide his actions have all been revealed in the earlier play; and he now steps before us, his character fully drawn, ready to put into execution the plans with which we are already familiar. Over the body of the murdered Henry he had outlined, with a frankness which for some reason he does not now employ, his future course:

"Then, since the heavens have shap'd my body so,
Let hell make crook'd my mind to answer it.
I have no brother; I am like no brother;
And this word 'love,' which greybeards call divine,
Be resident in men like one another,
And not in me: I am myself alone.—
Clarence, beware! thou keep'st me from the light:
Put I will sort a pitchy day for thee;
I'or I will buzz abroad such prophecies,
That Edward shall be fearful of his life,
And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death."

Here is a motive, together with a plan of action, far transcending that of ennui, and one without which the character of Richard shrinks to unheroic proportions and loses much of its moral significance. The tragedy of Richard III, then, if it is to be considered seriously, must be regarded as an integral part of the Henry VI group.

When Richard comes before us in this play the "pitchy day" has at last arrived, the prophecies have been buzzed abroad, and Clarence is about to pass on his way to the Tower. From this moment Richard takes the center of the stage, surrounded only by women and children and weak or corrupt men, with the great, shadowy figure of Margaret hovering like Fate ever in the background. The impression which we receive from the first of his restless energy and his resourcefulness is due chiefly to this contrast between him and those about him. No character in Shakespeare is the center of such a storm of futile imprecations and curses from helpless women as Richard. The terror that he inspires springs not so much from his inherent powers and his apparent incapacity for pity, as from the fact that he meets with little or no opposition from strong and active agencies for good. It is not until late in the play that opposition assumes formidable proportions and under that he collapses because he has built his entire structure on a morally rotten foundation.

Nobody knows this, of course, better than Richard himself. We cannot for a moment believe that he actually regards himself exempt from the operations of a moral law. Because of his ambition for the crown and his despair of obtaining it by other than foul means he has committed his mind to hell and driven pity, love, and fear from his bosom. Or rather, this is what he has tried to do, but without success. His conscience is still operative, as many signs indicate. He who had stabbed Prince Edward, crying "sprawl'st thou?" and who had with his own hand murdered Henry in the Tower, resorts in this play to do his murders through confederates. His chief pride in his successful wooing of Anne is in having overcome her conscience. The very fact that he recognizes the power of conscience in others is sufficient evidence that he still feels it in himself. He may deny it; he may try to stifle it; but he cannot escape it; at least such is the testimony of his wife:

"For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd."

Here we have, as affecting the character of Richard, one of the most important disclosures of the play, and one that seems to have been too often overlooked. This is Shakespeare's hand, preparing his audience for Richard's reaction to the dream on Bosworth field. Before that complete and overwhelming revelation, he draws a curtain that gives us a peep into one of the windows of Richard's soul.

It has been often remarked that Richard reveals no outward sign of an inward struggle, such as we observe, for instance, in Macbeth. This is true, but it is no proof that some such struggle did not occur. To have revealed it would have been, on Shakespeare's part, to remove Richard from the category of villains; for Macbeth, we must remember, was not a villain. It is noticeable that in this play we rarely see into the mind of Richard. He appears seldom in soliloquy, and when he does his mind is engrossed with practical affairs, for like all villains he is restless and active. It must be borne in mind that he is as much concerned in the attempt to deceive himself as to deceive others.

The play proceeds, therefore, until well toward the close without conflict. One after another, obstacles disappear before him, involving scarcely the element of danger. It is not until he hears that Dorset has fled to join Richmond that he has any cause for alarm. From this point on there is a marshalling of forces for the final struggle—a struggle not merely between armed men, but between good and evil.

Encamped on Bosworth field, Richmond makes all his plans for the morning's conflict, bids good night to his followers, and commits himself to the protection of heaven:

"O thou, whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye!

Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory!
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes;
Sleeping and waking, O, defend me still!"

Richard prepares for the night:

"Give me a bowl of wine;

I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.—
Set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?

Ratcliff. It is, my lord.

Richard. Bid my guard watch. Leave me.—

Ratcliff, about the mid of night come to my tent
And help to arm me.—Leave me, I say."

The ghosts that appear between the two tents are but the visible symbols of the dreams of the two men. Richard starts from his dream in panic:

"O, coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me!"

Can it be possible that he is undergoing an entirely new experience? He talks of conscience, of love, of sin and guilt and pity; and he seems to know and feel their meaning. This braggart, who had not been able to deceive himself, and whose villainy had been so cheap and transparent that it had deceived no one else, now recognizes that the structure he has built is falling about his ears; that he has been the architect of his own ruin.

But the character remains consistent to the last. In the face of the testimony of his own conscience, which "hath a thousand several tongues" each one condemning him, he still plays the game of deception. It is the same game that has been played from time immemorial and that is still being played in the world today. It is not personal with Richard; it is played by all who pride themselves on the supremacy of their own will and intellect and who therefore try to divorce themselves from sympathy with their kind. To such, as to Richard,

"Conscience is a word that cowards use, Devised at first to keep the strong in awe."

ACT I

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter GLOUCESTER.

Glou. Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lour'd upon our house
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings;
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries, 11

He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.
But I, that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time 20
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionable
That dogs bark at me as I halt by them;
Why, I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to see my shadow in the sun
And descant on mine own deformity:
And therefore, since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair well-spoken days,
I am determined to prove a villain, 30

And hate the idle pleasures of these days.
 Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous,
 By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
 To set my brother Clarence and the king
 In deadly hate the one against the other:
 And if King Edward be as true and just
 As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
 This day should Clarence closely be mew'd
 up, 39

About a prophecy, which says that G
 Of Edward's heirs the murderer shall be.
 Dive, thoughts, down to my soul: here Clarence comes.

Enter CLARENCE, guarded, and BRAKENBURY.

Brother, good day. What means this armed guard

That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,
 Tendering my person's safety, hath appointed
 This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glou. Upon what cause?

Clar. Because my name is George.
Glou. Alack! my lord, that fault is none of yours;

He should, for that, commit your godfathers.
 O! belike his majesty hath some intent
 That you should be new-christen'd in the Tower. 53

But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know?

Clar. Yea, Richard, when I know; for I protest

As yet I do not: but, as I can learn,
 He hearkens after prophecies and dreams;
 And from the cross-row plucks the letter G,
 And says a wizard told him that by G
 His issue disinherited should be;

And, for my name of George begins with G,
 It follows in his thought that I am he. 59
 These, as I learn, and such like toys as these Have mov'd his highness to commit me now.

Glou. Why, this it is, when men are rul'd
 by women:

'T is not the king that sends you to the Tower;

My Lady Grey his wife, Clarence, 't is she
 That tempers him to this extremity.

Was it not she and that good man of worship,
 Anthony Woodville, her brother there,
 That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower,

From whence this present day he is deliver'd?
 69

We are not safe, Clarence; we are not safe.

Clar. By heaven, I think there is no man secure

But the queen's kindred and night-walking heralds

That trudge betwixt the king and Mistress
 Shore.

Heard ye not what an humble suppliant
 Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

Glou. Humbly complaining to her deity
 Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.

I'll tell you what; I think it is our way,
 If we will keep in favour with the king,
 To be her men and wear her livery: 80

The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
 Since that our brother dubb'd them gentle-
 women,

Are mighty gossips in our monarchy.

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me;

His majesty hath straitly given in charge
 That no man shall have private conference,
 Of what degree soever, with his brother.

Glou. Even so; an't please your worship,
 Brakenbury,

You may partake of any thing we say:
 We speak no treason, man: we say the
 king 90

Is wise and virtuous, and his noble queen
 Well struck in years, fair, and not jealous;
 We say that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
 A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing
 tongue;

And that the queen's kindred are made gentle folks.

How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought to do.

Glou. Naught to do with Mistress Shore!
 I tell thee, fellow,

He that doth naught with her, excepting one,
 Were best he do it secretly, alone. 100

Brak. What one, my lord?

Glou. Her husband, knave. Wouldst't thou betray me?

Brak. I beseech your grace to pardon me;
 and withal

Forbear your conference with the noble duke.

Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey.

Glou. We are the queen's abjects, and must obey.

Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;
 And whatso'er you will employ me in,

Were it to call King Edward's widow sister,
 I will perform it to enfranchise you. 110

Meantime, this deep disgrace in brotherhood

Touches me deeper than you can imagine.

Clar. I know it pleaseth neither of us well.

Glou. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long;

I will deliver you, or else lie for you:

Meantime, have patience.

Clar. I must perforce: farewell.

Exeunt CLARENCE, BRAKENBURY, and Guard.

Glou. Go, tread the path that thou shalt ne'er return,

Simple, plain Clarence! I do love thee so
 That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven,

If heaven will take the present at our hands.
 But who comes here? the new-deliver'd
 Hastings? 121

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious
 lord!

Glou. As much unto my good lord chamberlain!

Well are you welcome to this open air.
 How hath your lordship brook'd imprison-
 ment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must;

But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Glou. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too;

For they that were your enemies are his, 130 And have prevail'd as much on him as you.

Hast. More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,

While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Glou. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so bad abroad as this at home;

The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy, And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glou. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is bad indeed.

O! he hath kept an evil diet long, 139

And overmuch consum'd his royal person: 'Tis very grievous to be thought upon.

What! is he in his bed?

Hast. He is.

Glou. Go you before, and I will follow you.

Exit HASTINGS.

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die Till George be pack'd with post-horse up to heaven.

I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence, With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments;

And, if I fail not in my deep intent, Clarence hath not another day to live: 150

Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,

And leave the world for me to bustle in! For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter.

What though I kill'd her husband and her father?

The readiest way to make the wench amends Is to become her husband and her father:

The which will I; not all so much for love As for another secret close intent,

By marrying her which I must reach unto. But yet I run before my horse to market: 160

Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives and reigns:

When they are gone, then must I count my gains. Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Street.

Enter the corpse of King HENRY the Sixth, borne in an open coffin, Gentlemen bearing halberds, to guard it; and Lady ANNE as mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load,

If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,

Whilst I awhile obsequiously lament

The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!

Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost,

To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,

Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,

Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds!

Lo! in these windows that let forth thy life, I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes.

O! cursed be the hand that made these holes;

Cursed the heart that had the heart to do it! Cursed the blood that let this blood from hence!

More direful hap betide that hated wretch, That makes us wretched by the death of thee,

Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads, Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives! 20

If ever he have child, abortive be it, Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,

Whose ugly and unnatural aspect May fright the hopeful mother at the view;

And that be heir to his unhappiness! If ever he have wife, let her be made

More miserable by the death of him Than I am made by my young lord and thee!

Come, now towards Chertsey with your holy load,

Taken from Paul's to be interred there; 30 And still, as you are weary of this weight, Rest you, whiles I lament King Henry's corse.

The Bearers take up the corpse and advance.

Enter GLOUCESTER.

Glou. Stay, you that bear the corse, and set it down.

Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,

To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Glou. Villains! set down the corse; or, by Saint Paul,

I'll make a corse of him that disobeys. First Gent. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

Glou. Unmanner'd dog! stand thou when I command: 39

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast, Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,

And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

The Bearers set down the coffin.

Anne. What! do you tremble? are you all afraid?

Alas! I blame you not; for you are mortal, And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.

Avaunt! thou dreadful minister of hell; Thou hadst but power over his mortal body,

His soul thou canst not have: therefore, be gone.

Glou. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curst.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not; 50

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell, Fill'd it with cursing cries and deep ex-claims.

If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds, Behold this pattern of thy butcheries.

O! gentlemen; see, see! dead Henry's wounds

Open their congeal'd mouths and bleed afresh.

Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity, For 't is thy presence that exhales this blood From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells:

Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural, 60 Provokes this deluge most unnatural.

O God! which this blood mad'st, revenge his death;

O earth! which this blood drink'st, revenge his death;

Either heaven with lightning strike the murderer dead,

Or earth, gape open wide, and eat him quick, As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,

Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered!

Glou. Lady, you know no rules of charity, Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.

Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor man: 70

No beast so fierce but knows some touch of pity.

Glou. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.

Anne. O! wonderful, when devils tell the truth.

Glou. More wonderful when angels are so angry.

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman, Of these supposed evils, to give me leave,

By circumstance, but to acquit myself.

Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man

For these known evils, but to give me leave, By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self. 80

Glou. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me have

Some patient leisure to excuse myself.

Anne. Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make

No excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Glou. By such despair I should accuse myself.

Anne. And by despairing should'st thou stand excus'd

For doing worthy vengeance on thyself, Which didst unworthy slaughter upon others.

Glou. Say that I slew them not.

Anne. Then say they were not slain: But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee. 90

Glou. I did not kill your husband.

Anne. Why, then he is alive.

Glou. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand.

Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest: Queen Margaret saw

Thy murderous falchion smoking in his blood;

The which thou once didst bend against her breast,

But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glou. I was provoked by her sland'rous tongue, Which laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind,

That never dreamt on aught but butcheries. Didst thou not kill this king? 101

Glou. I grant ye.

Anne. Dost grant me, hedge-hog? then, God grant me too

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed!

O! he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

Glou. The fitter for the King of heaven that hath him.

Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never come.

Glou. Let him thank me, that help to send him thither;

For he was fitter for that place than earth.

Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell.

Glou. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me name it. 110

Anne. Some dungeon.

Glou. Your bedchamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou liest!

Glou. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.

Glou. I know so. But, gentle Lady Anne,

To leave this keen encounter of our wits, And fall somewhat into a slower method,

Is not the causer of the timeless deaths Of these Plantagenets, Henry and Edward,

As blameful as the executioner?

Anne. Thou art the cause, and most accurs'd effect. 120

Glou. Your beauty was the cause of that effect;

Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep To undertake the death of all the world,

So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.

Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,

These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.

Glou. These eyes could not endure that beauty's wreck;

You should not blemish it if I stood by: As all the world is cheered by the sun,

So I by that; it is my day, my life. 130

Anne. Black night o'ershade thy day, and death thy life!

Glou. Curse not thyself, fair creature; thou art both.

Anne. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.

Glou. It is a quarrel most unnatural, To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.

Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable, To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my husband.

Glou. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,

Did it to help thee to a better husband.

Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth. 140

Glou. He lives that loves thee better than he could.

Anne. Name him,

Glou. Plantagenet.
 Anne. Why, that was he.
 Glou. The self-same name, but one of better nature.
 Anne. Where is he?
 Glou. Here. She spitteth at him.
 Why dost thou spit at me?
 Anne. Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake!
 Glou. Never came poison from so sweet a place.
 Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad. Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.
 Glou. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. 150
 Anne. Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead!
 Glou. I would they were, that I might die at once;
 For now they kill me with a living death. Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
 Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops;
 These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear;
 No, when my father York and Edward wept To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made
 When black-fac'd Clifford shook his sword at him;
 Nor when thy war-like father, like a child, Told the sad story of my father's death, 161
 And twenty times made pause to sob and weep,
 That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks, Like trees bedash'd with rain; in that sad time
 My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear; And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,
 Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping.
 I never sued to friend nor enemy;
 My tongue could never learn sweet smoothing words;
 But now thy beauty is propos'd my fee, 170
 My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speak.
She looks scornfully at him.
 Teach not thy lip such scorn, for it was made For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.
 If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive, Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;
 Which if thou please to hide in this true breast,
 And let the soul forth that adareth thee, I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
 And humbly beg the death upon my knee.
He lays his breast open: she offers at it with his sword.
 Nay, do not pause; for I did kill King Henry; 180
 But 't was thy beauty that provoked me.
 Nay, now dispatch; 't was I that stabb'd young Edward;
 But 't was thy heavenly face that set me on.
She falls fall the sword.
 Take up the sword again, or take up me.

Anne. Arise, dissembler: though I wish thy death,
 I will not be the executioner.
 Glou. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.
 Anne. I have already.
 Glou. That was in thy rage:
 Speak it again, and even with the word, This hand, which, for thy love, did kill thy love, 190
 Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love:
 To both their deaths shalt thou be accessary.
 Anne. I would I knew thy heart.
 Glou. 'T is figured in my tongue.
 Anne. I fear me both are false.
 Glou. Then never man was true.
 Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.
 Glou. Say, then, my peace is made.
 Anne. That shalt thou know hereafter.
 Glou. But shall I live in hope? 200
 Anne. All men, I hope, live so.
 Glou. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.
 Anne. To take is not to give.
 Glou. Look! how this ring encompasseth thy finger,
 Even so thy breast encloseth my poor heart;
 Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.
 And if thy poor devoted servant may But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
 Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever. 210
 Anne. What is it?
 Glou. That it may please you leave these sad designs
 To him that hath more cause to be a mourner,
 And presently repair to Crosby-place;
 Where, after I have solemnly interr'd At Chertsey monastery this noble king,
 And wet his grave with my repentant tears, I will with all expedient duty see you:
 For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you, Grant me this boon.
 Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys me too 220
 To see you are become so penitent.
 Tressel and Berkeley, go along with me.
 Glou. Bid me farewell.
 Anne. 'T is more than you deserve;
 But since you teach me how to flatter you, Imagine I have said farewell already.
Exeunt Lady ANNE, TRESSSEL, and BERKELEY.
 Glou. Sirs, take up the corse.
 Gent. Towards Chertsey, noble lord?
 Glou. No, to White-Friars; there attend my coming.
Exeunt all but GLOUCESTER.
 Was ever woman in this humour woo'd?
 Was ever woman in this humour won?
 I'll have her; but I will not keep her long.
 What! I, that kill'd her husband and his father, 231
 To take her in her heart's extremest hate;
 With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,
 The bleeding witness of her hatred by;

Having God, her conscience, and these bars
 against me,
 And I no friends to back my suit withal,
 But the plain devil and dissembling looks,
 And yet to win her, all the world to nothing!
 Ha!
 Hath she forgot already that brave prince, 240
 Edward, her lord, whom I, some three months since,
 Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury?
 A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,
 Fram'd in the prodigality of nature,
 Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right
 royal,
 The spacious world cannot again afford:
 And will she yet abase her eyes on me,
 That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet
 prince,
 And made her widow to a woeful bed?
 On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety? I have and you shall not see 250
 On me, that halt and am misshapen thus?
 My dukedom to a beggarly denier
 I do mistake my person all this while:
 Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
 Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
 I'll be at charges for a looking-glass,
 And entertain a score or two of tailors,
 To study fashions to adorn my body:
 Since I am crept in favour with myself,
 I will maintain it with some little cost. 260
 But first I'll turn you fellow in his grave,
 And then return lamenting to my love.
 Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass,
 That I may see my shadow as I pass. Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen ELIZABETH, Lord RIVERS, and Lord GREY.

Riv. Have patience, madam: there's no doubt his majesty
 Will soon recover his accustom'd health.
Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse:
 Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,
 And cheer his grace with quick and merry
 words.
Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide on me?
Grey. No other harm but loss of such a
 lord.
Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms.
Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly son,
 To be your comforter when he is gone. 10
Q. Eliz. Ah! he is young; and his minority
 Is put unto the trust of Richard Gloucester,
 A man that loves not me, nor none of you.
Riv. Is it concluded he shall be protector?
Q. Eliz. It is determin'd, not concluded yet:
 But so it must be if the king miscarry.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and STANLEY.

Grey. Here come the Lords of Buckingham and Stanley.
Buck. Good time of day unto your royal
 grace!
Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!
Q. Eliz. The Countess Richmond, good my Lord of Stanley, 20
 To your good prayer will scarcely say amen.
 Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your
 wife,
 And loves not me, be you, good lord, assur'd
 I hate not you for her proud arrogance.
Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe
 The envious slanders of her false accusers;
 Or, if she be accus'd on true report,
 Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds
 From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.
Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my Lord of Stanley? 30
Stan. But now the Duke of Buckingham and I
 Are come from visiting his majesty.
Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords?
Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully.
Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer with him?
Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement
 Between the Duke of Gloucester and your
 brothers,
 And between them and my lord chamberlain;
 And sent to warn them to his royal presence.
Q. Eliz. Would all were well! But that will never be. 40
 I fear our happiness is at the highest.

Enter GLOUCESTER, HASTINGS, and DORSET.

Glou. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it:
 Who are they that complain unto the king,
 That I, forsooth, am stern and love them
 not?
 By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly
 That fill his ears with such dissentious rumours.
 Because I cannot flatter and speak fair, Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
 Duck with French nods and apish courtesy,
 I must be held a rancorous enemy. 50
 Cannot a plain man live and think no harm.
 But thus his simple truth must be abus'd
 By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks?
Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks your grace?
Glou. To thee, that hast nor honesty nor
 grace.
 When have I injur'd thee? when done thee
 wrong?

Or thee? or thee? or any of your faction?
A plague upon you all! His royal person, Whom God preserve better than you would wish!

Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing while, 60
But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloucester, you mistake the matter.

The king, of his own royal disposition,
And not provok'd by any suitor else,
Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred,
That in your outward action shows itself
Against my kindred, brothers, and myself, Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather

The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.
Glou. I cannot tell: the world is grown so bad 70

That wrens make prey where eagles dare not perch:

Since every Jack became a gentleman
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloucester;

You envy my advancement and my friends'.
God grant we never may have need of you!

Glou. Meantime, God grants that we have need of you:

Our brother is imprison'd by your means,
Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility
Held in contempt; while many fair promotions 80

Are daily given to ennoble those That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble.

Q. Eliz. By him that rais'd me to this careful height

From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his majesty

Against the Duke of Clarence, but have been

An earnest advocate to plead for him.
My lord, you do me shameful injury,

Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.
Glou. You may deny that you were not the mean 90

Of my Lord Hastings' late imprisonment.
Riv. She may, my lord; for—

Glou. She may, Lord Rivers! why, who knows not so?

She may do more, sir, than denying that:
She may help you to many fair preferments,

And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honours on your high desert.

What may she not? She may,—ay, marry, may she,—

Riv. What, marry, may she?

Glou. What, marry, may she! marry with
a king, 100

A bachelor, and a handsome stripling too.
I wis your grandam had a worser match.

Q. Eliz. My Lord of Gloucester, I have too long borne

Your blunt upbraidings and your bitter
scoffs;

By hence, I will acquaint his majesty
Of those gross taunts that oft I have endur'd.

I had rather be a country servant maid
Than a great queen, with this condition,
To be so baited, scorn'd and stormed at:
Small joy have I in being England's
queen. 110

Enter Queen MARGARET, behind.

Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God,
I beseech him!

Thy honour, state and seat is due to me.
Glou. What! threat you me with telling of the king?

Tell him, and spare not: look! what I have
said

I will avouch in presence of the king:
I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.

'T is time to speak; my pains are quite forgot.

Q. Mar. Out, devil! I remember them too well:

Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower,

And Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury. 120
Glou. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,

I was a pack-horse in his great affairs,
A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,

A liberal rewarder of his friends;
To royalise his blood I spilt mine own.

Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his, or thine.

Glou. In all which time you and your husband Grey

Were factious for the house of Lancaster;
And Rivers, so were you. Was not your husband

In Margaret's battle at Saint Alban slain?
Let me put in your minds, if you forget, 131

What you have been ere now, and what you
are;

Withal, what I have been, and what I am.
Q. Mar. A murderous villain, and so still thou art.

Glou. Poor Clarence did forsake his father Warwick,

Ay, and forswore himself, which Jesu pardon!

Q. Mar. Which God revenge!

Glou. To fight on Edward's party for the
crown;

And for his meed, poor lord, he is mew'd up.
I would to God my heart were flint, like Edward's, 140

Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine:
I am too childish-foolish for this world.

Q. Mar. Hie thee to hell for shame, and leave the world,

Thou cacodemon! there thy kingdom is.
Riv. My Lord of Gloucester, in those busy days

Which here you urge to prove us enemies,
We follow'd then our lord, our lawful king;

So should we you, if you should be our
king.

Glou. If I should be! I had rather be a pedlar.

Far be it from my heart the thought thereof!
Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose 151

You should enjoy, were you this country's king,
As little joy may you suppose in me
That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.

Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;

For I am she, and altogether joyless.
I can no longer hold me patient. Advancing.
Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill'd from me!

Which of you trembles not that looks on me?
If not, that, I being queen, you bow like subjects,
Yet that, by you depos'd, you quake like rebels?

Ah! gentle villain, do not turn away.

Glou. Foul wrinkled witch, what mak'st thou in my sight?

Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd;

That will I make before I let thee go.

Glou. Wert thou not banished on pain of death?

Q. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in banishment

Than death can yield me here by my abode.
A husband and a son thou ow'st to me; 170
And thou a kingdom; all of you allegiance:
This sorrow that I have by right is yours,
And all the pleasures you usurp are mine.

Glou. The curse my noble father laid on thee,

When thou didst crown his war-like brows with paper;

And with thy scorns drew'st rivers from his eyes;

And then, to dry them, gav'st the duke a clout

Steep'd in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland;

His curses, then from bitterness of soul

Denounc'd against thee, are all fallen upon thee; 180

And God, not we, hath plagu'd thy bloody deed.

Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O! 'twas the foulest deed to slay that babe,

And the most merciless that e'er was heard of.

Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.

Dor. No man but prophesied revenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it.

Q. Mar. What! were you snarling all before I came,

Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me? 190

Did York's dread curse prevail so much with heaven

That Henry's death, my lovely Edward's death,

Their kingdom's loss, my woeful banishment,

Should all but answer for that peevish brat?

Can curses pierce the clouds and enter heaven?

Why then, give way, dull clouds, to my quick curses!

If not by war, by surfeit die your king,
As ours by murder, to make him a king!

Edward thy son, which now is Prince of Wales,

For Edward my son, which was Prince of Wales,

Die in his youth by like untimely violence!

Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,
Oulive thy glory, like my wretched self!

Long may'st thou live to wail thy children's loss,

And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine!

Long die thy happy days before thy death;
And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief,

Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen!

Rivers and Dorset, you were standers by, 210
And so wast thou, Lord Hastings, when my son

Was stabb'd with bloody daggers: God, I pray him,

That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off!

Glou. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wither'd hag!

Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me.

If heaven have any grievous plague in store
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,

O! let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation 220

On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul!

Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou livest,

And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!

No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be while some tormenting dream

Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils!

Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog!

Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature and the son of hell! 230

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!

Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!

Thou rag of honour! thou detested—
Glou. Margaret.

Q. Mar. Richard!

Glou. Ha!

Q. Mar. I call thee not.

Glou. I cry thee mercy then, for I did think

That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names.

Q. Mar. Why, so I did; but look'd for no reply.

O! let me make the period to my curse.
Glou. 'Tis done by me, and ends in 'Margaret.'

Q. Eliz. Thus have you breath'd your curse against yourself. 240

I do beweepe to many simple gulls;
Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;
And say it is the queen and her allies 330
That stir the king against the duke my brother.

Now they believe it; and withal whet me
To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey:
But then I sigh, and, with a piece of scripture,

Tell them that God bids us do good for evil:
And thus I clothe my naked villany
With old odd ends stol'n forth of holy writ,
And seem a saint when most I play the devil.

Enter two Murderers.

But soft! here come my executioners. 339
How now, my hardy, stout, resolved mates!
Are you not going to dispatch this thing?

First Murd. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant.

That we may be admitted where he is.

Glou. Well thought upon; I have it here about me. Gives the warrant.

When you have done, repair to Crosby-
place.

But, sirs, be sudden in the execution,
Withal obdurate, do not hear him plead;
For Clarence is well-spoken, and perhaps May move your hearts to pity, if you mark
him.

First Murd. Tut, tut! my lord, we will not stand to prate; As he speaks, the 350

Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd
We go to use our hands and not our tongues.

Glou. Your eyes drop millstones, when fools' eyes fall tears:

I like you, lads; about your business
straight;

Go, go, dispatch.

First Murd. We will, my noble lord.
Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. The Tower.

Enter CLARENCE and BRAKENBURY.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily
to-day?

Clar. O! I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,
That, as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy
days,

So full of dismal terror was the time.

Brak. What was your dream, my lord?
I pray you, tell me.

Clar. Methought that I had broken from
the Tower,

And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy; 10
And in my company my brother Gloucester,
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatches: thence we look'd toward
England,

And cited up a thousand heavy times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster
That had befall'n us. As we pac'd along
Upon the siddy footing of the hatches, Methought that Gloucester stumbled; and,
in falling,

Struck me, that thought to stay him, over-
board,

Into the tumbling billows of the main. 20
Lord, Lord! methought what pain it was to drown:

What dreadful noise of waters in mine ears!
What ugly sights of death within mine eyes!
Methought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of
pearl,

Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes

Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept, one hundred thousand 30

As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems,
That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Brak. Had you such leisure in the time
of death

To gaze upon the secrets of the deep?

Clar. Methought I had; and often did
I strive

To yield the ghost; but still the envious
flood

Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast, and wandering air;
But smother'd it within my panting bulk, 40
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not with this sore agony?

Clar. No, no, my dream was lengthen'd
after life;

O! then began the tempest to my soul.

I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that sour ferryman which poets write
of,

Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The first that there did greet my stranger
soul,

Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick;

Who cried aloud, 'What scourge for perjury 50

Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?'

And so he vanish'd: then came wandering
by

A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood; and he shriek'd out aloud,

'Clarence is come; false, fleeting, perjur'd
Clarence,

That stabb'd me in the field by Tewksbury;
Seize on him! Furies, take him unto tor-
ment.'

With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very noise 60

I trembling wak'd, and for a season after
Could not believe but that I was in hell,

Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brak. No marvel, lord, though it affrighted you;

I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. O Brakenbury! I have done those things
That now bear evidence against my soul,
For Edward's sake; and see how he requites me.

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,

But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds, 70
Yet execute thy wrath in me alone:

O! spare my guiltless wife and my poor children.

I pray thee, gentle keeper, stay by me;
My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

Brak. I will, my lord. God give your grace good rest!

Sorrow breaks seasons and reposing hours,
Makes the night morning, and the noon-tide night.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,

An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations, 80

They often feel a world of restless cares:
So that, between their titles and low names,

There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter the two Murderers.

First Murd. Ho! who's here?

Brak. What would'st thou, fellow? and how can'st thou hither?

First Murd. I would speak with Clarence, and I came hither on my legs.

Brak. What! so brief?

Second Murd. 'Tis better, sir, than to be tedious. Let him see our commission, and talk no more.

A paper delivered to BRAKENBURY, who reads it.

Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver

The noble Duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.

There lies the duke asleep, and there the keys.

I'll to the king; and signify to him
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

First Murd. You may, sir; 'tis a point of wisdom: fare you well. 100

Exit BRAKENBURY.

Second Murd. What! shall we stab him as he sleeps?

First Murd. No; he'll say 't was done cowardly, when he wakes.

Second Murd. When he wakes! why fool, he shall never wake till the judgment-day.

First Murd. Why, then he'll say we stabbed him sleeping.

Second Murd. The urging of that word 'judgment' hath bred a kind of remorse in me. 110

First Murd. What! art thou afraid?

Second Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant for it; but to be damned for killing him, from the which no warrant can defend us.

First Murd. I thought thou hadst been resolute.

Second Murd. So I am, to let him live.

First Murd. Back to the Duke of Gloucester, tell him so.

Second Murd. I pray thee, stay a while: I hope my holy humour will change; 't was wont to hold me but while one would tell twenty. 122

First Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now?

Second Murd. Some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me.

First Murd. Remember our reward when the deed's done.

Second Murd. 'Zounds! he dies: I had forgot the reward. 129

First Murd. Where's thy conscience now?

Second Murd. In the Duke of Gloucester's purse.

First Murd. So when he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out.

Second Murd. 'T is no matter; let it go: there's few or none will entertain it.

First Murd. What if it come to thee again?

Second Murd. I'll not meddle with it; it makes a man a coward; a man cannot steal, but it accuseth him; a man cannot swear, but it checks him; a man cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, but it detects him: 't is a blushing shame-fast spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom; it fills a man full of obstacles; it made me once restore a purse of gold that I found; it beggars any man that keeps it; it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man that means to live well endeavours to trust to himself and live without it.

First Murd. 'Zounds! it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke. 150

Second Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee but to make thee sigh.

First Murd. I am strong-framed; he cannot prevail with me.

Second Murd. Spoke like a tall fellow that respects his reputation. Come, shall we to this gear?

First Murd. Take him over the costard with the hilts of thy sword, and then throw him in the malmsey-butt in the next room. 161

Second Murd. O excellent device! and make a sop of him.

First Murd. Soft! he wakes.

Second Murd. Strike.

First Murd. No; we'll reason with him.

Clar. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of wine.

First Murd. You shall have wine enough, my lord, anon.

Clar. In God's name, what art thou?

First Murd. A man, as you are. 170

Clar. But not, as I am, royal.

First Murd. Nor you, as we are, loyal.
Clar. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are humble.
First Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks mine own.
Clar. How darkly and how deadly dost thou speak!
 Your eyes do menace me; why look you pale?
 Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?
Both Murd. To, to, to—
Clar. To murder me?
Both Murd. Ay, ay.
Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so, 180
 And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it.
 Wherein, my friends, have I offended you?
First Murd. Offended us you have not, but the king.
Clar. I shall be reconcil'd to him again.
Second Murd. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to die.
Clar. Are you call'd forth from out a world of men
 To slay the innocent? What is my offence?
 Where are the evidence that do accuse me?
 What lawful quest have given their verdict up 189
 Unto the frowning judge? or who pronounce'd
 The bitter sentence of poor Clarence' death?
 Before I be convict by course of law,
 To threaten me with death is most unlawful.
 I charge you, as you hope to have redemption
 By Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous sins,
 That you depart and lay no hands on me;
 The deed you undertake is damnable.
First Murd. What we will do, we do upon command.
Second Murd. And he that hath commanded is the king.
Clar. Erroneous vassals! the great king of kings 201
 Hath in the table of his law commanded
 That thou shall do no murder: will you then Spurn at his edict and fulfil a man's?
 Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
 To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
Second Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee,
 For false forswearing and for murder too!
 Thou didst receive the sacrament to fight
 In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.
First Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God, 210
 Didst break that vow, and with thy treacherous blade
 Unripp'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son.
Second Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.
First Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law to us,
 When thou hast broke it in such dear degree?

Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?
 For Edward, for my brother, for his sake:
 He sends you not to murder me for this;
 For in that sin he is as deep as I. 220
 If God will be avenged for that deed,
 O! know you yet, he doth it publicly:
 Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;
 He needs no indirect or lawless course
 To cut off those that have offended him.
First Murd. Who made thee then a bloody minister,
 When gallant-springing, brave Plantagenet,
 That princely novice, was struck dead by thee?
Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage.
First Murd. Thy brother's love, our duty, and thy fault,
 Provoke us hither now to slaughter thee. 230
Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;
 I am his brother, and I love him well.
 If you be hir'd for meed, go back again,
 And I will send you to my brother Gloucester.
 Who shall reward you better for my life
 Than Edward will for tidings of my death.
Second Murd. You are deceiv'd, your brother Gloucester hates you.
Clar. O, no! he loves me, and he holds me dear:
 Go you to him from me.
Both Murd. Ay so we will. 240
Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York
 Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm,
 And charg'd us from his soul to love each other,
 He little thought of this divided friendship;
 Bid Gloucester think on this, and he will weep.
First Murd. Ay, millstones; as he les-son'd us to weep.
Clar. O! do not slander him, for he is kind.
First Murd. Right,
 As snow in harvest. Thou deceiv'st thyself:
 'T is he that sends us to destroy you here. 250
Clar. It cannot be: for he bewept my fortune,
 And hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with sobs,
 That he would labour my delivery.
First Murd. Why, so he doth, now he delivers you
 From this earth's thralldom to the joys of heaven.
Second Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.
Clar. Have you that holy feeling in thy soul,
 To counsel me to make my peace with God,
 And art thou yet to thy own soul so blind,
 That thou wilt war with God by murdering me? 260
 O! sirs, consider, they that set you on
 To do this deed will hate you for the deed.
Second Murd. What shall we do?

Clar. Relent and save your souls.
First Murd. Relent! 't is cowardly and womanish.

Clar. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, devilish.

Which of you, if you were a prince's son,
 Being pent from liberty, as I am now,
 If two such murderers as yourselves came
 to you,

Would not entreat for life?

My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks; 270
 O! if thine eye be not a flatterer,

Come thou on my side, and entreat for me,
 As you would beg, were you in my distress:
 A begging prince what beggar pities not!

Second Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

First Murd. Take that, and that;

Stabs him.

If all this will not do,
 I'll drown you in the malmsey-butt within.

Exit, with the body.

Second Murd. A bloody deed, and desperately dispatch'd!

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands

Of this most grievous murder. 280

Re-enter First Murderer.

First Murd. How now! what means't thou, that thou help'st me not?

By heaven, the duke shall know how slack thou art.

Second Murd. I would he knew that I had sav'd his brother!

Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say;
 For I repent me that the duke is slain. Exit.

First Murd. So do not I: go, coward, as thou art.

Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole,
 Till that the duke give order for his burial:

And when I have my need, I will away;
 For this will out, and here I must not stay.

Exit.

ACT II

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King EDWARD, sick, Queen ELIZABETH, DORSET, RIVERS, HASTINGS, BUCKINGHAM, GREY, and Others.

K. Edw. Why so: now have I done a good day's work.

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy

From my Redeemer to redeem me hence;

And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,

Since I have set my friends at peace on earth.

Rivers and Hastings, take each other's hand;

Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my heart is purg'd from grudging hate;

And with my hand I seal my true heart's love. 10

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like!

K. Edw. Take heed you dally not before your king;

Lest he that is the supreme King of kings
 Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
 Either of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love!

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart!

K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt in this,

Nor you, son Dorset, Buckingham, nor you;
 You have been factious one against the other. 20

Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;

And what you do, do it unfeignedly.

Q. Eliz. Here, Hastings; I will never more remember

Our former hatred, so thrive I and mine!

K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him; Hastings, love lord marquess.

Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest,

Upon my part shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I, my lord. They embrace.

K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this league 29

With thy embracements to my wife's allies,
 And make me happy in your unity.

Buck. To the Queen. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate

Upon your grace, but with all dutious love
 Doth cherish you and yours, God punish me

With hate in those where I expect most love!
 When I have most need to employ a friend,

And most assured that he is a friend,
 Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,

Be he unto me! this do I beg of heaven,
 When I am cold in love to you or yours. 40

They embrace.
K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham,

Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart.

There wanteth now our brother Gloucester here

To make the perfect period of this peace.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble duke.

Enter GLOUCESTER.

Glou. Good morrow to my sovereign king and queen;

And, princely peers, a happy time of day!

K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day.

Gloucester, we have done deeds of charity;
 Made peace of emnity, fair love of hate, 50

Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.

Glou. A blessed labour, my most sovereign lord.

Among this princely heap, if any here,
 By false intelligence, or wrong surmise,

Hold me a foe;

If I unwittingly, or in my rage,
 Have aught committed that is hardly borne

By any in this presence, I desire
 To reconcile me to his friendly peace:

'Tis death to me to be at enmity;
I hate it, and desire all good men's love.
First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my duteous service;

Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham,
If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us;
Of you, Lord Rivers, and, Lord Grey, of you,
That all without desert have frown'd on me;
Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen; indeed, of all.

I do not know that Englishman alive
With whom my soul is any jot at odds. 70
More than the infant that is born to-night:
I thank my God for my humility.

Q. Eliz. A holy day shall this be kept hereafter:

I would to God all strifes were well compounded.

My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness

To take our brother Clarence to your grace.

Glou. Why, madam, have I offer'd love for this,

To be so flouted in this royal presence?
Who knows not that the gentle duke is dead?

They all start.
You do him injury to scorn his corse. 80

K. Edw. Who knows not he is dead! who knows he is?

Q. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this!

Buck. Look I so pale, Lord Dorset, as the rest?

Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no man in the presence

But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks.
K. Edw. Is Clarence dead? the order was revers'd.

Glou. But he, poor soul, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear;

Some tardy cripple bare the countermand,
That came too lag to see him buried. 90

God grant that some, less noble and less loyal,

Nearer in bloody thoughts, but not in blood,
Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,

And yet go current from suspicion.

Enter STANLEY

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!

K. Edw. I pray thee, peace: my soul is full of sorrow.

Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.

K. Edw. Then speak at once what is it thou demand'st.

Stan. The forfeit, sovereign, of my servant's life;

Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman 100
Lately attendant on the Duke of Norfolk.

K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,

And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave?
My brother kill'd no man, his fault was thought,

And yet his punishment was bitter death.
Who sued to me for him? who, in my wrath,
Kneel'd at my feet, and bade me be advis'd?
Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?

Who told me how the poor soul did forsake
The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me? 110

Who told me, in the field at Tewksbury,
When Oxford had me down, he rescu'd me
And said, 'Dear brother, live, and be a king'?
Who told me, when we both lay in the field
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me
Even in his garments; and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb cold night?
All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind. 120
But when your carters or your waiting-vassals
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon,
And I, unjustly too, must grant it you;
But for my brother not a man would speak,
Nor I, ungracious, speak unto myself
For him, poor soul. The proudest of you all
Have been beholding to him in his life,
Yet none of you would once beg for his life. 130
O God! I fear thy justice will take hold
On me and you and mine and yours for this.
Come, Hastings, help me to my closet. O!
poor Clarence.

Exeunt King EDWARD, Queen ELIZABETH,
HASTINGS, RIVERS, DORSET, and GREY.
Glou. This is the fruit of rashness.
Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale when they did hear of Clarence' death?
O! they did urge it still unto the king:
God will revenge it. Come, lords; will you go
To comfort Edward with our company?
Buck. We wait upon your grace. 140
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.
Enter the Duchess of YORK, with the two children of CLARENCE.
Boy. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?
Duch. No, boy.
Boy. Why do you wring your hands, and beat your breast?
And cry 'O Clarence, my unhappy son!'
Girl. Why do you look on us, and shake your head,
And call us orphans, wretches, castaways,
If that our noble father be alive?
Duch. My pretty cousins, you mistake me much;
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loath to lose him, not your father's death;
It were lost sorrow to wail one that's lost. 10

Boy. Then, grandam, you conclude that he is dead.

The king mine uncle is to blame for it: God will revenge it; whom I will importune

With earnest prayers all to that effect.

Girl. And so will I.

Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love you well;

Incapable and shallow innocents,

You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.

Boy. Grandam, we can; for my good uncle Gloucester

Told me, the king, provok'd to it by the queen,

Devis'd impeachments to imprison him:

And when my uncle told me so, he wept,

And pitied me, and kindly kiss'd my cheek;

Bade me rely on him as on my father,

And he would love me dearly as his child.

Duch. Ah! that deceit should steal such gentle shape,

And with a virtuous vizard hide deep vice. Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit.

Boy. Think you my uncle did dissemble, grandam?

Duch. Ay, boy.

Boy. I cannot think it. Hark! what noise is this?

Enter Queen ELIZABETH, distractedly; RIVERS and DORSET following her.

Q. Eliz. Oh! who shall hinder me to wail and weep,

To chide my fortune, and torment myself? I'll join with black despair against my soul,

And to myself become an enemy.

Duch. What means this scene of rude impatience?

Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence: Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead!

Boy. Why grow the branches now the root is wither'd?

Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?

If you will live, lament; if die, be brief, That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's;

Or, like obedient subjects, follow him To his new kingdom of perpetual rest.

Duch. Ah! so much interest have I in thy sorrow

As I had title in thy noble husband. I have bewept a worthy husband's death,

And liv'd with looking on his images; But now two mirrors of his princely semblance

Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death, And I for comfort have but one false glass,

That grieves me when I see my shame in him.

Thou art a widow; yet thou art a mother, And hast the comfort of thy children left thee:

But death hath snatch'd my husband from mine arms,

And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble limbs,

Clarence and Edward. O! what cause have I,

Thine being but a moiety of my grief, To overgo thy plaints and drown thy cries.

Boy. Good aunt, you wept not for our father's death;

How can we aid you with our kindred tears?

Girl. Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;

Your widow-dolour likewise be unwept.

Q. Eliz. Give me no help in lamentation; I am not barren to bring forth complaints:

All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes

That I, being govern'd by the watery moon, May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world!

Chil. Ah! for my husband, for my dear lord Edward.

Chil. Ah! for our father, for our dear lord Clarence.

Duch. Alas! for both, both mine, Edward and Clarence.

Q. Eliz. What stay had I but Edward? and he's gone.

Chil. What stay had we but Clarence? and he's gone.

Duch. What stays had I but they? and they are gone.

Q. Eliz. Was never widow had so dear a loss.

Chil. Were never orphans had so dear a loss.

Duch. Was never mother had so dear a loss.

Alas! I am the mother of these griefs: Their woes are parcell'd, mine are general.

She for an Edward weeps, and so do I; I for a Clarence weep, so doth not she:

These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I; I for an Edward weep, so do not they:

Alas! you three on me, threefold distress'd, Pour all your tears, I am your sorrow's nurse,

And I will pamper it with lamentation.

Dor. Comfort, dear mother: God is much displeas'd

That you take with unthankfulness His doing.

In common wordly things 't is call'd ungrateful

With dull unwillingness to repay a debt Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;

Much more to be thus opposite with heaven, For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

Riv. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother,

Of the young prince your son: send straight for him;

Let him be crown'd; in him your comfort lives.

Drown desperate sorrow in dead Edward's grave,

And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter GLOUCESTER, BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS, RATCLIFF, and Others.

Glou. Sister, have comfort: all of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining star;
But none can cure their harms by wailing them.

Madam, my mother, I do cry you mercy;
I did not see your grace: humbly on my knee
I crave your blessing.

Duch. God bless thee! and put meekness in thy mind.

Love, charity, obedience, and true duty.
Glou. Amen: Aside. and make me die a good old man!

That is the butt-end of a mother's blessing;
I marvel that her grace did leave it out.

Buck. You cloudy princes and heart-sorrowing peers,

That bear this mutual heavy load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other's love:
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,

We are to reap the harvest of his son.
The broken rancour of your high-swoln hearts,

But lately splinter'd, knit, and join'd together,

Must gently be preserv'd, cherish'd, and kept:

Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,

Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fetch'd

Hither to London, to be crown'd our king.

Riv. Why with some little train, my Lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,

The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out;

Which would be so much the more dangerous,

By how much the estate is green and yet ungovern'd;

Where every horse bears his commanding rein,

And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,

In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Glou. I hope the king made peace with all of us;

And the compact is firm and true in me.

Riv. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put

To no apparent likelihood of breach,
Which haply by much company might be urg'd:

Therefore I say with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Glou. Then be it so; and go we to determine

Who they shall be that straight shall post to Ludlow.

Madam, and you, my mother, will you go
To give your censures in this business?

Exeunt all but BUCKINGHAM and GLOUCESTER.

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,

For God's sake, let not us two stay at home:
For by the way I'll sort occasion,

As index to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the queen's proud kindred from the prince.

Glou. My other self, my counsel's consistory,

My oracle, my prophet! My dear cousin,
I, as a child, will go by thy direction.

Towards Ludlow then, for we'll not stay behind.

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Street.

Enter two Citizens, meeting.

First Cit. Good morrow, neighbour:
whither away so fast?

Second Cit. I promise you I scarcely know myself:

Hear you the news abroad?

First Cit. Ay, that the king is dead.

Second Cit. Ill news, by'r lady; seldom comes the better:

I fear, I fear 't will prove a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

Third Cit. Neighbours, God speed!

First Cit. Give you good morrow, sir.

Third Cit. Doth the news hold of good King Edward's death?

Second Cit. Ay, sir, it is too true; God help the while!

Third Cit. Then, masters, look to see a troublous world.

First Cit. No, no; by God's good grace his son shall reign.

Third Cit. Woe to that land that's govern'd by a child!

Second Cit. In him there is a hope of government,

That in his nonage council under him,
And in his full and ripen'd years himself,

No doubt, shall then and till then govern well.

First Cit. So stood the state when Henry the Sixth

Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old.

Third Cit. Stood the state so? no, no good friends, God wot;

For then this land was famously enrich'd
With politic grave counsel; then the king 20

Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

First Cit. Why, so hath this, both by his father and mother.

Third Cit. Better it were they all came by his father,

Or by his father there were none at all;
For emulation, who shall now be nearest,

Will touch us all too near, if God prevent not.

O! full of danger is the Duke of Gloucester;

And the queen's sons and brothers haught
and proud:

And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace as before. 30
First Cit. Come, come, we fear the worst;
all will be well.

Third Cit. When clouds are seen, wise men put on their cloaks;

When great leaves fall, then winter is at
hand;

When the sun sets, who doth not look for
night?

Untimely storms make men expect a dearth.
All may be well; but, if God sort it so,
'T is more than we deserve, or I expect.

Second Cit. Truly, the hearts of men are full of fear:

Ye cannot reason almost with a man
That looks not heavily and full of dread. 40

Third Cit. Before the days of change, still is it so.

By a divine instinct men's minds mistrust
Ensuing danger; as by proof we see
The water swell before a boisterous storm.
But leave it all to God. Whither away?

Second Cit. Marry, we were sent for to the justices.

Third Cit. And so was I: I'll bear you company. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of YORK, the young Duke of YORK, Queen ELIZABETH, and the Duchess of YORK.

Arch. Last night, I hear, they lay at Northampton.

At Stony-Stratford they do rest to-night:
To-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Duch. I long with all my heart to see the
prince.

I hope he is much grown since last I saw
him.

Q. Eliz. But I hear, no; they say my son
of York

Hath almost overta'en him in his growth.

York. Ay, mother, but I would not have
it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin, it is good to grow.

York. Grandam, one night, as we did sit at supper, 10

My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow
More than my brother: 'Ay,' quoth my uncle Gloucester,

'Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace':

And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet flowers are slow and weeds make haste.

Duch. Good faith, good faith, the saying did not hold

In him that did object the same to thee:
He was the wretched'st thing when he was

young,
So long a-growing and so leisurely.
That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious, 20

Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious
madam.

Duch. I hope he is; but yet let mothers
doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been re-member'd,

I could have given my uncle's grace a flout,
To touch his growth nearer than he touch'd
mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I pray thee,
let me hear it.

York. Marry, they say my uncle grew so fast

That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old:
'T was full two years ere I could get a tooth.

Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.

Duch. I pray thee, pretty York, who told thee this? 31

York. Grandam, his nurse.

Duch. His nurse! why, she was dead ere thou wast born.

York. If 't were not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Q. Eliz. A parlous boy: go to, you are too shrewd.

Arch. Good madam, be not angry with
the child.

Q. Eliz. Pitchers have ears.
Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger. What
news?

Mess. Such news, my lord, as grieves me to unfold.

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news then? 41

Mess. Lord Rivers and Lord Grey are sent to Pomfret.

With them Sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them?

Mess. The mighty dukes, Gloucester and Buckingham.

Q. Eliz. For what offence?

Mess. The sum of all I can, I have dis-clos'd:

Why or for what these nobles were committed

Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ay me! I see the ruin of my house.

The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind; so
Insulting tyranny begins to jet

Upon the innocent and aweless throne:
Welcome, destruction, death, and massaacre!

I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling
days,

How many of you have mine eyes beheld!
My husband lost his life to get the crown,

And often up and down my sons were toss'd,
For me to joy and weep their gain and
loss:

And being seated, and domestic broils 61
Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors,
Make war upon themselves: brother to
brother,

Blood to blood, self against self: O! preposterous

And frantic outrage, end thy damned spleen;
Or let me die, to look on death no more.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy; we will to sanctuary.

Madam, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.
Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go;
And thither bear your treasure and your goods.

For my part, I'll resign unto your grace 70
The seal I keep; and so betide to me
As well I tender you and all of yours!
Come; I'll conduct you to the sanctuary.

Exeunt.

ACT III

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

The Trumpets sound. Enter the Prince of WALES, GLOUCESTER, BUCKINGHAM, Cardinal BOURCHIER, CATESBY, and Others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

Glou. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sovereign:

The weary way hath made you melancholy.
Prince. No, uncle; but our crosses on the way

Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy:

I want more uncles here to welcome me.
Glou. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years

Hath not yet divid'd into the world's deceit:
Nor more can you distinguish of a man
Than of his outward show; which, God he knows, 10

Seldom or never jumpeth with the heart.
Those uncles which you want were dangerous;

Your grace attended to their sugar'd words,
But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:
God keep you from them, and from such false friends!

Prince. God keep me from false friends!
but they were none.

Glou. My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.

Enter the Lord Mayor and his Train.

May. God bless your grace with health and happy days!

Prince. I thank you, good my lord; and thank you all.

I thought my mother and my brother York 20
Would long ere this have met us on the way:
Fie! what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not

To tell us whether they will come or no.

Enter HASTINGS.

Buck. And in good time here comes the sweating lord.

Prince. Welcome, my lord. What, will our mother come?

Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not I,

The queen your mother, and your brother York,

Have taken sanctuary: the tender prince
Would fain have come with me to meet your grace,

But by his mother was perforce withheld, 30
Buck. Fie! what an indirect and peevish course

Is this of hers. Lord cardinal, will your grace

Persuade the queen to send the Duke of York

Unto his princely brother presently?
If she deny, Lord Hastings, go with him,

And from her jealous arms pluck him perforce.

Card. My Lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory

Can from his mother win the Duke of York,
Anon expect him here; but if she be obdurate

To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid 40
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of blessed sanctuary! not for all this land
Would I be guilty of so great a sin.

Buck. You are too senseless-obstinate,
my lord,

Too ceremonious and traditional:
Weigh it but with the grossness of this age,

You break not sanctuary in seizing him.
The benefit thereof is always granted

To those whose dealings have deserv'd the place, 50
And those who have the wit to claim the place:

This prince hath neither claim'd it nor deserv'd it;

And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it:

Then taking him from thence that is not there,

You break no privilege nor charter there.
Oft have I heard of sanctuary men,

But sanctuary children ne'er till now.

Card. My lord, you shall o'er-rule my mind for once.

Come on, Lord Hastings, will you go with me?

Hast. I go, my lord.
Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may.

Exeunt Cardinal BOURCHIER, and HASTINGS.

Say, uncle Gloucester, if our brother come,
Where shall we sojourn till our coronation?

Glou. Where it seems best unto your royal self.

If I may counsel you, some day or two
Your highness shall repose you at the Tower:

Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit

For your best health and recreation.
Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any place.

Did Julius Cæsar build that place, my lord?

Buck. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place, 70

Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified.

Prince. Is it upon record, or else reported Successfully from age to age, he built it?

Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.

Prince. But say, my lord, it were not registered,

Methinks the truth should live from age to age,

As 't were retail'd to all posterity,

Even to the general all-ending day.

Glou. Aside. So wise so young, they say,
do never live long.

Prince. What say you uncle? 80

Glou. I say, without characters, fame lives long.

Aside. Thus, like the formal Vice, Iniquity,
I moralize two meanings in one word.

Prince. That Julius Cæsar was a famous man;

With what his valour did enrich his wit,
His wit set down to make his valour live:

Death makes no conquest of this conqueror,
For now he lives in fame, though not in life.

I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham,—

Buck. What, my gracious lord? 90

Prince. An if I live until I be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again,

Or die a soldier, as I liv'd a king.

Glou. Aside. Short summers lightly have a forward spring.

Enter YORK, HASTINGS, and Cardinal BOURCHIER.

Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the Duke of York,

Prince. Richard of York! how fares our noble brother?

York. Well, my dread-lord; so must I call
you now.

Prince. Ay, brother, to our grief, as it is
yours:

Too late he died that might have kept that
title,

Which by his death hath lost much maj-
esty. 100

Glou. How fares our cousin, noble Lord
of York?

York. I thank you, gentle uncle. O! my
lord,

You said that idle weeds are fast in growth:
The prince my brother hath outgrown me
far.

Glou. He hath, my lord.

York. And therefore is he idle?

Glou. O! my fair cousin, I must not say so.

York. Then he is more beholding to you
than I.

Glou. He may command me as my sovereign;

But you have power in me as a kinsman.

York. I pray you, uncle, give me this dag-
ger. 110

Glou. My dagger, little cousin? with all
my heart!

Prince. A beggar, brother?

York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will
give;

And being but a toy, which is no grief to give.

Glou. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.

York. A greater gift! O! that's the sword to it.

Glou. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light
enough.

York. O! then, I see, you'll part but with light gifts;

In weightier things you'll say a beggar nay.

Glou. It is too weighty for your grace to wear. 120

York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.

Glou. What! would you have my weapon, little lord?

York. I would, that I might thank you as you call me.

Glou. How?

York. Little.

Prince. My Lord of York will still be cross in talk.

Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with
him.

York. You mean, to bear me, not to bear
with me.

Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me.
Because that I am little, like an ape, 130

He thinks that you should bear me on your
shoulders,

Buck. With what a sharp-provided wit he reasons!

To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himself:

So cunning and so young is wonderful.

Glou. My lord, will't please you pass along?

Myself and my good cousin Buckingham
Will to your mother, to entreat of her

To meet you at the Tower and welcome
you.

York. What! will you go unto the Tower,
my lord? 140

Prince. My lord protector needs will have
it so.

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glou. Why, what should you fear?

York. Marry, my uncle Clarence' angry
ghost:

My grandam told me he was murder'd there.

Prince. I fear no uncles dead.

Glou. Nor none that live, I hope.

Prince. An if they live, I hope I need not fear.

But come, my lord; and with a heavy heart,
Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower. 150

A Sennet. Exeunt all but GLOUCES-TER, BUCKINGHAM, and CATESBY.

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating York

Was not incensed by his subtle mother
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously?

Glou. No doubt, no doubt. O! 't is a parlous boy;

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable:
He's all the mother's, from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest. Come hither, Catesby; thou art sworn
As deeply to effect what we intend
As closely to conceal what we impart. 159

Thou know'st our reasons urg'd upon the way:

What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter To make William Lord Hastings of our mind, For the instalment of this noble duke In the seat royal of this famous isle?

Cates. He for his father's sake so loves the prince,

That he will not be won to aught against him.

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? what will he?

Cates. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.

Buck. Well then, no more but this: go, gentle Catesby,

And, as it were far off, sound thou Lord Hastings, 170

How he doth stand affected to our purpose;

And summon him to-morrow to the Tower, To sit about the coronation.

If thou dost find him tractable to us, Encourage him, and show him all our reasons:

If he be leaden, icy-cold, unwilling, Be thou so too, and so break off your talk,

And give us notice of his inclination; For we to-morrow hold divided councils,

Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd. 180

Glou. Commend me to Lord William: tell him, Catesby,

His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret-castle;

And bid my lord, for joy of this good news, Give Mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, go, effect this business soundly.

Cates. My good lords both, with all the heed I can.

Glou. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we sleep?

Cates. You shall my lord,

Glou. At Crosby-place, there shall you find us both. Exit Catesby. 190

Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do if we perceive

Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?

Glou. Chop off his head; something we will determine:

And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me The earldom of Hereford, and the moveables

Whereof the king my brother stood possess'd.

Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand.

Glou. And look to have it yielded with all kindness.

Come, let us sup betimes, that afterwards We may digest our complots in some form. 200

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Before Lord HASTINGS' House.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord? Knocking.

Hast. Within. Who knocks?

Mess. One from the Lord Stanley.

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. What is 't o'clock?

Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Hast. Cannot thy master sleep these tedious nights?

Mess. So it should seem by that I have to say.

First, he commends him to your noble self.

Hast. And then?

Mess. Then certifies your lordship, that this night 10

He dreamt the boar had razed off his helm; Besides, he says there are two councils held;

And that may be determin'd at the one Which may make you and him to rue at the other.

Therefore he sends to know your lordship's pleasure,

If you will presently take horse with him, And with all speed post with him toward the north,

To shun the danger that his soul divines.

Hast. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord; Bid him not fear the separated councils: 20

His honour and myself are at the one, And at the other is my good friend Catesby;

Where nothing can proceed that toucheth us Whereof I shall not have intelligence.

Tell him his fears are shallow, wanting instance:

And for his dreams, I wonder he's so simple To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers.

To fly the boar before the boar pursues, Were to incense the boar to follow us

And make pursuit where he did mean no chase. 30

Go, bid thy master rise and come to me; And we will both together to the Tower,

Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say. Exit.

Enter CATESBY.

Cates. Many good morrows to my noble lord!

Hast. Good morrow, Catesby; you are early stirring.

What news, what news, in this our tottering state?

Cates. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord;

And I believe will never stand upright Till Richard wear the garland of the realm. 40

Hast. How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?

Cates. Ay, my good lord.

Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders

Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd. But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it?

Cates. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you forward

Upon his party, for the gain thereof; And thereupon he sends you this good news,

That this same very day your enemies, The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret. 50

Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news,
Because they have been still my adversaries;
But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side,

To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows I will not do it, to the death.

Cates. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind!

Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelve-month hence,
That they which brought me in my master's hate,

I live to look upon their tragedy.

Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,

I'll send some packing that yet think not on't.

Cates. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,

When men are unprepar'd and look not for it.

Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out

With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey; and so 't will do

With some men else, who think themselves as safe

As thou and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear

To princely Richard and to Buckingham.

Cates. The princes both make high account of you;

Aside. For they account his head upon the bridge.

Hast. I know they do, and I have well deserved it.

Enter STANLEY.

Come on, come on; where is your boarspear, man?

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?

Stan. My lord, good morrow; good morrow, Catesby:

You may jest on, but, by the holy rood,
I do not like these several councils, I.

Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as yours;

And never in my days, I do protest,
Was it so precious to me as 'tis now.

Think you but that I know our state secure
I would be so triumphant as I am?

Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from London,

Were jocund and suppos'd their state was sure,

And they indeed had no cause to mistrust;
But yet you see how soon the day o'er-cast.

This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!

What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, have with you. Wot you what, my lord?

To-day the lords you talk of are beheaded.

Stan. They, for their truth, might better wear their heads

Than some that have accus'd them wear their hats.

But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before; I'll talk with this good fellow.

Exeunt STANLEY and CATESBY.

How now, sirrah! how goes the world with thee?

Purs. The better that your lordship please to ask.

Hast. I tell thee, man, 't is better with me now

Than when I met thee last where now we meet:

Then was I going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;

But now, I tell thee, keep it to thyself,
This day those enemies are put to death,

And I in better state than e'er I was.

Purs. God hold it to your honour's good content!

Hast. Gramercy, fellow: there, drink that for me.

Purs. God save your lordship! Exit.

Enter a Priest.

Priest. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour.

Hast. I thank thee, good Sir John, with all my heart.

I am in your debt for your last exercise;
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. What! talking with a priest, lord chamberlain;

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest:

Your honour hath no shriving work in hand.

Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,

Those men you talk of came into my mind.
What! go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I shall not stay:

I shall return before your lordship thence.

Hast. 'T is like enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. Aside. And supper too, although thou know'st it not.

Come, will you go?

Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Pomfret. Before the Castle.

Enter RATCLIFF, with halberds, carrying RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN to death.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this:

To-day shalt thou behold a subject die
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.

Grey. God keep the prince from all the pack of you!

A knot you are of damned blood-suckers.

Vaugh. You live that shall cry woe for this hereafter.
Rat. Dispatch; the limit of your lives is out.
Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison!
 Fatal and ominous to noble peers, 10
 Within the guilty closure of thy walls
 Richard the Second here was hack'd to death;
 And, for more slander to thy dismal seat,
 We give to thee our guiltless blood to drink.
Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fall'n upon our heads,
 When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I,
 For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.
Riv. Then curs'd she Richard, then curs'd she Buckingham,
 Then curs'd she Hastings: O! remember, God,
 To hear her prayer for them, as now for us;
 And for my sister and her princely sons, 20
 Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
 Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.
Rat. Make haste: the hour of death is expiate.
Riv. Come, Grey, come, Vaughan; let us here embrace:
 And take our leave, until we meet in heaven.
Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. The Tower.

BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS, the Bishop of ELY, RATCLIFF, LOVEL, and Others, sitting at a table. Officers of the Council attending.

Hast. My lords, at once: the cause why we are met
 Is, to determine of the coronation:
 In God's name, speak, when is the royal day?
Buck. Is all things ready for the royal time?
Stan. It is; and wants but nomination.
Ely. To-morrow then I judge a happy day.
Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?
 Who is most inward with the noble duke?
Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind. 9
Buck. We know each other's faces; for our hearts,
 He knows no more of mine than I of yours;
 Nor I of his, my lord, than you of mine.
 Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.
Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well:
 But, for his purpose in the coronation,
 I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd
 His gracious pleasure any way therein:
 But you, my noble lords, may name the time;
 And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice, 20
 Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.
Enter GLOUCESTER.
Ely. In happy time, here comes the duke himself.

Glou. My noble lords and cousins all, good morrow.
 I have been long a sleeper; but, I trust,
 My absence doth neglect no great design,
 Which by my presence might have been concluded.
Buck. Had you not come upon your cue, my lord,
 William Lord Hastings had pronounc'd your part,
 I mean, your voice, for crowning of the king.
Glou. Than my Lord Hastings no man might be bolder: 30
 His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.
 My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,
 I saw good strawberries in your garden there;
 I do beseech you send for some of them.
Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.
Glou. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you. Takes him aside.
 Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business,
 And finds the testy gentleman so hot,
 As he will lose his head ere give consent 40
 His master's child, as worshipful he terms it,
 Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.
Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile; I'll go with you. Exeunt GLOUCESTER and BUCKINGHAM.
Stan. We have not yet set down this day of triumph.
 To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden;
 For I myself am not so well provided
 As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Re-enter Bishop of ELY.
Ely. Where is my lord, the Duke of Gloucester?
 I have sent for these strawberries.
Hast. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning: 50
 There's some conceit or other likes him well,
 When that he bids good morrow with such spirit.
 I think there's never a man in Christendom
 Can lesser hide his love or hate than he;
 For by his face straight shall you know his heart.
Stan. What of his heart perceive you in his face
 By any livelihood he show'd to-day?
Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offended;
 For, were he, he had shown it in his looks. 59

Re-enter GLOUCESTER and BUCKINGHAM.
Glou. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve
 That do conspire my death with devilish plots
 Of damned witchcraft, and that have prevail'd
 Upon my body with their hellish charms?
Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord,

Makes me most forward in this princely presence

To doom the offenders, whosoe'er they be: I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glou. Then be your eyes the witness of their evil.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold mine arm Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up: 71 And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch, Consorted with that harlot strumpet Shore, That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this thing, my gracious lord,—

Glou. If! thou protector of this damned strumpet,

Talk'st thou to me of 'ifs'? Thou art a traitor:

Off with his head! now, by Saint Paul I swear,

I will not dine until I see the same, Lovel and Ratcliff, look that it be done: 80 The rest, that love me, rise and follow me.

Exeunt all but HASTINGS, RATCLIFF and LOVEL.

Hast. Woe, woe, for England! not a whit for me;

For I, too fond, might have prevented this. Stanley did dream the boar did raze his helm;

And I did scorn it, and disdain'd to fly. Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble,

And started when he look'd upon the Tower, As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house. O! now I need the priest that spake to me:

I now repent I told the pursuivant, 90 As too triumphing, how mine enemies

To-day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd, And I myself secure in grace and favour. O Margaret, Margaret! now thy heavy curse

Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Rat. Come, come, dispatch; the duke would be at dinner:

Make a short shrift, he longs to see your head.

Hast. O! momentary grace of mortal men,

Which we more hunt for than the grace of God.

Who builds his hope in air of your good looks, 103

Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast; Ready with every nod to tumble down Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, dispatch; 't is bootless to exclaim.

Hast. O bloody Richard! miserable England!

I prophesy the fearfull'st time to thee That ever wretched age hath look'd upon. Come, lead me to the block; bear him my head:

They smile at me who shortly shall be dead.

Exeunt.

SCENE. V.—The Same. The Tower Walls.

Enter GLOUCESTER and BUCKINGHAM, in rotten armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Glou. Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy colour,

Murder thy breath in middle of a word, And then again begin, and stop again, As if thou wert distraught and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut! I can counterfeit the deep tragedian, Speak, and look back, and pry on every side,

Tremble and start at wagging of a straw, Intending deep suspicion: ghastly looks Are at my service, like enforced smiles;

And both are ready in their offices. 10 At any time to grace my stratagems.

But what! is Catesby gone?

Glou. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor and CATESBY.

Buck. Lord mayor,—

Glou. Look to the drawbridge there!

Buck. Hark! a drum.

Glou. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent,—

Glou. Look back, defend thee; here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocency defend and guard us! 20

Glou. Be patient, they are friends; Ratcliff and Lovel.

Enter LOVEL and RATCLIFF, with HASTINGS' head.

Lov. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,

The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glou. So dear I lov'd the man, that I must weep.

I took him for the plainest harmless creature That breath'd upon the earth a Christian;

Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded

The history of all her secret thoughts: So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue,

That, his apparent open guilt omitted, 30 I mean his conversation with Shore's wife,

He liv'd from all attainder of suspect.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert'st shelter'd traitor

That ever liv'd.

Would you imagine, or almost believe, Were 't not that by great preservation

We live to tell it, that the subtle traitor This day had plotted, in the council-house

To murder me and my good Lord of Gloucester?

May. Had he done so? 40

Glou. What! think you we are Turks or infidels?

Or that we would, against the form of law, Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death,

But that the extreme peril of the case,

The peace of England, and our person's safety,

Enforc'd us to this execution?

May. Now, fair befall you! he deserv'd his death;

And your good graces both have well proceeded,

To warn false traitors from the like attempts. I never look'd for better at his hands, 50

After he once fell in with Mistress Shore.

Glou. Yet had we not determin'd he should die,

Until your lordship came to see his end;

Which now the loving haste of these our friends,

Something against our meaning, have prevented:

Because, my lord, I would have had you heard

The traitor speak, and timorously confess

The manner and the purpose of his treason; That you might well have signified the same

Unto the citizens, who haply may 60

Misconstrue us in him, and wail his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall serve,

As well as I had seen and heard him speak;

And do not doubt, right noble princes both, But I'll acquaint our duteous citizens

With all your just proceedings in this cause.

Glou. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here,

To avoid the censures of the carping world.

Buck. But since you come too late of our intent,

Yet witness what you hear we did intend: 70

And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

Exit Lord Mayor.

Glou. Go after, after, cousin Buckingham. The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post:

There, at your meetest vantage of the time, Infer the bastardy of Edward's children:

Tell them how Edward put to death a citizen,

Only for saying he would make his son

Heir to the crown; meaning indeed his house,

Which by the sign thereof was termed so.

Moreover, urge his hateful luxury 80

And bestial appetite in change of lust:

Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters, wives,

Even where his raging eye or savage heart

Without control lusted to make a prey.

Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person:

Tell them, when that my mother went with child

Of that insatiate Edward, noble York.

My princely father then had wars in France;

And by just computation of the time,

Found that the issue was not his begot; 90

Which well appeared in his lineaments,

Being nothing like the noble duke my father.

Yet touch this sparingly, as 't were far off;

Because you know, my lord, my mother lives,

Buck. Doubt not, my lord, I'll play the orator

As if the golden fee for which I plead

Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu.

Glou. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's castle,

Where you shall find me well accompanied

With reverend fathers and well-learned bishops. 100

Buck. I go; and towards three or four o'clock

Look for the news that the Guildhall affords. Exit.

Glou. Go, Lovel, with all speed to Doctor Shaw;

To CATESBY. Go thou to Friar Penker; bid them both

Meet me within this hour at Baynard's castle. Exeunt LOVEL and CATESBY.

Now will I in, to take some privy order,

To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight;

And to give notice that no manner person Have any time recourse unto the princes. Exit.

SCENE VI.—The Same. A Street.

Enter a Scrivener.

Scriv. Here is the indictment of the good Lord Hastings;

Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd, That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's:

And mark how well the sequel hangs together.

Eleven hours I have spent to write it over,

For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me. The precedent was full as long a-doing;

And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd,

Untainted, unexamin'd, free, at liberty. Here's a good world the while! Who is so

gross 10

That cannot see this palpable device?

Yet who so bold but says he sees it not? Bad is the world; and all will come to naught, When such ill dealing must be seen in thought. Exit.

SCENE VII.—The Same. The Court of Baynard's Castle.

Enter GLOUCESTER and BUCKINGHAM at several doors.

Glou. How now! my lord, what say the citizens?

Buck. Now by the holy mother of our Lord,

The citizens are mum, say not a word.

Glou. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children?

Buck. I did; with his contract with Lady Lucy,

And his contract by deputy in France;

The insatiate greediness of his desires,

And his enforcement of the city wives;

His tyranny for trifles; his own bastardy,

As being got, your father then in France; 10

And his resemblance, being not like the duke,

Withal I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind;
Laid open all your victories in Scotland,
Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace,
Your bounty, virtue, fair humility;
Indeed, left nothing fitting for your purpose
Untouch'd or slightly handled in discourse;
And when mine oratory drew toward end, 20
I bade them that did love their country's
good

Cry 'God save Richard, England's royal
king!'

Glou. And did they so?

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake
not a word;

But, like dumb statues or breathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale.

Which when I saw, I reprehended them,
And ask'd the mayor what meant this wilful silence;

His answer was, the people were not wont
To be spoke to but by the recorder. 30

Then he was urg'd to tell my tale again:
'Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke
infern'd';

But nothing spake in warrant from himself.

When he had done, some followers of mine
own,

At lower end of the hall, hurl'd up their caps,

And some ten voices cried, 'God save King
Richard!'

And thus I took the vantage of those few,
'Thanks, gentle citizens and friends,'
quoth I;

'This general applause and cheerful shout Argues your wisdom and your love to
Richard.' 40

And even here brake off, and came away.

Glou. What tongueless blocks were they! would they not speak?

Will not the mayor then and his brethren
come?

Buck. The mayor is here at hand. Intend some fear;

Be not you spoke with but by mighty suit:
And look you get a prayer-book in your
hand,

And stand between two churchmen, good
my lord:

For on that ground I'll make a holy descent:
And be not easily won to our requests; 50 Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.

Glou. I go; and if you plead as well for
them

As I can say nay to thee for myself,
No doubt we bring it to a happy issue.

Buck. Go, go, up to the leads! the lord mayor knocks. Exit GLOUCESTER.

Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord: I dance attendance
here;

I think the duke will not be spoke withal.

Enter from the Castle, CATESBY.

Now, Catesby! what says your lord to my request?

Cates. He doth entreat your grace, my
noble lord,

To visit him to-morrow or next day. 60

He is within, with two right reverend
fathers,

Divinely bent to meditation;

And in no worldly suits would he be mov'd,
To draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke:

Tell him, myself, the mayor and aldermen,
In deep designs and matter of great moment,

No less importing than our general good,
Are come to have some conference with his
grace.

Cates. I'll signify so much unto him straight. Exit.

Buck. Ah, ah! my lord, this prince is not an Edward, 71

He is not lolling on a lewd day-bed,
But on his knees at meditation;

Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines;

Not sleeping, to engross his idle body,
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul.

Happy were England, would this virtuous
prince

Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof:
But, sure, I fear, we shall not win him to it.

May. Marry, God defend his grace should say us nay! 81

Buck. I fear he will. Here Catesby comes again.

Re-enter CATESBY.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?

Cates. He wonders to what end you have assembled

Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before:

My lord, he fears you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am my noble cousin should suspect me that I mean no good to him;

By heaven, we come to him in perfect
love; 90

And so once more return, and tell his grace.
Exit CATESBY.

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 't is much to draw them thence;

So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOUCESTER in a gallery above, between two Bishops. CATESBY returns.

May. See! where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen.

Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian
prince,

To stay him from the fall of vanity;
And, see, a book of prayer in his hand,

True ornament to know a holy man.
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince,

Lend favourable ear to our requests, 101
And pardon us the interruption

Of thy devotion and right Christian zeal.

Glou. My lord, there needs no such apology;

I do beseech your grace to pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Deferr'd the visitation of my friends.
But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure?

Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,

And all good men of this ungovern'd isle. 110

Glou. I do suspect I have done some offence

That seems disgracious in the city's eye;
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord: would it might please your grace

On our entreaties to amend your fault.

Glou. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian land?

Buck. Know then, it is your fault that you resign

The supreme seat, the throne majestical,
The sceptred office of your ancestors,
Your state of fortune and your due of birth,
The lineal glory of your royal house, 121
To the corruption of a blemish'd stock;
Whiles, in the mildness of your sleepy thoughts,

Where here we waken to our country's good,
This noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her face defac'd with scars of infamy,
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants,
And almost shoulder'd in the swallowing gulf

Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion.
Which to recure we heartily solicit 130
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain;
But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
For this, consorted with the citizens,
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just cause come I to move your grace. 143

Glou. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speak in your reproof,
Best fitteth my degree or your condition:
If not to answer, you might haply think
Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded
To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me;

If to reprove you for this suit of yours,
So season'd with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends. 153

Therefore, to speak, and to avoid the first,
And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,
Definitively thus I answer you.

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert

Unmeritable shuns your high request.
First, if all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe revenue and due of birth,

Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty and so many my defects, 160
That I would rather hide me from my greatness,

Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,
Than in my greatness covet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my glory smother'd.
But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me;

And much I need to help you, were there need;

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,

Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay that you would lay on me, 171
The right and fortune of his happy stars;
Which God defend that I should wring from him!

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace;

But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,

All circumstances well considered.

You say that Edward is your brother's son:
So say we too, but not by Edward's wife;

For first was he contract to Lady Lucy,
Your mother lives a witness to his vow, 180

And afterward by substitute betroth'd
To Bona, sister to the King of France.

These both put off, a poor petitioner,
A care-craz'd mother to a many sons,

A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,

Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye,
Seduc'd the pitch and height of his degree

To base declension and loath'd bigamy.
By her, in his unlawful bed, he got 190

This Edward, whom our manners call the prince.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,

I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self

This proffer'd benefit of dignity;
If not to bless us and the land withal,

Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing times,

Unto a lineal true-derived course. 200

May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat you.

Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love.

Cates. O! make them joyful: grant their lawful suit.

Glou. Alas! why would you heap this care on me?

I am unfit for state and majesty;
I do beseech you, take it not amiss;

I cannot nor I will not yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it, as in love and zeal,
Loath to depose the child, your brother's son;

As well we know your tenderness of heart 210
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse,

Which we have noted in you to your kindred,
And equally indeed to all estates;

Yet whether you accept our suit or no,

Your brother's son shall never reign our king;

But we will plant some other in the throne,
To the disgrace and downfall of your house;
And in this resolution here we leave you.
Come, citizens, we will entreat no more.

Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and Citizens.

Cates. Call them again, sweet prince; accept their suit: 221

If you deny them, all the land will rue it.

Glou. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?

Call them again: I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties,

Exit CATESBY.

Albeit against my conscience and my soul.

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM and the rest.

Cousin of Buckingham, and sage, grave men,

Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, whether I will or no,
I must have patience to endure the load: 230
But if black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,

Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof;
For God doth know, and you may partly see,
How far I am from the desire of this.

May. God bless your grace! we see it,
and will say it.

Glou. In saying so you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title:

Long live King Richard, England's worthy king! 240

All. Amen.

Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be crown'd?

Glou. Even when you please, for you will have it so.

Buck. To-morrow then we will attend your grace:

And so most joyfully we take our leave.

Glou. To the Bishops. Come, let us to our holy work again.

Farewell, my cousin; farewell, gentle friends. Exeunt.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—London. Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, Queen ELIZABETH, Duchess of YORK, and Marquess of DORSET; on the other, ANNE, Duchess of GLOUCESTER, leading Lady MARGARET PLANTAGENET, CLARENCE'S young daughter.

Duch. Who meets us here? my niece Plantagenet,

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloucester!

Now, for my life, she's wand'ring to the Tower,

On pure heart's love to greet the tender princes.

Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your graces both A happy and a joyful time of day!

Q. Eliz. As much to you, good sister! whither away?

Anne. No further than the Tower; and, as I guess,

Upon the like devotion as yourselves, To gratulate the gentle princes there. 10

Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks: we'll enter all together.

Enter BRAKENBURY.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes. Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave, How doth the prince, and my young son of York?

Brak. Right well, dear madam. By your patience,

I may not suffer you to visit them:

The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary.

Q. Eliz. The king! who's that?

Brak. I mean the lord protector.

Q. Eliz. The Lord protect him from that kingly title! 20

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?

I am their mother; who shall bar me from them?

Duch. I am their father's mother; I will see them.

Anne. Their aunt I am in law, in love their mother:

Then bring me to their sights; I'll bear thy blame

And take thy office from thee, on my peril.

Brak. No, madam, no; I may not leave it so:

I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me. Exit.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence, 29

And I'll salute your grace of York as mother, And reverend looker-on, of two fair queens.

To ANNE. Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster.

There to be crowned Richard's royal queen.

Q. Eliz. Ah! cut my lace asunder, That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,

Or else I swoon with this dead-killing news.

Anne. Despiteful tidings! O! unpleasing news.

Dor. Be of good cheer: mother, how fares your grace?

Q. Eliz. O Dorset! speak not to me, get thee gone;

Death and destruction dog thee at thy heels: Thy mother's name is ominous to children. 41

If thou wilt outstrip death, go cross the seas,

And live with Richmond, from the reach of hell:

Go, hie thee, hie thee, from this slaughter-house,

Lest thou increase the number of the dead, And make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse,

Nor mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.

Stan. Full of wise care is this your counsel, madam.

Take all the swift advantage of the hours;
You shall have letters from me to my son 50
In your behalf, to meet you on the way:

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. O ill-dispersing wind of misery!
O! my accursed womb, the bed of death,
A cockatrice hast thou hatch'd to the world,
Whose unavoided eye is murderous.

Stan. Come, madam, come; I in all haste was sent.

Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.

O! would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal that must round my brow 60
Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain.
Anointed let me be with deadly venom;
And die, ere men can say, God save the queen!

Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;

To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm.
Anne. No! why? When he that is my husband now

Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corse,
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his hands,

Which issu'd from my other angel husband,
And that dear saint which then I weeping follow'd; 70

O! when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish: 'Be thou,' quoth I, 'accurs'd,

For making me so young, so old a widow!
And, when thou wedd'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;

And be thy wife, if any be so mad,
More miserable by the life of thee
Than thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!

Lo! ere I can repeat this curse again,
Within so small a time, my woman's heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words, 80
And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse:

Which hitherto hath held mine eyes from rest;

For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.

Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick,

And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu! I pity thy complaining.

Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours.

Dor. Farewell! thou woeful welcomer of glory. 90

Anne. Adieu! poor soul, that tak'st thy leave of it.

Duch. To Dorset. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee!

To Anne. Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!

To Queen Elizabeth. Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee!

I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Q. Eliz. Stay yet; look back with me unto the Tower.

Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babes
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls,

Rough cradle for such little pretty ones! 101
Rude ragged nurse, old sullen playfellow

For tender princes, use my babies well.
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State.

Flourish of trumpets. RICHARD, in pomp, crowned; BUCKINGHAM, CATESBY, a Page, and Others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart. Cousin of Buckingham!

Buck. My gracious sovereign!

K. Rich. Give me thy hand.

He ascends the throne.

Thus high, by thy advice

And thy assistance, is King Richard seated!
But shall we wear these glories for a day,
Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?

Buck. Still live they, and for ever let them last!

K. Rich. Ah! Buckingham, now do I play the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed:

Young Edward lives: think now what I would speak. 10

Buck. Say on, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say I would be king.

Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned lord.

K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'T is so; but Edward lives.

Buck. True, noble prince.

K. Rich. O bitter consequence,
That Edward still should live! 'True, noble prince.'

Cousin, thou wert not wont to be so dull:
Shall I be plain? I wish the bastards dead;
And I would have it suddenly perform'd,
What say'st thou now? speak suddenly, be brief. 20

Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure.

K. Rich. Tut, tut! thou art all ice, thy kindness freezeeth.

Say, have I thy consent that they shall die?

Buck. Give me some little breath, some pause, dear lord,

Before I positively speak in this:

I will resolve you herein presently. Exit.

Cates. Aside. The king is angry: see, he gnaws his lip.

K. Rich. Descends from his throne. I will converse with iron-witted fools
And unrespective boys: none are for me
That look into me with considerate eyes. 30

High-reaching Buckingham grows circum-spect.

Boy!

Page. My lord!

K. Rich. Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold

Will tempt unto a close exploit of death?

Page. I know a discontented gentleman, Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit:

Gold were as good as twenty orators, And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.

K. Rich. What is his name?

Page. His name, my lord, is Tyrrel.

K. Rich. I partly know the man: go, call him hither. Exit Page. 41
The deep-revolving witty Buckingham No more shall be the neighbour to my counsel.

Hath he so long held out with me untir'd, And stops he now for breath? well, be it so.

Enter STANLEY.

How now, Lord Stanley! what's the news?

Stan. Know, my loving lord, The Marquess Dorset, as I hear, is fled To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby: rumour it abroad 51

That Anne my wife is very grievous sick; I will take order for her keeping close.

Inquire me out some mean poor gentleman, Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter:

The boy is foolish, and I fear not him. Look, how thou dream'st! I say again, give out

That Anne my queen is sick and like to die: About it; for it stands me much upon

To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me. Exit CATESBY.

I must be married to my brother's daughter, 61

Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass. Murder her brothers, and then marry her!

Uncertain way of gain! But I am in So far in blood that sin will pluck on sin: Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.

Re-enter Page, with TYRREL.

Is thy name Tyrrel?

Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient subject.

K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious lord.

K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine? 70

Tyr. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies.

K. Rich. Why, there thou hast it: two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,

Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Tyrrel, I mean those bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them.

And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.

K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music.

Hark, come hither, Tyrrel:

Go, by this token: rise, and lend thine ear.

Whispers.

There is no more but so: say it is done, 81

And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.

Tyr. I will dispatch it straight. Exit.

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind

The late request that you did sound me in.

K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.

Buck. I hear the news, my lord.

K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son; well look unto it. 90

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by promise,

For which your honour and your faith is pawn'd;

The earldom of Hereford and the moveables Which you have promised I shall possess.

K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife: if she convey

Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

Buck. What says your highness to my just request?

K. Rich. I do remember me, Henry the Sixth

Did prophesy that Richmond should be king, When Richmond was a little peevish boy. 100

A king! perhaps—

Buck. My lord!

K. Rich. How chance the prophet could not at that time

Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?

Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom,—

K. Rich. Richmond! When last I was at Exeter,

The mayor in courtesy show'd me the castle, And call'd it Rougemont: at which name I started,

Because a bard of Ireland told me once I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord! 111

K. Rich. Ay, what's o'clock?

Buck. I am thus bold to put your grace in mind

Of what you promis'd me.

K. Rich. Well, but what's o'clock?

Buck. Upon the stroke of ten.

K. Rich. Well, let it strike.

Buck. Why let it strike?

K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack, thou

keep'st the stroke

Between thy begging and my meditation.

I am not in the giving vein to-day.

Buck. Why, then resolve me whether you will or no. 120

K. Rich. Thou troublest me: I am not in the vein.

Buck. And is it thus? repays he my deep service

With such contempt? made I him king for this:

O! let me think on Hastings, and be gone
To Brecknock, while my fearful head is on.
Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same.Enter TYRREL.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre
That ever yet this land was guilty of.
Dighton and Forrest, whom I did suborn
To do this piece of ruthless butchery,
Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
Melted with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like to children in their deaths' sad story.
'Oh! thus,' quoth Dighton, 'lay the gentle babes.'
'Thus, thus,' quoth Forrest, 'girdling one another
Within their alabaster innocent arms:
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.
A book of prayers on their pillow lay;
Which once,' quoth Forrest, 'almost chang'd my mind;
But O! the devil'—there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on: 'We smothered
The most replenished sweet work of nature,
That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd.'
Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse;
They could not speak; and so I left them both,
To bear this tidings to the bloody king.

Enter King RICHARD.

And here he comes. All health, my sovereign lord!
K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel, am I happy in thy news?
Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Beget your happiness, be happy then,
For it is done.
K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?
Tyr. I did, my lord.
K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel?
Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them;
But how or in what place I do not know.
K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, at after-supper,
When thou shalt tell the process of their death.
Meantime, but think how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.
Farewell till then.
Tyr. I humbly take my leave. Exit.
K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I pent up close;
His daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage;

The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom,
And Anne my wife, hath bid this world good night.
Now, for I know the Breton Richmond aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And, by that knot, looks proudly on the crown,
To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter CATESBY.

Cates. My lord!
K. Rich. Good or bad news, that thou com'st in so bluntly?
Cates. Bad news, my lord: Morton is fled to Richmond;
And Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welshmen,
Is in the field, and still his power increaseth.
K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near Than Buckingham and his rash-levied strength.
Come; I have learn'd that fearful comment-ing
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king.
Go, muster men: my counsel is my shield;
We must be brief when traitors brave the field. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Before the Palace.Enter Queen MARGARET.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.
Here in these confines slyly have I lurk'd
To watch the waning of mine enemies.
A dire induction am I witness to,
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret: who comes here?

Enter Queen ELIZABETH and the Duchess of YORK.

Q. Eliz. Ah! my poor princes, ah! my tender babes,
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets,
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation.
Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right for right Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night.
Duch. So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe-wearied tongue is still and mute.
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet;
Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.

Q. Eliz. Wilt thou, O God! fly from such gentle lambs,
And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
When didst thou sleep when such a deed was done?

Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son.

Duch. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal living ghost,
Woe's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life usurp'd,

Brief abstract and record of tedious days,
Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth,

Sitting down.

Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!

Q. Eliz. Ah! that thou would'st as soon afford a grave 31

As thou canst yield a melancholy seat;
Theh would I hide my bones, not rest them here.

Ah! who hath any cause to mourn but I?

Sitting down by her.

Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverend,

Give mine the benefit of seniory,
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.
If sorrow can admit society,

Sitting down with them.

Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:
I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him; 40

I had a Harry, till a Richard kill'd him;
Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;

Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.

Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill him;

I had a Rutland too, thou help'st to kill him.

Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death:
That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,

To worry lambs and lap their gentle blood, 50
That foul defacer of God's handiwork,

That excellent grand-tyrant of the earth,
That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,

Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.

O! upright, just, and true-disposing God,
How do I thank thee that this carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
And makes her pew-fellow with others' moan.

Duch. O! Harry's wife, triumph not in my woes:

God witness with me, I have wept for thine. 60

Q. Mar. Bear with me; I am hungry for revenge,

And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward;

Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;

Young York he is but boot, because both they

Match not the high perfection of my loss:

Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb'd my Edward;

And the beholders of this frantic play,
The adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan,

Grey,
Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves. 70

Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligencer,
Only reserv'd their factor, to buy souls

And send them thither; but at hand, at hand,

Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints

pray,
To have him suddenly convey'd from hence.

Cancel his bond of life, dear God: I pray,
That I may live and say, The dog is dead.

Q. Eliz. O! thou didst prophesy the time would come 70

That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottled spider, that foul bunchback'd toad.

Q. Mar. I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen;

The presentation of but what I was;
The flattering index of a direful pageant;

One heav'd o' high, to be hurl'd down below;
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;

A dream of what thou wert, a breath, a bubble,

A sign of dignity, a garish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot; 80

A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
Where is thy husband now? where be thy

brothers?
Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou

joy?
Who sues and kneels and cries 'God save the queen?'

Where be the bending peers that flatter'd thee?

Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?

Decline all this, and see what now thou art:
For happy wife, a most distressed widow;

For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For one being sued to, one that humbly

sues;
For queen, a very caitiff crown'd with care; 100

For she that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;

For she being fear'd of all, now fearing one;
For she commanding all, obey'd of none.

Thus hath the course of justice whirl'd about,

And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou

wert,
To torture thee the more, being what thou

art.
Thou didst usurp my place, and dost thou

not
Usurp the proud proportion of my sorrow? 110

Now thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;

From which even here I slip my wearied head,

And leave the burden of it all on thee.
Farewell, York's wife, and queen of sad mis-
chance:

These English woes shall make me smile in France.

Q. Eliz. O thou, well skill'd in curses,
stay awhile,

And teach me how to curse mine enemies.

Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast the day;

Compare dead happiness with living woe;
Think that thy babes were fairer than they
were,

And he that slew them fouler than he is:
Bettering thy loss makes the bad causer
worse:

Revolving this will teach thee how to curse.

Q. Eliz. My words are dull; O! quicken them with thine.

Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like mine.

Duch. Why should calamity be full of words? Exit.

Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client
woes,

Airy succeders of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries!

Let them have scope: though what they do impart

Help nothing else, yet do they ease the
heart.

Duch. If so, then be not tongue-tied: go
with me,

And in the breath of bitter words let's smother

My damned son, that thy two sweet sons
smother'd.

The trumpet sounds: be copious in ex-claims. A trumpet heard.

Enter King RICHARD and his Train, marching.

K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition?

Duch. O! she that might have intercepted thee

By strangling thee in her accursed womb,
From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.

Q. Eliz. Hid'st thou that forehead with a golden crown,

Where should be branded, if that right were
right,

The slaughter of the prince that ow'd that
crown,

And the dire death of my poor sons and
brothers?

Tell me, thou villain slave, where are my children?

Duch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother Clarence,

And little Ned Plantagenet, his son?

Q. Eliz. Where is the gentle Rivers,
Vaughan, Grey?

Duch. Where is kind Hastings?

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets! strike alarum, drums!

Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale
women

Rail on the Lord's anointed. Strike, I say!
Flourish. Alarums.

Either be patient, and entreat me fair, 151
Or with the clamorous report of war

Thus will I drown your exclamations.

Duch. Art thou my son?

K. Rich. Ay, I thank God, my father, and yourself.

Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience.

K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition,

That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

Duch. O! let me speak.

K. Rich. Do then; but I'll not hear.

Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my
words.

K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste. 161

Duch. Art thou so hasty? I have stay'd for thee,

God knows, in torment and in agony.

K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

Duch. No, by the holy rood, thou know'st
it well,

Thou cam'st on earth to make the earth my
hell.

A grievous burden was thy birth to me;
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy;

Thy school-days frightful, desperate, wild and furious;

Thy prime of manhood daring, bold and ven-turous; 170

Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody.

More mild, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred:

What comfortable hour canst thou name
That ever grac'd me with thy company?

K. Rich. Faith, none, but Humphrey
Hour, that call'd your grace

To breakfast once forth of my company.
If I be so disgracious in your eye,

Let me march on, and not offend you,
madam.

Strike up the drum.

Duch. I prithee, hear me speak.

K. Rich. You speak too bitterly.

Duch. Hear me a word;
For I shall never speak to thee again. 181

K. Rich. So!

Duch. Either thou wilt die by God's just ordinance,

Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror,
Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish

And never more behold thy face again.
Therefore take with thee my most grievous
curse;

Which, in the day of battle, tire thee more Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!

My prayers on the adverse party fight; 190
And there the little souls of Edward's children

Whisper the spirits of thine enemies
And promise them success and victory,
Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end;

Shame serves thy life and doth thy death attend. Exit.

Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse

Abides in me: I say amen to her. Going.
K. Rich. Stay, madam, I must talk a word with you.

Q. Eliz. I have no more sons of the royal blood

For thee to slaughter: for my daughters, Richard, 200

They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens;

And therefore level not to hit their lives.

K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd Elizabeth,

Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious.

Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O! let her live,

And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty;

Slander myself as false to Edward's bed;

Throw over her the veil of infamy:

So she may live unscarr'd of bleeding slaughter,

I will confess she was not Edward's daughter. 210

K. Rich. Wrong not her birth; she is a royal princess.

Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say she is not so.

K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth.

Q. Eliz. And only in that safety died her brothers.

K. Rich. Lo! at their birth good stars were opposite.

Q. Eliz. No, to their lives ill friends were contrary.

K. Rich. All unavoided is the doom of destiny.

Q. Eliz. True, when avoided grace makes destiny.

My babes were destin'd to a fairer death, If grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life. 220

K. Rich. You speak as if that I had slain my cousins.

Q. Eliz. Cousins, indeed; and by their uncle cozen'd

Of comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life. Whose hand soever lanc'd their tender hearts,

Thy head, all indirectly, gave direction:

No doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt

Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart, To revel in the entrails of my lambs.

But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,

My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys 230

Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes;

And I, in such a desperate bay of death, Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,

Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.

K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprise

And dangerous success of bloody wars,

As I intend more good to you and yours Than ever you or yours by me were harm'd.

Q. Eliz. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,

To be discover'd, that can do me good? 240

K. Rich. The advancement of your children, gentle lady.

Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads?

K. Rich. Unto the dignity and height of fortune,

The high imperial type of this earth's glory.

Q. Eliz. Flatter my sorrow with report of it,

Tell me what state, what dignity, what honour,

Canst thou demise to any child of mine? K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and all,

Will I withal endow a child of thine; So in the Lethe of thy angry soul 250

Thou drown the sad remembrance of those wrongs

Which thou supposest I have done to thee.

Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy kindness

Last longer telling than thy kindness' date. K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul I love thy daughter.

Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with her soul.

K. Rich. What do you think? Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter from thy soul:

So from thy soul's love didst thou love her brothers;

And from my heart's love I do thank thee for it. 260

K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning:

I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter, And do intend to make her Queen of England.

Q. Eliz. Well then, who dost thou mean shall be her king?

K. Rich. Even he that makes her queen: who else should be?

Q. Eliz. What! thou? K. Rich. Even so: how think you of it?

Q. Eliz. How canst thou woo her? K. Rich. That I would learn of you,

As one being best acquainted with her humour.

Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me? K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart.

Q. Eliz. Send to her, by the man that slew her brothers, 270

A pair of bleeding hearts; thereon engrave Edward and York; then haply will she weep:

Therefore present to her, as sometime Margaret

Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,

A handkerchief, which, say to her, did drain The purple sap from her sweet brother's body,

And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withal. If this inducement move her not to love,

Send her a letter of thy noble deeds; 280

Tell her thou mad'st away her uncle Clarence,
Her uncle Rivers; ay, and for her sake,
Mad'st quick conveyance with her good aunt Anne.

K. Rich. You mock me, madam; this is not the way
To win your daughter.

O. Eliz. There is no other way
Unless thou could'st put on some other
shape,

And not be Richard that hath done all this.
K. Rich. Say that I did all this for love of her?

O. Eliz. Nay, then indeed she cannot choose but hate thee,

Having bought love with such a bloody spoil.

K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now amended: 281

Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent.
If I did take the kingdom from your sons,
To make amends I'll give it to your daughter.

If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,
To quicken your increase, I will beget
Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter:

A grandam's name is little less in love
Than is the doting title of a mother; 300
They are as children but one step below,
Even of your mettle, of your very blood;
Of all one pain, save for a night of groans Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.

Your children were vexation to your youth,
But mine shall be a comfort to your age.
The loss you have is but a son being king,
And by that loss your daughter is made
queen.

I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore accept such kindness as I can. 310
Dorset your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions and great dignity:
The king, that calls your beauteous daughter
wife,

Familiarly shall call thy Dorset brother;
Again shall you be mother to a king,
And all the ruins of distressful times
Repair'd with double riches of content.
What! we have many goodly days to see: 320
The liquid drops of tears that you have shed
Shall come again, transform'd to orient
pearl,

Advantaging their loan with interest
Of ten times double gain of happiness.
Go then, my mother; to thy daughter go:
Make bold her bashful years with your experience;

Prepare her ears to hear a wooer's tale;
Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame
Of golden sovereignty; acquaint the princess
With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys: 330

And when this arm of mine hath chas-
tised

The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,

Bound with triumphant garlands will I
come,

And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;

To whom I will retail my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Cæsar's Cæsar.

O. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father's brother

Would be her lord? or shall I say her uncle?
Or he that slew her brothers and her uncles?

Under what title shall I woo for thee, 340
That God, the law, my honour, and her
love,

Can make seem pleasing to her tender
years?

K. Rich. Infer fair England's peace by this alliance.

O. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still lasting war.

K. Rich. Tell her, the king, that may command, entreats.

O. Eliz. That at her hands which the kings' King forbids.

K. Rich. Say she shall be a high and mighty queen.

O. Eliz. To wail the title, as her mother doth.

K. Rich. Say I will love her everlastingly.

O. Eliz. But how long shall that title
'ever' last? 350

K. Rich. Sweetly in force unto her fair life's end.

O. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last?

K. Rich. As long as heaven and nature lengthens it.

O. Eliz. As long as hell and Richard likes
of it.

K. Rich. Say I, her sovereign, am her subject low.

O. Eliz. But she, your subject, loathes such sovereignty.

K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her.

O. Eliz. An honest tale speeds best being plainly told.

K. Rich. Then plainly to her tell my loving tale.

O. Eliz. Plain and not honest is too harsh a style. 360

K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick.

O. Eliz. O, no! my reasons are too deep and dead;

Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves.

K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam;
that is past.

O. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I till heartstrings break.

K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown,—

O. Eliz. Profan'd, dishonour'd, and the third usurp'd.

K. Rich. I swear—

O. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath.

Thy George, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

Thy garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue;

Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory.

If something thou would'st swear to be believ'd,

Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd.

K. Rich. Now, by the world,—

Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs.

K. Rich. My father's death,—

Q. Eliz. Thy life hath it dishonour'd.

K. Rich. Then, by myself,—

Q. Eliz. Thyself is self-misus'd.

K. Rich. Why then, by God,—

Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.

If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,
The unity the king my husband made

Thou hadst not broken, nor my brothers died:

If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,
The imperial metal, circling now thy head,

Had grac'd the tender temples of my child,
And both the princes had been breathing

here,
Which now, two tender bedfellows for dust,
Thy broken faith hath made the prey for worms.

What canst thou swear by now?

K. Rich. Justice and The time to come.

Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o'erpast;

For I myself have many tears to wash Hereafter time, for time past wrong'd by

thee.

The children live, whose fathers thou hast slaughter'd,

Ungovern'd youth, to wail it in their age:
The parents live, whose children thou hast

butcher'd,
Old barren plants, to wail it with their age.

Swear not by time to come; for that thou hast

Misus'd ere us'd, by times ill-us'd o'erpast.

K. Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent,

So thrive I in my dangerous affairs
Of hostile arms! myself myself confound!

Heaven and fortune bar me happy hours! 400
Day, yield me not thy light; nor, night, thy

rest!
Be opposite all planets of good luck

To my proceeding, if, with dear heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,

I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter!

In her consists my happiness and thine;
Without her, follows to myself, and thee,

Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,

Death, desolation, ruin, and decay:
It cannot be avoided but by this; 410

It will not be avoided but by this.
Therefore, good mother, I must call you

so,
Be the attorney of my love to her:

Plead what I will be, not what I have been;

Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:
Urge the necessity and state of times,

And be not peevish-fond in great designs.

Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?

K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good.

Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself to be myself?

K. Rich. Ay, if yourself's remembrance wrong yourself. 421

Q. Eliz. Yet thou didst kill my children.

K. Rich. But in your daughter's womb I bury them:

Where, in that nest of spicery, they will breed
Selves of themselves to your recomforture.

Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.

Q. Eliz. I go. Write to me very shortly;
And you shall understand from me her mind.

K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss;
and so farewell. 430

Exit Queen ELIZABETH.
Relenting fool, and shallow changing woman!

Enter RATCLIFF; CATESBY following.
How now! what news?

Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast

Rideth a puissant navy; to the shores
Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted

friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back,
'Tis thought that Richmond is their admiral;

And there they hull, expecting but the aid
Of Buckingham to welcome them ashore.

K. Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the Duke of Norfolk: 440

Ratcliff, thyself, or Catesby; where is he?

Cates. Here, my good lord.

K. Rich. Catesby, fly to the duke.

Cates. I will my lord, with all convenient haste.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither. Post to Salisbury:

When thou com'st thither,—To CATESBY.
Dull, unmindful villain,

Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the duke?

Cates. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness' pleasure,

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

K. Rich. O! true, good Catesby: bid him levy straight

The greatest strength and power he can make,

And meet me suddenly at Salisbury. 450

Cates. I go. Exit.
Rat. What, may it please you, shall I do at Salisbury?

K. Rich. Why, what would'st thou do there before I go?

Rat. Your highness told me I should post before.

Enter STANLEY.

K. Rich. My mind is chang'd. Stanley, what news with you?

Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the hearing;

Nor none so bad but well may be reported.

K. Rich. Heyday, a riddle! neither good nor bad!

What need'st thou run so many miles about, When thou may'st tell thy tale the nearest way?

Once more, what news?

Stan. Richmond is on the seas.

K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him!

White-livered runagate! what doth he there?

Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.

K. Rich. Well, as you guess?

Stan. Stir'd up by Dorset, Buckingham and Morton,

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.

K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword unsway'd?

Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd?

What heir of York is there alive but we?

And who is England's king but great York's heir?

Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas?

Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.

K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege,

You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes.

Thou wilt revolt and fly to him I fear.

Stan. No, my good lord; therefore mistrust me not.

K. Rich. Where is thy power then to beat him back?

Where be thy tenants and thy followers?

Are they not now upon the western shore,

Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?

Stan. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north.

K. Rich. Cold friends to me: what do they in the north

When they should serve their sovereign in the west?

Stan. They have not been commanded, mighty king.

Pleaseth your majesty to give me leave, I'll muster up my friends, and meet your grace

Where and what time your majesty shall please.

K. Rich. Ay, ay, thou would'st be gone to join with Richmond:

But I'll not trust thee.

Stan. Most mighty sovereign,

You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful.

I never was nor never will be false.

K. Rich. Go then and muster men: but leave behind

Your son, George Stanley: look your heart be firm.

Or else his head's assurance is but frail.

Stan. So deal with him as I prove true to you.

Exit.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire,

As I by friends am well advertised, Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty prelate,

Bishop of Exeter, his brother there, With many more confederates, are in arms.

Enter another Messenger.

Second Mess. In Kent, my liege, the Guildfords are in arms;

And every hour more competitors Flock to the rebels, and their power grows strong.

Enter a third Messenger.

Third Mess. My lord, the army of great Buckingham—

K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but songs of death?

He strikes him.

There, take thou that, till thou bring better news.

Third Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty

Is, that by sudden floods and fall of waters, Buckingham's army is dispers'd and scatter'd;

And he himself wander'd away alone, No man knows whither.

K. Rich. I cry thee mercy:

There is my purse to cure that blow of thine. Hath any well-advised friend proclaim'd

Reward to him that brings the traitor in?

Third Mess. Such proclamation hath been made, my leige.

Enter a fourth Messenger.

Fourth Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel and Lord Marquess Dorset,

'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms: But this good comfort bring I to your high-

ness,

The Breton navy is dispers'd by tempest. Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat

Unto the shore to ask those on the banks If they were his assistants, yea or no;

Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham Upon his party: he, mistrusting them, Hois'd sail and made away for Brittany.

K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up in arms;

If not to fight with foreign enemies, Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

Re-enter CATESBY.

Cates. My liege, the Duke of Buckingham is taken;

That is the best news: that the Earl of Richmond

Is with a mighty power landed at Milford Is colder news, but yet they must be told.

K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury! while we reason here

A royal battle might be won and lost.
Some one take order Buckingham be brought To Salisbury; the rest march on with me. 540
Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Room in Lord STANLEY'S House.

Enter STANLEY and Sir CHRISTOPHER URSWICK.

Stan. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me:
That in the sty of the most bloody boar
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold:
If I revolt, off goes young George's head;
The fear of that holds off my present aid.
So, get thee gone: commend me to thy lord.
Withal, say, that the queen hath heartily consented
He should espouse Elizabeth her daughter.
But, tell me, where is princely Richmond now?

Chris. At Pembroke or at Ha'rford-west, in Wales.

Stan. What men of name resort to him?

Chris. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier,

Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley, Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, Sir James Blunt,

And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant crew;
And many other of great name and worth:
And towards London do they bend their power,

If by the way they be not fought withal.

Stan. Well, hie thee to thy lord; I kiss his hand;

These letters will resolve him of my mind. 20
Farewell. Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—Salisbury. An open Place.

Enter the Sheriff and Guard, with BUCKINGHAM, led to execution.

Buck. Will not King Richard let me speak with him?

Sher. No, my good lord; therefore be patient.

Buck. Hastings, and Edward's children, Grey, and Rivers,

Holy King Henry, and thy fair son Edward, Vaughan, and all that have miscarried
By underhand corrupted foul injustice,
If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,

Even for revenge mock my destruction!
This is All-Souls' day, fellows, is it not? 10

Sher. It is my lord.

Buck. Why, then All-Souls' day is my body's doomsday.

This is the day that, in King Edward's time,
I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found
False to his children or his wife's allies;
This is the day wherein I wish'd to fall
By the false faith of him whom most I trusted;

This, this All-Souls' day to my fearful soul
Is the determin'd respite of my wrongs.
That high All-Seer which I dallied with 20
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest.
Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
To turn their own points on their masters' bosoms:

Thus Margaret's curse falls heavy on my neck;

'When he,' quoth she, 'shall split thy heart with sorrow,

Remember Margaret was a prophetess.'

Come, lead me, officers, to the block of shame;

Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Plain near Tamworth.

Enter, with drum and colours, RICHMOND, OXFORD, SIR JAMES BLUNT, SIR WALTER HERBERT, and Others, with Forces, marching.

Richm. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,

Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny,
Thus far into the bowels of the land
Have we march'd on without impediment:
And here receive we from our father Stanley
Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines,

Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough

In your bowell'd bosoms, this foul swine
Lies now even in the centre of this isle, 11
Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn:
From Tamworth thither is but one day's march.

In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,

To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

Oxf. Every man's conscience is a thousand men,

To fight against this guilty homicide.

Herb. I doubt not but his friends will turn to us.

Blunt. He hath no friends but what are friends for fear, 20

Which in his dearest need will fly from him.

Richm. All for our vantage: then, in God's name, march.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;

Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Bosworth Field.

Enter King RICHARD and Forces; the Duke of NORFOLK, Earl of SURREY, and Others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here in Bosworth field.

My Lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?

Sur. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.

K. Rich. My Lord of Norfolk,—

Nor. Here, most gracious liege.

K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knocks; ha! must we not?

Nor. We must both give and take, my gracious lord.

K. Rich. Up with my tent! here will I lie to-night;

But where to-morrow? Well, all's one for that.

Who hath descried the number of the traitors?

Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power: 10

K. Rich. Why, our battalia trebles that account:

Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,

Which they upon the adverse faction want. Up with the tent! Come, noble gentlemen.

Let us survey the vantage of the ground; Call for some men of sound direction:

Let's lack no discipline, make no delay; For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day.

Exeunt.

Enter, on the other side of the field, RICHMOND, Sir WILLIAM BRANDON, OXFORD, and other Officers. Some of the Soldiers pitch RICHMOND'S tent.

Richm. The weary sun hath made a golden set,

And, by the bright track of his fiery car, 20 Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.

Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard.

Give me some ink and paper in my tent: I'll draw the form and model of our battle.

Limit each leader to his several charge, And part in just proportion our small power.

My Lord of Oxford, you, Sir William Brandon,

And you, Sir Walter Herbert, stay with me.

The Earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment: Good Captain Blunt, bear my good-night to him, 30

And by the second hour in the morning Desire the earl to see me in my tent.

Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me; Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?

Blunt. Unless I have mista'en his colours much,

Which well I am assur'd I have not done, His regiment lies half a mile at least

South from the mighty power of the king.

Richm. If without peril it be possible, Good Captain Blunt, bear my good-night to him, 40

And give him from me this most needful scroll.

Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it;

And so, God give you quiet rest to-night!

Richm. Good night, good Captain Blunt. Come, gentlemen,

Let us consult upon to-morrow's business; into my tent; the dew is raw and cold.

They withdraw into the tent.

Enter, to his tent, King RICHARD, NORFOLK, RATCLIFF, and CATESBY.

K. Rich. What is 't o'clock?

Cates. It's supper-time, my lord; It's nine o'clock.

K. Rich. I will not sup to-night. Give me some ink and paper.

What, is my beaver easier than it was, 50 And all my armour laid into my tent?

Cates. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.

K. Rich. Good Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge;

Use careful watch; choose trusty sentinels. Nor. I go, my lord.

K. Rich. Stir with the lark to-morrow, gentle Norfolk.

Nor. I warrant you, my lord. Exit.

K. Rich. Ratcliff!

Rat. My lord!

K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power 60

Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall Into the blind cave of eternal night.

Fill me a bowl of wine. Give me a watch. Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.

Look that my staves be sound, and not too heavy.

Ratcliff!

Rat. My lord!

K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy Lord Northumberland?

Rat. Thomas the Earl of Surrey, and himself,

Much about cock-shut time, from troop to troop 70

Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers.

K. Rich. So; I am satisfied. Give me a bowl of wine:

I have not that alacrity of spirit. Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.

Set it down. Is ink and paper ready?

Rat. It is, my lord.

K. Rich. Bid my guard watch; leave me. Ratcliff, about the mid of night come to my tent

And help to arm me. Leave me, I say. King RICHARD retires into his tent.

Exeunt RATCLIFF and CATESBY.

RICHMOND'S tent opens, and discovers him and his Officers, etc.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!

Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford 80

Be to thy person, noble father-in-law! Tell me, how fares our loving mother?

Stan. I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother,

Who prays continually for Richmond's good: So much for that. The silent hours steal on,

And flaky darkness breaks within the east.
In brief, for so the season bids us be,
Prepare thy battle early in the morning,
And put thy fortune to the arbitrement
Of bloody strokes and mortal-staring war. 90
I, as I may, that which I would I cannot,
With best advantage will deceive the time,
And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms:
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Lest, being seen, thy brother, tender George,
Be executed in his father's sight.
Farewell: the leisure and the fearful time
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love
And ample interchange of sweet discourse,
Which so long sunder'd friends should dwell
upon; 100

God give us leisure for these rites of love!
Once more, adieu: be valiant, and speed
well!

Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment.

I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap,

Lest leaden slumber peise me down tomorrow,

When I should mount with wings of victory.
Once more, good night, kind lords, and gentlemen.

Exeunt all but RICHMOND.

O! thou, whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye; 109
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of
wrath,

That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries.
Make us thy ministers of chastisement!
That we may praise thee in thy victory!
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes;
Sleeping and waking, O! defend me still.
Sleeps.

*The Ghost of Prince EDWARD, Son to HENRY the Sixth, rises between the two
tents.*

Ghost. To King RICHARD. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!
Think how thou stabb'dst me in my prime of youth

At Tewksbury: despair therefore, and die!
To RICHMOND. Be cheerful, Richmond;
for the wronged souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts
thee.

The Ghost of King HENRY the Sixth rises.

Ghost. To King RICHARD. When I was mortal, my anointed body
By thee was punched full of deadly holes;
Think on the Tower and me; despair, and
die!

Harry the Sixth bids thee despair, and die.
To RICHMOND. Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror!

Harry, that prophesied thou should'st be
king,

Doth comfort thee in sleep: live and flourish!

The Ghost of CLARENCE rises.

Ghost. To King RICHARD. Let me sit
heavy on thy soul to-morrow! 131
I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome
wine,

Poor Clarence, by thy guile betray'd to
death!

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword: despair, and
die!

To RICHMOND. Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee:
Good angels guard thy battle! live, and flourish!

*The Ghosts of RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN
rise.*

Ghost of Rivers. To King RICHARD. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!
Rivers, that died at Pomfret: despair, and
die! 140

Ghost of Grey. To King RICHARD. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!

Ghost of Vaughan. To King RICHARD.
Think upon Vaughan, and with guilty
fear

Let fall thy lance: despair, and die:

All. To RICHMOND. Awake, and think our wrongs in Richard's bosom

Will conquer him: awake, and win the day!

The Ghost of HASTINGS rises.

Ghost. To King RICHARD. Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake;
And in a bloody battle end thy days!
Think on Lord Hastings: despair, and die!
To RICHMOND. Quiet untroubled soul
awake, awake!
Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's
sake! 150

The Ghosts of the two young Princes rise.

Ghosts. To King RICHARD. Dream on thy cousins smother'd in the Tower:
Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard,
And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and
death!

Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and
die!

To RICHMOND. Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;

Good angels guard thee from the boar's
annoy!

Live, and beget a happy race of kings!
Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.

The Ghost of Lady ANNE rises.

Ghost. To King RICHARD. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,
That never slept a quiet hour with thee, 160
Now fills thy sleep with perturbations:
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword: despair, and
die!

To RICHMOND. Thou, quiet soul, sleep
thou a quiet sleep;

Dream of success and happy victory!
Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee,

The Ghost of BUCKINGHAM rises.

Ghost. To King RICHARD. The first was I that help'd thee to the crown;
The last was I that felt thy tyranny.
O! in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness. 170
Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and
death;

Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy
breath!

To RICHMOND. I died for hope ere I could lend thee aid:

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dis-
may'd:

God and good angels fight on Richmond's
side;

And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

The Ghosts vanish. King RICHARD starts out of his dream.

K. Rich. Give me another horse! bind up my wounds!

Have mercy, Jesu! Soft! I did but dream.
O! coward conscience, how dost thou afflict
me.

The lights burn blue. It is now dead mid-
night. 180

Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling
flesh.

What! do I fear myself? there's none else by:
Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.

Is there a murderer here? No. Yes; I am:
Then fly: what! from myself? Great reason why;

Lest I revenge. What! myself upon myself?
Alack! I love myself. Wherefore? for any
good

That I myself have done unto myself?
O! no; alas! I rather hate myself

For hateful deeds committed by myself. 190
I am a villain. Yet I lie; I am not.

Fool, of thyself speak well: fool, do not flatter.

My conscience hath a thousand several
tongues,

And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain.

Perjury, perjury, in the high'st degree;
Murder, stern murder, in the dir'st degree;

All several sins, all us'd in each degree,
Throng to the bar, crying all, 'Guilty!
guilty!'

I shall despair. There is no creature loves
me; 200

And if I die, no soul shall pity me:

Nay, wherefore should they, since that I myself

Find in myself no pity to myself?

Methought the souls of all that I had
murder'd

Came to my tent; and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter RATCLIFF.

Rat. My lord!

K. Rich. 'Tounds! who is there?

Rat. Ratcliff, my lord; 't is I. The early village cock

Hath twice done salutation to the morn; 210

Your friends are up, and buckle on their
armour.

K. Rich. O Ratcliff! I have dream'd a fearful dream.

What thinkest thou, will our friends prove all true?

Rat. No doubt, my lord.

K. Rich. O Ratcliff! I fear, I fear,—

Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows.

K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows
to-night

Have struck more terror to the soul of
Richard

Than can the substance of ten thousand
soldiers

Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.

It is not yet near day. Come, go with
me; 220

Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
To hear if any mean to shrink from me.

Exeunt.

RICHMOND wakes. Enter OXFORD and Others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond!

Richm. Cry mercy, lords and watchful
gentlemen,

That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.

Lords. How have you slept, my lord?

Richm. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding dreams

That ever enter'd in a drowsy head,
Have I since your departure had, my lords.

Methought their souls, whose bodies
Richard murder'd, 230

Came to my tent and cried on victory:

I promise you my heart is very jocund

In the remembrance of so fair a dream.

How far into the morning is it, lords?

Lords. Upon the stroke of four.

Richm. Why, then 't is time to arm and give direction.

His oration to his soldiers.

More than I have said, loving country-
men,

The leisure and enforcement of the time

Forbids to dwell on: yet remember this,

God and our good cause fight upon our
side; 240

The prayers of holy saints and wronged
souls,

Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before
our faces;

Richard except, those whom we fight against

Had rather have us win than him they follow.

For what is he they follow? truly, gentle-
men,

A bloody tyrant and a homicide;

One rais'd in blood, and one in blood
establish'd;

One that made means to come by what he hath,

And slaughter'd those that were the means to help him; 240

A base foul stone, made precious by the foil
Of England's chair, where he is falsely set;
One that hath ever been God's enemy.
Then, if you fight against God's enemy,
God will in justice ward you as his soldiers;
If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,
You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain;
If you do fight against your country's foes,
Your country's fat shall pay your pains the hire;

If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors; 260

If you do free your children from the sword,
Your children's children quit it in your age.
Then, in the name of God and all these rights,

Advance your standards, draw your willing swords.

For me, the ransom of my bold attempt
Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold
face;

But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly and cheerfully; 269

God and Saint George! Richmond and victory! Exeunt.

Re-enter King RICHARD, RATCLIFF, Attendants, and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland as touching Richmond?

Rat. That he was never trained up in
arms.

K. Rich. He said the truth: and what said Surrey then?

Rat. He smil'd and said, 'The better for our purpose.'

K. Rich. He was i' the right; and so indeed it is. Clock strikes.

Tell the clock there. Give me a calendar.
Who saw the sun to-day?

Rat. Not I, my lord.

K. Rich. Then he disdains to shine; for by the book

He should have brav'd the east an hour ago:

A black day will it be to somebody. 290
Ratcliff!

Rat. My lord!

K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day;
The sky doth frown and lour upon our army.
I would these dewy tears were from the
ground.

Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me
More than to Richmond? for the self-same
heaven

That frowns on me looks sadly upon him.

Enter NORFOLK.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord! the foe vaunts
in the field.

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle; caparison my horse.

Call up Lord Stanley, bid him bring his
power; 290

I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered:

My foreward shall be drawn out all in
length,

Consisting equally of horse and foot;
Our archers shall be placed in the midst;
John Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Earl of Surrey,

Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.
They thus directed, we will follow

In the main battle, whose puissance* on either side

Shall be well winged with our chiefest
horse. 300

This, and Saint George to boot! What think'st thou, Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, war-like sovereign.
This found I on my tent this morning.

Giving a scroll.

K. Rich. Jockey of Norfolk, be not too bold,

For Dickon thy master is bought and sold.

A thing devised by the enemy.

Go, gentlemen; every man to his charge:
Let not our babbling dreams affright our
souls;

Conscience is but a word that cowards use,
Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe: 310
Our strong arms be our conscience, swords
our law.

March on, join bravely, let us to 't pell-mell;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.

His oration to his army.

What shall I say more than I have inferr'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withal;
A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and runaways,
A scum of Bretons and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits
forth

To desperate adventures and assur'd destruction.

You sleeping safe, they bring to you un-
rest; 320

You having lands, and bless'd with beau-
teous wives,

They would restrain the one, distain the other.

And who doth lead them but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost?

A milksop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow?

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas
again;

Lash hence these overweening rags of
France,

These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives;
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit, 330

For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd
themselves.

If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Bretons, whom our
fathers

Have in their own land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd,

And in record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?

Ravish our daughters? Drum afar off.
 Hark! I hear their drum.
 Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen!
 Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the
 head!
 Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in
 blood; 340
 Amaze the welkin with your broken staves!

Enter a Messenger.

What says Lord Stanley? will he bring his
 power?

Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off with his son George's head!

Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the marsh:

After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom:

Advance our standards! set upon our foes!
 Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,

Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons! 350
 Upon them! Victory sits on our helms.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter NORFOLK and Forces fighting; to him CATESBY.

Cates. Rescue, my Lord of Norfolk! rescue, rescue!

The king enacts more wonders than a man,
 Daring an opposite to every danger:
 His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,
 Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death.
 Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarum. Enter King RICHARD.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cates. Withdraw, my lord; I'll help you to a horse.

K. Rich. Slave! I have set my life upon a cast,

And I will stand the hazard of the die. 10
 I think there be six Richmonds in the field;
 Five have I slain to-day instead of him.

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!
Exeunt.

*Alarums. Enter King RICHARD and RICH-MOND; and exeunt fighting. Retreat and flourish. Re-enter RICHMOND, STANLEY bearing the crown, with divers
 other Lords, and Forces.*

Richm. God and your arms be prais'd, victorious friends;

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead.

Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquit thee.

Lo! here, this long-usurped royalty
 From the dead temples of this bloody
 wretch

Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal:
 Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it. 20

Richm. Great God of heaven, say amen
 to all!

But tell me, is young George Stanley living?

Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester
 town,

Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us.

Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?

Stan. John Duke of Norfolk, Walter Lord
 Ferrers,

Sir Robert Brakenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births:

Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled
 That in submission will return to us; 30

And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,
 We will unite the white rose and the red:

Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,
 That long hath frown'd upon their enmity!

What traitor hears me, and says not amen?
 England hath long been mad, and scarr'd herself;

The brother blindly shed the brother's
 blood,

The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,
 The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire:

All this divided York and Lancaster, 40
 Divided in their dire division,

O! now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,
 The true succeeders of each royal house,

By God's fair ordinance conjoin together;
 And let their heirs, God, if thy will be so,

Enrich the time to come with smooth-fac'd
 peace,

With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous
 days!

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious lord,
 That would reduce these bloody days

again,

And make poor England weep in streams of
 blood! 50

Let them not live to taste this land's increase,

That would with treason wound this fair
 land's peace!

Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives
 again:

That she may long live here, God say amen!
Exeunt.

KING HENRY VIII

AN obvious defect in King Henry VIII, one that will hardly escape the notice of the least critical reader, is its almost complete lack of unity. Our interest centers in no single character or group of characters, is led to no climax and is satisfied by no solution. Rather, it shifts from the fall of Buckingham to the trial and divorce of Queen Katherine, the coronation of Anne Bullen, the fall of Wolsey, the rise of Cranmer, and is finally dissipated in the christening of Elizabeth. There is apparently no attempt to unify these outstanding events of Henry's reign even by a patriotic appeal such as we have observed in Shakespeare's early history plays. There is, however, abundant opportunity for pageantry, together with some masterful strokes of characterization and individual picturesque effects, giving it still an effectiveness upon the stage; but to the reader the gripping power of a central theme such as he has learned to expect from Shakespeare is utterly lacking.

That Heminge and Condell included this play among Shakespeare's histories in the First Folio, where it was first published, and that there is no record of any protest by or on behalf of some contemporary dramatist, establishes a strong probability—if other evidence were lacking—that the play as we have it was written, for the most part at least, by Shakespeare; and some critics go even so far as to insist that it is entirely by him. Other evidence, however, both internal and external, has led to the almost universally accepted belief that while a few scenes of the play are undoubtedly from Shakespeare's hand, by far the larger portion was written by John Fletcher, Shakespeare's most distinguished successor. Even a cursory examination of this evidence will throw more light on Shakespeare for the average reader than would the impossible attempt to draw general inferences from the play as a whole.

In Act I, scene 4, the reader will find the stage direction "Drum and trumpet: chambers discharged" to mark the entrance of King Henry at York House. It was doubtless the carrying out of this stage direction that was responsible for the burning of the Globe Theatre on June 29, 1613. Contemporary accounts of the fire state variously that the play in process of performance was "the play of Henry VIII," "of Henry the Eight," and "a new play, called All is True, representing some principal pieces of the reign of Henry VIII." Further references to the fact that the fire originated from the discharge of chambers (small cannon) at Henry's entrance identify the present play beyond all reasonable doubt as the one in question. That the play was known by the title All is True seems probable not only from the reference quoted, but also from the emphasis laid in the Prologue on the truth of the story and from a contemporary ballad celebrating the destruction of the Globe in which occurs the refrain:

"O sorrow, pitiful sorrow!
And yet it All is True!"

The question now arises whether this play was in fact "a new play" in 1613. If it was, and if Shakespeare wrote it, it must have followed soon after The Tempest and The Winter's Tale. If it did, we should expect to find its versification characterized by those marks which distinguish his latest known plays, namely, a frequency of lines with weak endings, run-over lines, broken metre, elliptical sentences, &c. We should not expect to find, however, a style such as marks none of his undisputed plays.

Now by the application of such tests it has been found that by far the larger part of the play bears in its versification marks commonly found in Fletcher, but quite foreign to Shakespeare. A few scenes, however, notably scenes 1 and 2 of Act I, scenes 3 and 4 of Act II, and the first half of scene 2, Act III, correspond in versification with that of Shakespeare's latest plays.

Many readers will doubtless share my reluctance to deprive Shakespeare, on the strength of such tests, of some of the best-known and most admired passages in this play, particularly those speeches of Wolsey's after his fall, "Farewell! a long farewell," and "Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear, &c." And yet, to one whose ear is attuned to Shakespeare's verse nothing is more certain than that these speeches are not his. Observe in these speeches the high percentage of lines in which a monosyllabic word follows the fifth beat in the line,—endings like "bear me," "puts forth," "upon him," "left me," "hide me," "hate ye," and then try to find a parallel to such a trick of verse in any of Shakespeare's admittedly genuine plays. No such parallel exists; the trick is characteristic, however, of Fletcher.

However reluctantly, then, we must give up the thought that these speeches are by Shakespeare. For myself, I can see no harm in the conjecture that Fletcher wrote them on some bright afternoon when Shakespeare, broken in health perhaps, strolled in for a chat and mused aloud with Fletcher over Wolsey's fall. Under such inspiration Fletcher might well have reached a height to which he never elsewhere attained.

But it is the character of Katherine that after all is the outstanding mark of genius in this play. Following his portrayal of Hermione in The Winter's Tale suffering under false accusation, a queen on trial for her life, Shakespeare's thought might well have turned to a similar example of queenly patience and dignity in the more recent history of his own England. He might well have conceived the idea of building, in the ripeness of his experience, a great drama in which she would be the central figure. But having begun it, he might have been warned by failing health to work no more. After more than twenty years of toil which must have filled the days and stretched far into the nights his hand trembled and dropped the pen—and his work was done. These few scenes in Henry VIII are in all probability the very last he ever wrote. In them alone can we read his final thought.

I like to read that thought as uttered through the words of Katherine on her first appearance, Act I, scene 2:

"Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a suitor.

I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance: there have been commissions
Sent down among 'em, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties: . . . their curses now
Live where their prayers did: and it's come to pass,
This tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. I would your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no primer business."

Her genius is Shakespeare's; it goes straight to the prime business. In behalf of the people she dares Wolsey, whose exactions for wanton luxury and display have bent the people's backs and bred a spirit of rebellion. Not until their cause has been righted will she give ear to the charge against Buckingham, for consideration of which the council has been summoned. Here is a fable for statesmen.

What a drama Shakespeare might have written with such a champion of the rights of the common people as its central figure. Did he desist lest the full story of her life and suffering might stir the people's hearts? Did causes of state or church lead him to abandon his purpose and pass these fragments on to Fletcher? We shall probably never know. Yet we like to think that to the last Shakespeare had in his mind the common people, and that as he reflected on the injustices which they so long had borne, he cried out with Katherine—"God mend all!"

PROLOGUE

I come no more to make you laugh: things
now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it. Such as give Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too. Those that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree. 10
The play may pass, if they be still and will-
ing,
I'll undertake may see away their shilling Richly in two short hours. Only they
That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets, or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd; for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring, 11
To make that only true we now intend,
Will leave us never an understanding friend.

Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad, as we would make ye: think ye see
The very persons of our noble story
As they were living; think you see them
great,
And follow'd with the general throng and sweat
Of thousand friends; then in a moment see
How soon this mightiness meets misery: 30
And if you can be merry then, I'll say
A man may weep upon his wedding-day.

ACT I

SCENE I.—London. An Antechamber in the Palace.

Enter the Duke of NORFOLK at one door;
at the other, the Duke of BUCKINGHAM and the Lord ABERGAVENNY.

Buck. Good morrow, and well met. How have ye done
Since last we saw in France?
Nor. I thank your grace,

Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely ague
Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber when Those suns of glory, those two lights of
men,

Met in the vale of Andren.

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde:
I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;

Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung

In their embracement, as they grew together; 10

Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weigh'd

Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: men might say,
Till this time pomp was single, but now married

To one above itself. Each following day Became the next day's master, till the last

Made former wonders its. To-day the French

All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English; and to-morrow
they 20

Made Britain India: every man that stood Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages
were

As cherubins, all gilt: the madams too,
Not us'd to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them as a painting. Now this masque

Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing
night

Made it a fool and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst.
As presence did present them; him in
eye, 30

Still him in praise; and, being present both,
'T was said they saw but one; and no
discerner

Durst wag his tongue in censure. When these suns,

For so they phrase 'em, by their heralds
challeng'd

The noble spirits to arms, they did perform Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous story,

Being now seen possible enough, got credit,
That Bevis was believ'd.

Buck. O! you go far.

Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of every thing 40
Would by a good discourser lose some life, Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal;

To the disposing of it nought rebell'd,
Order gave each thing view; the office did
Distinctly his full function.

Buck. Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?

Nor. One, certes, that promises no element

In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord?

Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion 50

Of the right reverend Cardinal of York.

Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is freed

From his ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fierce vanities? I wonder
That such a keech can with his very bulk
Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir,

There 's in him stuff that puts him to these
ends;

For, being not propp'd by ancestry, whose
grace

Chalks successors their way, nor call'd
upon 60

For high feats done to the crown; neither allied

To eminent assistants; but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us
note,

The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys
A place next to the king.

Aber. I cannot tell

What heaven hath given him: let some graver eye

Pierce into that; but I can see his pride Peep through each part of him: whence has he that?

If not from hell, the devil is a niggard, 70
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil,

Upon this French going-out, took he upon
him,

Without the privity o' the king, to appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the file

Of all the gentry; for the most part such
To whom as great a charge as little honour
He meant to lay upon: and his own letter,
The honourable board of council out,
Must fetch him in the papers.

Aber. I do know 80

Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that
have

By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O! many

Have broke their backs with laying manors
on 'em

For this great journey. What did this vanity
But minister communication of
A most poor issue?

Nor. Grievingly I think,

The peace between the French and us not values

The cost that did conclude it.

Buck. Every man,

After the hideous storm that follow'd,
was 90

A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy: That this tempest,

Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on 't.

Nor. Which is budded out;
For France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd

Our merchants' goods at Bourdeaux.

Aber. Is it therefore
The ambassador is silenc'd?

Nor. Marry, is 't.
Aber. A proper title of a peace; and
purchas'd

At a superfluous rate!

Buck. Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.

Nor. Like it your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference

Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you,
And take it from a heart that wishes towards you

Honour and plenteous safety, that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potency Together; to consider further that

What his high hatred would effect wants
not

A minister in his power. You know his nature,

That he's revengeful; and I know his sword Hath a sharp edge: it's long, and 't may be said,

It reaches far; and where 't will not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel.
You'll find it wholesome. Lo! where comes that rock

That I advise your shunning.

*Enter Cardinal WOLSEY, the purse borne before him, certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with papers. The CARDINAL in his passage fixeth his eye on BUCK-INGHAM, and BUCKINGHAM on him,
both full of disdain.*

Wol. The Duke of Buckingham's surveyor, ha?

Where's his examination?

First Secr. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready?

First Secr. Ay, please your grace.

Wol. Well, we shall then know more;
and Buckingham

Shall lessen this big look.

Exeunt WOLSEY and Train.
Buck. This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd, and I

Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore best

Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book

Outworths a noble's blood.

Nor. What! are you chaf'd?
Ask God for temperance; that 's the appliance only

Which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in 's looks
Matter against me; and his eye revild

Me, as his abject object: at this instant
He bores me with some trick: he's gone to the king;

I'll follow and outstare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord,
And let your reason with your choler question
What 't is you go about. To climb steep hills

Requires slow pace at first: anger is like
A full-hot horse, who being allow'd his
way,

Self-mettle tires him. Not a man in Eng-
land

Can advise me like you: be to yourself
As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king;
But from a mouth of honour quite cry
down

This Ipswich fellow's insolence, or proclaim
There's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be advis'd;
Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot 140
That it do singe yourself. We may outrun
By violent swiftness that which we run at,
And lose by overrunning. Know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor till 't run
o'er,

In'seeming to augment it wastes it? Be advis'd:

I say again, there is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself,
If with the sap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir,
I am thankful to you, and I'll go along 150
By your prescription; but this top-proud
fellow,

Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions, by intelligence,
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel, I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not 'treasonous.'

Buck. To the king, I'll say 't, and make my vouch as strong

As shore of rock. Attend. This holy fox,
Or wolf, or both, for he is equal ravenous
As he is subtle, and as prone to mischief 160
As able to perform 't, his mind and place
Infecting one another, yea, reciprocally,
Only to show his pomp as well in France
As here at home, suggests the king our
master

To this last costly treaty, the interview
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass

Did break i' the rinsing.

Nor. Faith, and so it did.

Buck. Pray give me favour, sir. This cunning cardinal

The articles o' the combination drew
As himself pleas'd; and they were ratified 170

As he cried 'Thus let be,' to as much end
As give a crutch to the dead. But our count-cardinal

Has done this, and 'tis well; for worthy
Wolsey,

Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows,
Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
To the old dam, treason,—Charles the emperor,

Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,—
For 't was indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey,—here makes visitation.
His fears were, that the interview betwixt 180

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league

Peep'd harms that menac'd him. He privily
Deals with our cardinal, and, as I trow,—
Which I do well, for I am sure the emperor Paid ere he promis'd, whereby his suit was granted

Ere it was ask'd;—but when the way was
made,

And pay'd with gold, the emperor thus
desir'd:

That he would please to alter the king's course,

And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know, 190

As soon he shall by me, that thus the cardinal

Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,
And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry
To hear this of him; and could wish he
were

Something mistaken in 't.

Buck. No, not a syllable:
I do pronounce him in that very shape
He shall appear in proof.

Enter BRANDON; a Sergeant-at-Arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Bran. Your office, sergeant; execute it.
Serg. Sir,

My lord the Duke of Buckingham, and Earl

Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I 200

Arrest thee of high treason, in the name
Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo you, my lord,
The net has fall'n upon me! I shall perish

Under device and practice.

Bran. I am sorry
To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on
The business present. 'Tis his highness'
pleasure
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing To plead mine innocence, for that dye is
on me

Which makes my whitest part black. The will of heaven

Be done in this and all things! I obey. 210
O! my Lord Abergavenny, fare you well.

Bran. Nay, he must bear you company.
To ABERGAVENNY. The king
Is pleas'd you shall to the Tower, till you
know

How he determines further.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure

By me obey'd!

Bran. Here is a warrant from
The king to attach Lord Montacute; and the bodies

Of the duke's confessor, John de la Car,
One Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,—

Buck. So, so;
These are the limbs o' the plot: no more, I
hope. 220

Bran. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O! Nicholas Hopkins?

Bran. He.

Buck. My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal

Hath show'd him gold. My life is spann'd already:

I am the shadow of poor Buckingham,
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on
By darkening my clear sun. My lord, farewell. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Council-chamber.

Cornets. Enter the KING leaning on the CARDINAL'S shoulder, the Lords of the Council, Sir THOMAS LOVELL, Officers, and Attendants. The CARDINAL places himself under the KING'S feet on the right side.

K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart
of it,

Thanks you for this great care: I stood i' the level

Of a full-charg'd confederacy, and give thanks

To you that chok'd it. Let be call'd before
us

That gentleman of Buckingham's; in person
I'll hear him his confessions justify;

And point by point the treasons of his master
He shall again relate.

A noise within, crying 'Room for the Queen!'

*Enter Queen KATHARINE, ushered by the Dukes of NORFOLK and SUFFOLK: she kneels. The KING riseth from his state, takes her up, kisses and placeth her by
him.*

Q. Kath. Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a suitor.

K. Hen. Arise, and take place by us:
half your suit 10

Never name to us; you have half our power:
The other moiety, ere you ask, is given;

Repeat your will, and take it.

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty.
That you would love yourself, and in that
love

Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor
The dignity of your office, is the point

Of my petition.

K. Hen. Lady mine, proceed.

Q. Kath. I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects

Are in great grievance: there have been commissions 20

Sent down among 'em, which hath flaw'd
the heart

Of all their loyalties: wherein, although,

My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, as putter-on
Of these exactions, yet the king our master,
Whose honour heaven shield from soil!
even he escapes not

Language unmannerly; yea, such which breaks

The sides of loyalty, and almost appears
In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,
It doth appear; for upon these taxations, 30
The clothiers all, not able to maintain
The many to them longing, have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who,

Unfit for other life, compell'd by hunger
And lack of other means, in desperate manner

Daring the event to the teeth, are all in uproar,

And danger serves among them.

K. Hen. Taxation!
Wherein? and what taxation? My lord cardinal,

You that are blam'd for it alike with us,
Know you of this taxation?

Wol. Please you sir,
I know but of a single part in aught 41
Pertains to the state; and front but in that file

Where others tell steps with me.

Q. Kath. No, my lord,
You know no more than others; but you
frame

Things that are known alike; which are not wholesome

To those which would not know them, and yet must

Perforce be their acquaintance. These ex-actions,

Whereof my sovereign would have note,
they are

Most pestilent to the hearing; and to bear
'em,

The back is sacrifice to the load. They say 50
They are devis'd by you, or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hen. Still exaction!
The nature of it? In what kind, let's know,
Is this exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturous
In tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd Under your promis'd pardon. The subjects'
grief

Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his substance, to be levied
Without delay; and the pretence for this Is nam'd your wars in France. This makes bold mouths: 60

Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze

Allegiance in them; their curses now Live where their prayers did; and it's come to pass,

This tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. I would your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no primer business.

K. Hen. By my life,
This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me,
I have no further gone in this than by
A single voice, and that not pass'd me but 70
By learned approbation of the judges. If I am

Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither
know

My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing, let me say
'T is but the fate of place, and the rough brake

That virtue must go through. We must not stint

Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope malicious censurers; which ever,
As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow
That is new-trimm'd, but benefit no further 80

Than vainly longing. What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, once weak ones, is Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft,

Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd
at,

We should take root here where we sit, or sit
State-statues only.

K. Hen. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from
fear;

Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent 91
Of this commission? I believe, not any.

We must not rend our subjects from our
laws,

And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?

A trembling contribution! Why, we take From every tree lop, bark, and part o' the timber;

And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd,

The air will drink the sap. To every county
Where this is question'd send our letters, with

Free pardon to each man that has denied 100
The force of this commission. Pray, look
to't;

I put it to your care.

Wol. To the Secretary. A word with you.
Let there be letters writ to every shire,
Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons

Hardly conceive of me; let it be nois'd
That through our intercession this revoke-
ment

And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you Further in the proceeding. Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.

Q. Kath. I am sorry that the Duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare
speaker, 111

To nature none more bound; his training
such
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for aid out of himself. Yet
see,

When these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind growing once corrupt,

They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly

Than ever they were fair. This man so complete,

Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,

Almost with ravish'd listening, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady, 121
Hath into monstrous habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black As if besmear'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear,

This was his gentleman in trust, of him
Things to strike honour sad. Bid him recount

The fore-recited practices; whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much.

Wol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what you,

Most like a careful subject, have collected 130
Out of the Duke of Buckingham.

K. Hen. Speak freely.

Surv. First, it was usual with him, every
day

It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he 'll carry it so
To make the sceptre his. These very words
I've heard him utter to his son-in-law, Lord Abergavenny, to whom by oath he menac'd

Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note
This dangerous conception in this point. 139
Not friended by his wish, to your high person

His will is most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you, to your friends.

Q. Kath. My learn'd lord cardinal,
Deliver all with charity.

K. Hen. Speak on:

How grounded he his title to the crown
Upon our fail? to this point hast thou heard
him

At any time speak aught?

Surv. He was brought to this

By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. Hen. What was that Hopkins?

Surv. Sir, a Chartreux friar,

His confessor, who fed him every minute

With words of sovereignty.

K. Hen. How know'st thou this?

Surv. Not long before your highness sped to France, 151

The duke being at the Rose, within the parish

Saint Lawrence Poultney, did of me demand

What was the speech among the Londoners

Concerning the French journey: I replied,

Men fear'd the French would prove perfidi-

ous,

To the king's danger. Presently the duke
Said, 't was the fear, indeed; and that he doubted

'T would prove the verity of certain words

Spoke by a holy monk; 'that oft,' says he, 160

'Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit

John de la Car, my chaplain, a choice hour

To hear from him a matter of some moment:

Whom after under the confession's seal

He solemnly had sworn, that what he spoke

My chaplain to no creature living but

To me should utter, with demure confidence

This pausingly ensu'd: Neither the king

nor's heirs,

Tell you the duke, shall prosper: bid him

strive

To gain the love o'er the commonalty: the

duke

Shall govern England.'

Q. Kath. If I know you well,

You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your

office 172

On the complaint o' the tenants: take good heed

You charge not in your spleen a noble person,

And spoil your nobler soul. I say, take heed;

Yes, heartily beseech you.

K. Hen. Let him on.

Go forward.

Surv. On my soul, I'll speak but truth.

I told my lord the duke, by the devil's illusions

The monk might be deceiv'd; and that

't was dangerous for him

To ruminate on this so far, until 180

It forg'd him some design, which, being be-liev'd,

It was much like to do. He answer'd 'Tush!

It can do me no damage'; adding further,

That had the king in his last sickness

fail'd,

The cardinal's and Sir Thomas Lovell's

heads

Should have gone off.

K. Hen. Ha! what, so rank? Ah ha!

There's mischief in this man. Canst thou say further?

Surv. I can my liege.

K. Hen. Proceed.

Surv. Being at Greenwich,

After your highness had reprovd the duke

About Sir William Blomer,

K. Hen. I remember

Of such a time: being my sworn servant, 191

The duke retain'd him his. But on; what

hence?

Surv. 'If,' quoth he, 'I for this had been committed,

As to the Tower, I thought, I would have play'd

The part my father meant to act upon

The usurper Richard; who, being at Salisbury,

Made suit to come in 's presence; which if

granted,

As he made semblance of his duty, would

Have put his knife into him.'

K. Hen. A giant traitor!
Wol. Now, madam, may his highness live in freedom, 200
 And this man out of prison?
O. Kath. God mend all!
K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee; what say'st?
Surv. After 'the duke his father,' with 'the knife,'
 He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
 Another spread on's breast, mounting his
 eyes,
 He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenour
 Was, were he evil us'd, he would outgo
 His father by as much as a performance
 Does an irresolute purpose.
K. Hen. There's his period;
 To sheathe his knife in us. He is attach'd;
 Call him to present trial: if he may 211
 Find mercy in the law, 't is his; if none,
 Let him not seek 't of us: by day and night!
 He's traitor to the height. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

*Enter the Lord Chamberlain and Lord
 SANDS.*

Cham. Is 't possible the spells of France should juggle
 Men into such strange mysteries?
Sands. New customs,
 Though they be never so ridiculous,
 Nay, let 'em be unmanly, yet are follow'd.
Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English
 Have got by the late voyage is but merely A fit or two o' the face; but they are shrewd ones;
 For when they hold 'em, you would swear
 directly
 Their very noses had been counsellors
 To Pepin or Clotharius, they keep state so. 10
Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it,
 That never saw 'em pace before, the spavin
 Or springhalt reign'd among 'em.
Cham. Death! my lord,
 Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too.
 That, sure they've worn out Christendom.

Enter Sir THOMAS LOVELL.

How now!
 What news, Sir Thomas Lovell?
Lov. Faith, my lord,
 I hear of none but the new proclamation
 That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.
Cham. What is 't for?
Lov. The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
 That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors. 20
Cham. I'm glad 't is there: now I would pray our monsieurs
 To think an English courtier may be wise,
 And never see the Louvre.
Lov. They must either,
 For so run the conditions, leave those remnants

Of fool and feather that they got in France,
 With all their honourable points of ignorance
 Pertaining thereunto, as fights and fireworks;
 Abusing better men than they can be,
 Out of a foreign wisdom; renouncing clean
 The faith they have in tennis and tall stockings, 30
 Short blister'd breeches, and those types of travel,
 And understand again like honest men:
 Or pack to their old playfellows: there, I
 take it,
 They may, cum privilegio, wear away
 The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.
Sands. 'T is time to give 'em physic, their diseases
 Are grown so catching.
Cham. What a loss our ladies
 Will have of these trim vanities!
Lov. Ay, marry,
 There will be woe indeed, lords: the sly
 whoresons
 Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
 A French song and a fiddle has no fellow. 41
Sands. The devil fiddle 'em! I am glad they're going.
 For, sure, there's no converting of 'em: now
 An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
 A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song
 And have an hour of hearing; and, by'r
 lady,
 Held current music too.
Cham. Well said, Lord Sands;
 Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.
Sands. No, my lord;
 Nor shall not, while I have a stump.
Cham. Sir Thomas,
 Whither were you a-going?
Lov. To the cardinal's: 50
 Your lordship is a guest too.
Cham. O! 't is true:
 This night he makes a supper, and a great
 one,
 To many lords and ladies; there will be
 The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.
Lov. That churchman bears a bounteous mind indeed,
 A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
 His dews fall every where.
Cham. No doubt he's noble;
 He had a black mouth that said other of
 him.
Sands. He may, my lord; has wherewithal: in him
 Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine: 60
 Men of his way should be most liberal;
 They are set here for examples.
Cham. True, they are so;
 But few now give so great ones. My barge stays;
 Your lordship shall along. Come, good Sir
 Thomas,
 We shall be late else; which I would not
 be,

For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guildford,
This night to be comptrollers.
Sands. I am your lordship's.
Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Presence-chamber in York-Place.

Hautboys. A small table under a state for Cardinal WOLSEY, a longer table for the guests; then enter ANNE BULLEN and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlewomen as guests, at one door; at another door, enter Sir HENRY GUILDFORD.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace
Salutes ye all: this night he dedicates
To fair content and you. None here, he hopes,
In all this noble bevy, has brought with her
One care abroad; he would have all as merry
As, first, good company, good wine, good welcome
Can make good people.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, Lord SANDS, and Sir THOMAS LOVELL.

O, my lord! you're tardy:
The very thought of this fair company
Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, Sir Harry Guildford.

Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal
But half my lay thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested,

I think would better please 'em: by my life,
There are a sweet society of fair ones.

Lov. O! that your lordship were but now confessor

To one or two of these.

Sands. I would I were;
They should find easy penance.

Lov. Faith, how easy?

Sands. As easy as a down-bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir Harry,

Place you that side, I'll take the charge of this;

His grace is entering. Nay, you must not freeze;

Two women plac'd together makes cold weather:

My Lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em waking;

Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith,
And thank your lordship. By your leave, sweet ladies:

Sits himself between ANNE BULLEN and another Lady.

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;
I had it from my father,

Anne. Was he mad, sir?

Sands. O! very mad, exceeding mad; in love too:

But he would bite none; just as I do now,

He would kiss you twenty with a breath.
Kisses her.

Cham. Well said, my lord.
So, now you're fairly seated. Gentlemen, 31

The penance lies on you if these fair ladies
Pass away frowning.

Sands. For my little cure,
Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal WOLSEY, attended, and takes his state.

Wol. You're welcome, my fair guests:
that noble lady,

Or gentleman, that is not freely merry,
Is not my friend: this, to confirm my welcome;

And to you all, good health. Drinks.

Sands. Your grace is noble:
Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,

And save me so much talking.

Wol. My Lord Sands,
I am beholding to you: cheer your neighbours. 41

Ladies, you are not merry: gentlemen,
Whose fault is this?

Sands. The red wine first must rise
In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have 'em

Talk us to silence.

Anne. You are a merry gamester,
My Lord Sands.

Sands. Yes, if I make my play.
Here's to your ladyship; and pledge it, madam,

For 't is to such a thing,—

Anne. You cannot show me.

Sands. I told your grace they would talk anon.

Drum and trumpets within; chambers discharged.

Wol. What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of ye. Exit a Servant.

Wol. What war-like voice,
And to what end, is this? Nay, ladies, fear not; 51

By all the laws of war you're privileg'd.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now! what is 't?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers;
For so they seem: they've left their barge and landed;

And hither make, as great ambassadors
From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain,
Go, give 'em welcome; you can speak the French tongue;

And, pray, receive 'em nobly, and conduct 'em

Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty

Shall shine at full upon them. Some attend him. <sup>60</sup>

Exit the Lord Chamberlain, attended.
All rise, and tables removed.

You have now a broken banquet; but we'll mend it.

A good digestion to you all; and once more I shower a welcome on ye; welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the KING and Others as masquers, habited like shepherds, ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the CARDINAL, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures? Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd

To tell your grace: that, having heard by fame

Of this so noble and so fair assembly
This night to meet here, they could do no less,

Out of the great respect they bear to beauty,
But leave their flocks; and, under your fair conduct, <sup>70</sup>

Crave leave to view these ladies, and entreat
An hour of revels with 'em.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain,
They have done my poor house grace; for which I pay 'em

A thousand thanks, and pray 'em take their pleasures.

They choose Ladies for the dance. The KING chooses ANNE BULLEN.

K. Hen. The fairest hand I ever touch'd!
O beauty!

Till now I never knew thee. Music. Dance.
Wol. My lord!

Cham. Your grace?

Wol. Pray, tell 'em thus much from me:
There should be one amongst 'em, by his person,

More worthy this place than myself; to whom,

If I but knew him, with my love and duty <sup>80</sup>
I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.

Whispers the masquers.

Wol. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess,
There is indeed; which they would have your grace

Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see then.

Comes from his state.

By all your good leaves, gentlemen, here I'll make

My royal choice.

K. Hen. Unmasking. Ye have found him, cardinal.

You hold a fair assembly: you do well, lord:
You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal.

I should judge now unhappily.

Wol. I am glad

Your grace is grown so pleasant. <sup>90</sup>

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain, Prithce, come hither. What fair lady's that?

Cham. An't please your grace, Sir Thomas Bullen's daughter,

The Viscount Rochford, one of her highness' women.

K. Hen. By heaven, she is a dainty one.
Sweetheart,

I were unmannerly to take you out,
And not to kiss you. A health, gentlemen!
Let it go round.

Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready

I' the privy chamber?

Lov. Yes, my lord.

Wol.

Your grace,

I fear, with dancing is a little heated. <sup>100</sup>

K. Hen. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's fresher air, my lord,
In the next chamber.

K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one.
Sweet partner,

I must not yet forsake you. Let's be merry:

Good my lord cardinal, I have half-a-dozen healths

To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure
To lead 'em once again; and then let's dream

Who's best in favour. Let the music knock it. Exeunt, with trumpets.

ACT II

SCENE I.—Westminster. A Street.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

First Gent. Whither away so fast?

Second Gent. O! God save ye.

E'en to the hall, to hear what shall become
Of the great Duke of Buckingham.

First Gent. I'll save you

That labour, sir. All's now done but the ceremony

Of bringing back the prisoner.

Second Gent. Were you there?

First Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.

Second Gent. Pray speak what has happen'd.

First Gent. You may guess quickly what.
Second Gent. Is he found guilty?

First Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon 't.

Second Gent. I am sorry for 't.

First Gent. So are a number more.

Second Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it? <sup>10</sup>

First Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke

Came to the bar; where to his accusations
He pleaded still not guilty, and alleg'd

Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney on the contrary
Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions

Of divers witnesses, which the duke desir'd

To have brought, viva voce, to his face:
At which appear'd against him his surveyor;

Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor; and John Car,

Confessor to him; with that devil-monk,
Hopkins, that made this mischief. <sup>20</sup>

Second Gent. That was he
That fed him with his prophecies?

First Gent. The same.
All these accus'd him strongly; which he fain

Would have flung from him, but, indeed,
he could not:

And so his peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him or forgotten.

Second Gent. After all this how did he bear himself? <sup>30</sup>

First Gent. When he was brought again
To the bar, to hear

His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd

With such an agony, he sweat extremely,
And something spoke in choler, ill, and hasty:

But he fell to himself again, and sweetly
In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.

Second Gent. I do not think he fears
death.

First Gent. Sure, he does not;
He never was so womanish; the cause

He may a little grieve at.
Second Gent. Certainly,

The cardinal is the end of this.
First Gent. 'T is likely,

By all conjectures: first, Kildare's attainer, <sup>41</sup>

Then deputy of Ireland; who remov'd,
Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste
too,

Lest he should help his father.

Second Gent. That trick of state
Was a deep envious one.

First Gent. At his return
No doubt he will requite it. This is noted,

And generally, whoever the king favours,
The cardinal instantly will find employment,

And far enough from court too.

Second Gent. All the commons Hate him perniciously, and, o' my conscience, <sup>50</sup>

Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as
much

They love and dote on; call him bounteous
Buckingham,

The mirror of all courtesies;—
First Gent. Stay there, sir,

And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

Enter BUCKINGHAM from his arraignment;
Tipstaves before him; the axe with the edge towards him; halberds on each side; accompanied with Sir THOMAS

LOVELL, Sir NICHOLAS VAUX, Sir WALTER

SANDS, and common people.
Second Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.

Buck. All good people,
You that thus far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.

I have this day receiv'd a traitor's judgment.

And by that name must die: yet, heaven
bear witness,

And if I have a conscience, let it sink me, <sup>60</sup>
Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful!

The law I bear no malice for my death,
'T has done upon the premises but justice;

But those that sought it I could wish more Christians:

Be what they will, I heartily forgive 'em.
Yet let 'em look they glory not in mischief,

Nor build their evils on the graves of great
men;

For then my guiltless blood must cry against 'em.

For further life in this world I ne'er hope, Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies <sup>70</sup>

More than I dare make faults. You few that lov'd me,

And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends and fellows, whom to

leave
Is only bitter to him only dying.

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,

Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heaven. Lead on, o'

God's name.

Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heart, <sup>80</sup>

Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you

As I would be forgiven: I forgive all.
There cannot be those numberless offences

'Gainst me that I cannot take peace with:
no black envy

Shall mark my grave. Commend me to his
grace;

And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell
him

You met him half in heaven. My vows and prayers

Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake,

Shall cry for blessings on him: may he live <sup>90</sup>

Longer than I have time to tell his years!
Ever belov'd and loving may his rule be!

And when old time shall lead him to his
end,

Goodness and he fill up one monument!
Lov. To the water side I must conduct
your grace;

Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas
Vaux,

Who undertakes you to your end.
Vaux. Prepare there!

The duke is coming: see the barge be ready;

And fit it with such furniture as suits <sup>99</sup>
The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone; my state now will but mock me.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable

And Duke of Buckingham; now, poor
Edward Bohun:

Yet I am richer than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant; I now
    seal it;

And with that blood will make them one day groan for 't.

My noble father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against usurping
Richard,

Flying for succour to his servant Banister,

Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd,

And without trial fell: God's peace be with him!

Henry the Seventh succeeding, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince, Restor'd me to my honours, and, out of ruins,

Made my name once more noble. Now
his son,

Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name,
and all

That made me happy, at one stroke has taken

For ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one; which makes me

A little happier than my wretched father: 120
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes; both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most:

A most unnatural and faithless service!
Heaven has an end in all; yet, you that hear me,

This from a dying man receive as certain:
Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels

Be sure you be not loose; for those you make friends

And give your hearts to, when they once perceive

The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again. 130
But where they mean to sink ye. All good
people,

Pray for me! I must now forsake ye: the last hour

Of my long weary life is come upon me.
Farewell:

And when you would say something that is sad,

Speak how I fell. I have done; and God forgive me!

Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and Train.

First Gent. O! this is full of pity. Sir,
it calls,

I fear, too many curses on their heads
That were the authors.

Second Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'T is full of woe; yet I can give you ink-
ling

Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.

First Gent. Good angels keep it from us!
What may it be? You do not doubt my faith, sir?

Second Gent. This secret is so weighty,
't will require

A strong faith to conceal it.

First Gent.

Let me have it;

I do not talk much.

Second Gent.

I am confident:

You shall, sir. Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing of a separation
Between the king and Katharine?

First Gent.

Yes, but it held not;

For when the king once heard it, out of anger

He sent command to the lord mayor
straight

To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.

Second Gent.

But that slander, sir,

Is found a truth now; for it grows again
Fresher than e'er it was; and held for certain

The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal,

Or some about him near, have, out of malice

To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple

That will undo her: to confirm this too,
Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately; 160

As all think, for this business.

First Gent.

'T is the cardinal;

As merely to revenge him on the emperor
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,

The archbishopric of Toledo, this is pur-
pos'd.

Second Gent.

I think you have hit the

mark: but is 't not cruel
That she should feel the smart of this?

The cardinal

Will have his will, and she must fall.

First Gent.

'T is woeful.

We are too open here to argue this;
Let's think in private more. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An Antechamber in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a letter.

Cham. My lord, The horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission and main power, took 'em from me; with this reason: His master would be served before a subject, if not before the king; which stopped our mouths, sir.

I fear he will indeed. Well, let him have
them:

He will have all, I think.

Enter the Dukes of NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.

Nor. Well met, my lord chamberlain.

Cham. Good day to both your graces.

Suf. How is the king employ'd?

Cham. I left him private,
Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause?

Cham. It seems the marriage with his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience.

Suf. No; his conscience
Has crept too near another lady.

Nor. 'T is so:
This is the cardinal's doing, the king-
cardinal:

That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune,

Turns what he list. The king will know him one day.

Suf. Pray God he do! he'll never know himself else.

Nor. How holily he works in all his business,

And with what zeal! for now he has crack'd
the league

Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew,

He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters

Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience, Fears, and despairs; and all these for his marriage:

And out of all these to restore the king, <sup>30</sup>
He counsels a divorce; a loss of her,

That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre;

Of her, that loves him with that excellence
That angels love good men with; even of
her,

That, when the greatest stroke of fortune
falls,

Will bless the king: and is not this course pious?

Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel! 'T is most true

These news are every where; every tongue speaks 'em,

And every true heart weeps for 't. All that dare <sup>40</sup>

Look into these affairs see this main end,
The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open

The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold bad man.

Suf. And free us from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray,

And heartily, for our deliverance,
Or this imperious man will work us all

From princes into pages. All men's honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd

Into what pitch he please.

Suf. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed. <sup>51</sup>

As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please; his curses and his blessings

Touch me alike, they're breath I not believe in.

I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him
To him that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in;
And with some other business put the king

From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon him. <sup>58</sup>

My lord, you'll bear us company?

Cham. Excuse me;
The king hath sent me otherwise; besides,
You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him:
Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.
Exit Lord Chamberlain.

NORFOLK opens a folding-door. The KING is discovered sitting and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks! sure, he is much afflicted.

K. Hen. Who's there, ha?

Nor. Pray God he be not angry.

K. Hen. Who's there, I say? How dare you thrust yourselves

Into my private meditations?
Who am I? ha!

Nor. A gracious king that pardons all offences

Malice ne'er meant: our breach of duty
this way

Is business of estate; in which we come <sup>70</sup>
To know your royal pleasure.

K. Hen. Ye are too bold.
Go to; I'll make ye know your times of
business:

Is this an hour for temporal affairs? ha!

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal? O!
my Wolsey,

The quiet of my wounded conscience;
Thou art a cure fit for a king. To CAMPEIUS. You're welcome,

Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom:

Use us, and it. To WOLSEY. My good lord, have great care

I be not found a talker.

Wol. Sir, you cannot.
I would your grace would give us but an hour <sup>80</sup>

Of private conference.

K. Hen. To NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.
We are busy: go.

Nor. Aside to SUFFOLK. This priest has no pride in him!

Suf. Aside to NORFOLK. Not to speak
of;

I would not be so sick though for his place:
But this cannot continue.

Nor. Aside to SUFFOLK. If it do,
I'll venture one have-at-him.

Suf. Aside to SUFFOLK. I another.
Exeunt NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.

Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom

Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christendom.

Who can be angry now? what envy reach
you?

The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her, <sup>90</sup>

Must now confess, if they have any good-
ness,

The trial just and noble. All the clerks,
I mean the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms

Have their free voices: Rome, the nurse of judgment, Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One general tongue unto us, this good man,

This just and learned priest, Cardinal Campeius,
Whom once more I present unto your highness.

K. Hen. And once more in mine arms I bid him welcome,
And thank the holy conclave for their loves: 100

They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for.

Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers' loves,

You are so noble. To your highness' hand I tender my commission, by whose virtue, The court of Rome commanding, you, my lord

Cardinal of York, are join'd with me, their servant,

In the impartial judging of this business.

K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted Forthwith for what you come. Where's Gardiner?

Wol. I know your majesty has always lov'd her 110

So dear in heart, not to deny her that A woman of less place might ask by law, Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her.

K. Hen. Ay, and the best she shall have; and my favour

To him that does best: God forbid else. Cardinal,

Prithee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary:

I find him a fit fellow. Exit WOLSEY.

Re-enter WOLSEY, with GARDINER.

Wol. Aside to GARDINER. Give me your hand; much joy and favour to you:

You are the king's now.

Gard. Aside to WOLSEY. But to be commanded

For ever by your grace, whose hand has rais'd me. 120

K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.

They converse apart.

Cam. My lord of York, was not one Doctor Pace

In this man's place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes, surely.

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread then

Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

Wol. How! of me?

Cam. They will not stick to say you envied him,

And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,

Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,

That he ran mad and died.

Wol. Heaven's peace be with him! That's Christian care enough: for living murmurers 131

There's places of rebuke. He was a fool, For he would needs be virtuous: that good fellow,

If I command him, follows my appointment: I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,

We live not to be grip'd by meaner persons.

K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen. Exit GARDINER.

The most convenient place that I can think of

For such receipt of learning is Black-Friars; There ye shall meet about this weighty business. 140

My Wolsey, see it furnish'd. O my lord!

Would it not grieve an able man to leave So sweet a bedfellow? But, conscience, conscience!

O! 't is a tender place, and I must leave her. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—An Antechamber of the QUEEN'S Apartments.

Enter ANNE BULLEN and an old Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither: here's the pang that pinches:

His highness having liv'd so long with her, and she

So good a lady that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her: by my life,

She never knew harm-doing: O! now, after So many courses of the sun enthron'd,

Still growing in a majesty and pomp, the which

To leave a thousand-fold more bitter than 'T is sweet at first to acquire, after this process

To give her the avaunt! it is a pity 10 Would move a monster.

Old Lady. Hearts of most hard temper Melt and lament for her.

Anne. O! God's will; much better She ne'er had known pomp: though 't be temporal,

Yet, if that quarrel, Fortune, do divorce It from the bearer, 't is a sufferance, pang-

ing

As soul and body's severing.

Old Lady. Alas! poor lady, She's a stranger now again.

Anne. So much the more Must pity drop upon her. Verily,

I swear, 't is better to be lowly born, And range with humble livers in content, 20 Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief

And wear a golden sorrow.

Old Lady. Our content Is our best having.

Anne. By my troth and maidenhead, I would not be a queen.

Old Lady. Beshrew me, I would, And venture maidenhead for 't; and so would you,

For all this spice of your hypocrisy.

You, that have so fair parts of woman on you,
Have too a woman's heart; which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty:
Which, to say sooth, are blessings, and which gifts, 30

Saving your mincing, the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,

If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth.

Old Lady. Yes, troth, and troth; you would not be a queen?

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.

Old Lady. 'Tis strange: a three-pence
bow'd would hire me,

Old as I am, to queen it. But, I pray you,
What think you of a duchess? have you
limbs

To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth.

Old Lady. Then you are weakly made.
Pluck off a little: 40

I would not be a young count in your way,
For more than blushing comes to: if your back

Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak

Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How you do talk!

I swear again, I would not be a queen
For all the world.

Old Lady. In faith, for little England
You 'd venture an emballing: I myself
Would for Carnarvonshire, although there long'd

No more to the crown but that. Lo! who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were 't worth to know 50

The secret of your conference?

Anne. My good lord,

Not your demand; it values not your asking:

Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming

The action of good women: there is hope
All will be well.

Anne. Now, I pray God, amen!

Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings

Follow such creatures. That you may,
fair lady,

Perceive I speak sincerely, and high note 's Ta'en of your many virtues, the king's
majesty 60

Commends his good opinion of you, and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing Than Marchioness of Pembroke; to which title

A thousand pound a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know

What kind of my obedience I should tender;
More than my all is nothing, nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes

More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers and wishes

Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship, 70

Vouchsafe to speak my thanks and my obedience,

As from a blushing handmaid, to his high-
ness,

Whose health and royalty I pray for.

Cham. Lady,

I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit
The king hath of you. Aside. I have perus'd her well;

Beauty and honour in her are so mingled
That they have caught the king; and who knows yet

But from this lady may proceed a gem
To lighten all this isle? I'll to the king,

And say I spoke with you. Exit.

Anne. My honour'd lord.

Old Lady. Why, this it is; see, see! 81

I have been begging sixteen years in court,
Am yet a courtier beggarly, nor could

Come pat betwixt too early and too late,
For any suit of pounds; and you, O fate!

A very fresh-fish here, fie, fie upon
This compell'd fortune! have your mouth
fill'd up

Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me.

Old Lady. How tastes it? is it bitter?
forty pence, no.

There was a lady once, 't is an old story, 90
That would not be a queen, that would she
not,

For all the mud in Egypt: have you heard it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant.

Old Lady. With your theme I could O'er mount the lark. The Marchioness of Pembroke!

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation! By my life

That promises more thousands: honour's train

Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time
I know your back will bear a duchess: say,

Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady,
Make yourself mirth with your particular
fancy, 101

And leave me out on 't. Would I had no being,

If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me
To think what follows.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Pray, do not deliver

What here you 've heard to her.

Old Lady. What do you think me?

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Hall in Black-Friars.

*Trumpets, sennet, and cornets. Enter two Vergers, with short silver wands; next them, two Scribes, in the habit of doctors;
after them, the Archbishop of CANTER-BURY alone; after him, the Bishops of LINCOLN, ELY, ROCHESTER, and SAINT ASAPH; next them, with some small* distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the purse, with the great seal, and a cardinal's hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver cross; then a Gentleman-Usher bare-headed accompanied with a Sergeant-at-Arms, bearing a silver mace; then two Gentlemen bearing two great silver pillars; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals; two Noblemen with the sword and mace. Then enter the KING and QUEEN and their Trains. The KING takes place under the cloth of state; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The QUEEN takes place some distance from the KING. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court, in manner of a consistory; below them, the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read.

Let silence be commanded.

K. Hen. What's the need?
It hath already publicly been read,
And on all sides the authority allow'd:
You may then spare that time.

Wol. Be't so. Proceed.

Scribe. Say, Henry King of England, come into the court.

Crier. Henry King of England, come into the court. 11

K. Hen. Here.

Scribe. Say, Katharine Queen of England, come into the court.

Crier. Katharine, Queen of England, come into the court.

The QUEEN makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, comes to the KING, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you do me right and justice

And to bestow your pity on me; for
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas!
sir,

In what have I offended you? what cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,

That thus you should proceed to put me off
And take your good grace from me! Heaven
witness 22

I have been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable;
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike,
Yea, subject to your countenance, glad or sorry

As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour
I ever contradicted your desire,
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your
friends

Have I not strove to love, although I knew 30

He were mine enemy? What friend of mine
That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I

Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice
He was from thence discharg'd. Sir, call to mind

That I have been your wife, in this obedience,

Upward of twenty years, and have been blest

With many children by you: if, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty, 40
Against your sacred person, in God's name
Turn me away; and let the foul'st contempt
Shut door upon me, and so give me up To the sharp'st kind of justice. Please you,
sir,

The king, your father, was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand,

My father, King of Spain, was reckon'd one
The wisest prince that there had reign'd by many

A year before: it is not to be question'd 50
That they had gather'd a wise council to
them

Of every realm, that did debate this business,

Who deem'd our marriage lawful. Wherefore I humbly

Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may Be by my friends in Spain advis'd, whose counsel

I will implore: if not, i' the name of God,
Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

Wol. You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers;
men

Of singular integrity and learning,
Yea, the elect o' the land, who are assembled To plead your cause. It shall be therefore bootless 61

That longer you desire the court, as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king.

Cam.

His grace
Hath spoken well and justly: therefore,
madam,

It's fit this royal session do proceed,
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produc'd and heard.

Q. Kath. Lord cardinal,
To you I speak.

Wol.

Your pleasure, madam?
Q. Kath. Sir,

I am about to weep; but, thinking that 70
We are a queen, or long have dream'd so,
certain

The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol.

Be patient yet.
Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble;

nay, before,
Or God will punish me. I do believe,
Induc'd by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy; and make my challenge

You shall not be my judge; for it is you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me,

Which God's dew quench! Therefore I say
again, 80
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul
Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once
more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.

Wol. I do profess
You speak not like yourself: who ever yet Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects

Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom O'erthrowing woman's power. Madam, you do me wrong:

I have no spleen against you; nor injustice
For you or any: how far I have proceeded,
Or how far further shall, is warranted. 91
By a commission from the consistory, Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge me

That I have blown this coal: I do deny it.
The king is present: if it be known to him
That I gainsay my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood; yea, as much
As you have done my truth. If he knew
That I am free of your report, he knows
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me; and the cure is, to 101
Remove these thoughts from you: the which before

His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking,

And to say so no more.

Q. Kath. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. You're meek and humble-mouth'd;

You sign your place and calling, in full seem-
ing,

With meekness and humility; but your
heart

Is cramm'd with arrogancy, spleen, and
pride. 110

You have, by fortune and his highness' favours,

Gone slightly o'er low steps, and now are mounted

Where powers are your retainers, and your
words,

Domesticks to you, serve your will as 't
please

Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell
you,

You tender more your person's honour than
Your high profession spiritual; that again

I do refuse you for my judge; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope. 191

To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,
And to be judg'd by him.

She court'sies to the KING, and offers to depart.

Cam. The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by 't: 't is not well.

She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again.
Crier. Katharine, Queen of England,
come into the court.

Griffith. Madam, you are call'd back.

Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray
you, keep your way:

When you are call'd, return. Now the Lord
help!

They vex me past my patience. Pray you,
pass on: 130

I will not tarry; no, nor ever more
Upon this business my appearance make

In any of their courts.

K. Hen. Go thy ways, Kate:
That man i' the world who shall report he has

A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that: thou art, alone;

If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like govern-
ment,

Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee
out, 140

The queen of earthly queens. She's noble
born;

And, like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.

Wol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,

That it shall please you to declare, in hear-
ing

Of all these ears, for where I am robb'd and bound

There must I be unloos'd, although not
there

At once and fully satisfied, whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness, or

Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on 't, or ever 151

Have to you, but with thanks to God for such

A royal lady, spake one the least word that might

Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person.

K. Hen. My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honour,

I free you from 't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know
not

Why they are so, but, like to village curs, Bark when their fellows do: by some of
these 160

The queen is put in anger. You're excus'd:
But will you be more justified? you ever

Have wish'd the sleeping of this business;
never desir'd

It to be stirr'd; but oft have hinder'd, oft,
The passages made toward it. On my
honour,

I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
And thus far clear him. Now, what mov'd me to 't,

I will be bold with time and your attention:
Then mark the inducement. Thus it came;

give heed to 't:
My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness, 170

Scruple, and prick, on certain speeches
utter'd

By the Bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador,
Who had been hither sent on the debating
A marriage 'twixt the Duke of Orleans and Our daughter Mary. I' the progress of this business,

Ere a determinate resolution, he,
I mean the bishop, did require a respite;
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager, 180

Sometimes our brother's wife. This respite shook

The bosom of my conscience, enter'd me, Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble

The region of my breast; which forc'd such
way,

That many maz'd considerings did throng,
And press'd in with this caution. First,
methought

I stood not in the smile of heaven, who had Commanded nature that my lady's womb,
If it conceiv'd a male child by me, should
Do no more offices of life to 't than 190

The grave does to the dead; for her male issue

Or died where they were made, or shortly after

This world had air'd them. Hence I took a thought

This was a judgment on me; that my kingdom,

Well worthy the best heir o' the world, should not

Be gladdened in 't by me. Then follows that I weigh'd the danger which my realms stood
in

By this my issue's fail; and that gave to
me

Many a groaning throe. Thus hulling in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer 200
Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together; that's to say,
I meant to rectify my conscience, which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,
By all the reverend fathers of the land
And doctors learn'd. First, I began in private

With you, my lord of Lincoln; you remember
How under my oppression I did reek,

When I first mov'd you.

Lin. Very well, my liege.

K. Hen. I have spoken long: be pleas'd yourself to say 210

How far you satisfied me.

Lin. So please your highness,
The question did at first so stagger me,
Bearing a state of mighty moment in 't,
And consequence of dread, that I committed
The daring'st counsel which I had to doubt;
And did entreat your highness to this course
Which are you running here.

K. Hen. I then mov'd you,
My lord of Canterbury, and got your leave
To make this present summons. Unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court; 220
But by particular consent proceeded

Under your hands and seals: therefore, go
on;

For no dislike i' the world against the person
Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points

Of my alleged reasons drive this forward.
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life
And kingly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come with her, Katharine our queen, before the primest creature 229

That's paragon'd o' the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 't is a needful fit-
ness

That we adjourn this court till further day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness.

K. Hen. Aside. I may perceive
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth and tricks of Rome.
My learn'd and well-beloved servant, Cranmer,

Prithee, return: with thy approach, I know,
My comfort comes along. Break up the court: 240

I say, set on.

Exeunt in manner as they entered.

ACT III

SCENE I.—The Palace at Bridewell. A Room in the QUEEN'S Apartment.

The QUEEN and her Women at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles;
Sing, and disperse 'em, if thou canst.
Leave working.

SONG.

*Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his music plants and flowers
Ever sprung; as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring.*

*Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart
Fall asleep, or hearing, die.* 10

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now!

Gent. An't please your grace, the two great cardinals

Wait in the presence.

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?

Gent. They will'd me say so, madam.

Q. Kath. Pray their graces
To come near. Exit Gentleman.

What can be their business
With me, a poor weak woman, fall'n from
favour? 20
I do not like their coming, now I think on 't.

They should be good men, their affairs as righteous;
But all hoods make not monks.

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Wol. Peace to your highness!

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife;

I would be all, against the worst may happen.

What are your pleasures with me, reverend
lords?

Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw

Into your private chamber, we shall give you
The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here;
There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

Deserves a corner: would all other women
Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!

My lords, I care not, so much I am happy
Above a number, if my actions

Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw
'em,

Envy and base opinion set against 'em,
I know my life so even. If your business

Seek me out, and that way I am wife in,
Out with it boldly: truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas,
regina serenissima,—

Q. Kath. O! good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,

As not to know the language I have liv'd in:
A strange tongue makes my cause more strange, suspicious;

Pray, speak in English: here are some will

thank you,
If you speak truth, for their poor mistress'

sake:
Believe me, she has had much wrong. Lord

cardinal,
The willing'st sin I ever yet committed

May be absolv'd in English.
Wol. Noble lady, so

I am sorry my integrity should breed,
And service to his majesty and you,

So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.

We come not by the way of accusation,
To taint that honour every good tongue

blesse,
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow,—

You have too much, good lady; but to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference

Between the king and you; and to deliver,

Like free and honest men, our just opinions

And comforts to your cause.
Cam. Most honour'd madam,

My lord of York, out of his noble nature,
Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace,

Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure

Both of his truth and him, which was too far,
Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace,

His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. Aside.

To betray me.

My lords, I thank you both for your good
wills;

Ye speak like honest men, pray God ye prove so!

But how to make ye suddenly an answer, to
In such a point of weight, so near mine

honour,
More near my life, I fear, with my weak wit,

And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth, I know not. I was set at work

Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking

Either for such men or such business.
For her sake that I have been, for I feel

The last fit of my greatness, good your graces,

Let me have time and counsel for my cause:
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these fears;

Your hopes and friends are infinite.
Q. Kath. In England,

But little for my profit. Can you think,
lords,

That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness'

pleasure,
Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,

And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my

friends,
They that must weigh out my afflictions,

They that my trust must grow to, live not
here:

They are, as all my other comforts, far
hence

In mine own country, lords.
Cam. I would your grace

Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir?
Cam. Put your main cause into the king's protection;

He's loving and most gracious: 't will be much

Both for your honour better and your cause;

For if the trial of the law o'ertake ye,
You'll part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tells you rightly.

Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both; my ruin.

Is this your Christian counsel? out upon ye!
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a Judge

That no king can corrupt.
Cam. Your rage mistakes us.

Q. Kath. The more shame for ye! holy men I thought ye,

Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal
virtues;

But cardinal sins and hollow hearts I fear
ye.

Mend 'em, for shame, my lords. Is this your comfort?

The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady,
A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd?

I will not wish ye half my miseries,
I have more charity; but say, I warn'd

ye:

Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed,
lest at once 110

The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.
Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing: woe upon ye,
And all such false professors! Would you have me,

If ye have any justice, any pity,
If ye be any thing but churchmen's habits,
Put my sick cause into his hands that hates
me?

Alas! has banish'd me his bed already, 119
His love too long ago. I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him is only my obedience. What can happen To me above this wretchedness? all your studies

Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I liv'd thus long, let me speak myself,
Since virtue finds no friends, a wife, a true
one?

A woman, I dare say without vain-glory,
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven?
obey'd him? 130

Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 't is not well,
lords.

Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his
pleasure,

And to that woman, when she has done
most,

Yet will I add an honour, a great patience.
Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.

Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty.

To give up willingly that noble title 140
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Wol. Pray hear me.
Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this English earth,

Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Ye have angels' faces, but heaven knows
your hearts.

What will become of me now, wretched
lady?

I am the most unhappy woman living.
Alas! poor wenches, where are now your fortunes?

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no
pity,

No friends, no hope, no kindred weep for
me; 150

Almost no grave allow'd me. Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd,

I'll hang my head and perish.

Wol. If your grace Could but be brought to know our ends are honest,

You'd feel more comfort. Why should we,
good lady,

Upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places,

The way of our profession is against it:
We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow
them.

For goodness' sake, consider what you do;
How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly 160
Grow from the king's acquaintance by this carriage.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits

They swell, and grow as terrible as storms.
I know you have a gentle, noble temper,
A soul as even as a calm: pray think us
Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and servants.

Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues

With these weak women's fears; a noble
spirit,

As yours was put into you, ever casts 170
Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves you;

Beware you lose it not: for us, if you please
To trust us in your business, we are ready
To use our utmost studies in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: and pray forgive me

If I have us'd myself unmannerly.
You know I am a woman, lacking wit

To make a seemly answer to such persons.
Pray do my service to his majesty:

He has my heart yet; and shall have my
prayers 180

While I shall have my life. Come, reverend
fathers,

Bestow your counsels on me: she now begs
That little thought, when she set footing
here,

She should have bought her dignities so
dear. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An Antechamber to the KING'S Apartment.

Enter the Duke of NORFOLK, the Duke of SUFFOLK, the Earl of SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints,

And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them; if you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise
But that you shall sustain more new dis-
graces

With these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful
To meet the least occasion that may give me Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke,

To be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the peers
Have uncontain'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected? when did he regard it
The stamp of nobleness in any person
Out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures.

What he deserves of you and me I know;
What we can do to him, though now the time

Gives way to us, I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in 's tongue.

Nor. O! fear him not;
His spell in that is out: the king hath found

Matter against him that for ever mars
The honey of his language. No, he 's settled,

Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Suf. Sir,
I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true:
In the divorce his contrary proceedings
Are all unfolded; wherein he appears
As I would wish mine enemy.

Suf. How came
His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.
Suf. O! how? how?

Suf. The cardinal's letters to the pope
miscarried,
And came to the eye o' the king: wherein was read,

How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness

To stay the judgment o' the divorce; for if
It did take place, 'I do,' quoth he, 'perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, Lady Anne Bullen.'

Suf. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it.
Suf. Will this work?

Cham. The king in this perceives him,
how he coasts

And hedges his own way. But in this point
All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic

After his patient's death: the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Suf. Would he had!

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my
lord!

For, I profess, you have it.

Suf. Now all my joy
Trace the conjunction!

Suf. My amen to 't!

Nor. All men's!

Suf. There 's order given for her coronation:

Marry, this is yet but young, and may be left

To some ears unrecounted. But, my lords,
She is a gallant creature, and complete

In mind and feature: I persuade me, from
her

Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall

In be memoriz'd.

Suf. But will the king
Digest this letter of the cardinal's?
The Lord forbid!

Nor. Marry, amen!
Suf. No, no;

There be more wasps that buzz about his nose

Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal
Campeius

Is stol'n away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave;
Has left the cause o' the king unhandled;

and

Is posted, as the agent of our cardinal,
To second all his plot. I do assure you

The king cried Ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him,
And let him cry Ha! louder.

Nor. But, my lord,
When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd in his opinions, which Have satisfied the king for his divorce,

Together with all famous colleges
Almost in Christendom. Shortly I believe

His second marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her coronation. Katharine no more

Shall be call'd queen, but princess dowager
And widow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain

In the king's business.

Suf. He has: and we shall see him
For it an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear. 'T is so.

Suf. 'T is so.

The cardinal!

Enter WOLSEY and CROMWELL.

Nor. Observe, observe: he 's moody.
Wol. The packet, Cromwell,

Gave 't you the king?

Crom. To his own hand, in 's bedchamber.

Wol. Look'd he o' the inside of the paper?

Crom. Presently
He did unseal them; and the first he view'd,

He did it with a serious mind: a heed
Was in his countenance. You he bade

Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready
To come abroad?

Crom. I think by this he is.

Wol. Leave me awhile. Exit CROMWELL.

Aside. It shall be to the Duchess of Alencon,
The French king's sister: he shall marry

her.

Anne Bullen! No: I 'll no Anne Bullens
for him:

There 's more in 't than fair visage. Bullen!
No, we 'll no Bullens. Speedily I wish

To hear from Rome. The Marchioness of Pembroke!

Nor. He 's discontented.

Suf. May be he hears the king
Does whet his anger to him.

Suf. Sharp enough,
Lord, for thy justice!

Wol. Aside. The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter,

To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's
queen!

This candle burns not clear: 't is I must snuff it;

Then out it goes. What though I know her virtuous

And well deserving? yet I know her for A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of

Our hard-ru'd king. Again, there is sprung up

An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer: one Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king, And is his oracle.

Nor.

He is vex'd at something. Suf. I would 't were something that would fret the string, The master-cord on 's heart!

Enter the KING, reading a schedule; and LOVELL.

Suf.

The king, the king!

K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated

To his own portion! and what expense by the hour

Seems to flow from him! How, i' the name of thrift,

Does he rake this together? Now, my lords, Saw you the cardinal?

Nor.

My lord, we have stood here observing him; some strange commotion

Is in his brain: he bites his lip and starts; Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground, Then lays his finger on his temple; straight Springs out into fast gait; then stops again, Strikes his breast hard; and anon he casts His eye against the moon; in most strange postures

We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen.

It may well be

There is a mutiny in 's mind. This morning

Papers of state he sent me to peruse, As I requir'd; and wot you what I found There, on my conscience, put unwittingly! Forsooth an inventory, thus importing; The several parcels of his plate, his treasure,

Rich stuffs and ornaments of household, which

I find at such proud rate that it outspeaks Possession of a subject.

Nor.

It's heaven's will: Some spirit put this paper in the packet To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen.

If we did think His contemplation were above the earth, And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings; but I am afraid His thinkings are below the moon, not worth

His serious considering.

He takes his seat, and whispers LOVELL, who goes to WOLSEY.

Wol.

Heaven forgive me! Ever God bless your highness!

K. Hen.

Good my lord, You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inventory

Of your best graces in your mind, the which

You were now running o'er: you have scarce time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span To keep your earthly audit: sure, in that I deem you an ill husband, and am glad To have you therein my companion.

Wol.

Sir,

For holy offices I have a time; a time To think upon the part of business which I bear i' the state; and nature does require Her times of preservation, which perforce I, her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal, Must give my tendance to.

K. Hen.

You have said well.

Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,

As I will lend you cause, my doing well With my well saying!

K. Hen.

'T is well said again;

And 't is a kind of good deed to say well: And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd you;

He said he did, and with his deed did crown His word upon you: since I had my office I have kept you next my heart; have not alone

Employ'd you where high profits might come home,

But par'd my present havings, to bestow My bounties upon you.

Wol. Aside.

What should this mean?

Sur. Aside. The Lord increase this business!

K. Hen.

Have I not made you

The prime man of the state? I pray you tell me

If what I now pronounce you have found true;

And, if you confess it, say withal If you are bound to us or no. What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess your royal graces,

Shower'd on me daily, have been more than could

My studied purposes requite; which went Beyond all man's endeavours: my endeavours

Have ever come too short of my desires, Yet fil'd with my abilities. Mine own ends

Have been mine so, that evermore they pointed

To the good of your most sacred person and The profit of the state. For your great graces

Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I Can nothing render but allegiant thanks,

My prayers to heaven for you, my loyalty, Which ever has and ever shall be growing,

Till death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen.

Fairly answer'd;

A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated: the honour of it Does pay the act of it, as, i' the contrary, The foulness is the punishment. I presume

That as my hand has open'd bounty to you,

My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour more

On you than any; so your hand and heart,

Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 't were in love's particular, be more
To me, your friend, than any.

Wol. I do profess 190
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own; that am true and will be,
Though all the world should crack their duty
to you
And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound as thick as thought could make 'em,
and
Appear in forms more horrid, yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.

K. Hen. 'T is nobly spoken.
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast, 200
For you have seen him open 't. Read o'er this; Giving him papers.
And after, this; and then to breakfast with What appetite you have.

Exit KING, frowning upon Cardinal
WOLSEY: the Nobles throng after him, smiling and whispering.

Wol. What should this mean?
What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd it?

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed
lion

Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd
him;

Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper;

I fear, the story of his anger. 'T is so:
This paper has undone me! 'T is the account 210

Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together

For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom

And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence!
Fit for a fool to fall by: what cross devil

Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this?

No new device to beat this from his brains?
I know 't will stir him strongly; yet I know

A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune Will bring me off again. What's this? 'To the Pope!

The letter, as I live, with all the business
I writ to 's holiness. Nay then, farewell!

I have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness;

And from that full meridian of my glory
I haste now to my setting: I shall fall

Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.

Re-enter the Dukes of NORFOLK and
SUFFOLK, the Earl of SURREY, and the
Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal: who commands you

To render up the great seal presently
Into our hands; and to confine yourself 230
To Asher-house, my lord of Winchester's,
Till you hear further from his highness.

Wol. Stay:
Where's your commission, lords? words cannot carry

Authority so weighty.

Sur. Who dare cross 'em.
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly?

Wol. Till I find more than will or words
to do it,

I mean your malice, know, officious lords,
I dare and must deny it. Now I feel

Of what coarse metal ye are moulded, envy:
How eagerly ye follow my disgraces, 240

As if it fed ye! and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin!

Follow your envious courses, men of malice;
You have Christian warrant for 'em, and no
doubt

In time will find their fit rewards. That seal

You ask with such a violence, the king,
Mine and your master, with his own hand
gave me;

Bade me enjoy it with the place and honours,
During my life; and to confirm his goodness,

Tied it by letters-patent: now who 'll take
it? 250

Sur. The king, that gave it.

Wol. It must be himself then.

Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.

Wol. Proud lord, thou liest:
Within these forty hours Surrey durst better

Have burnt that tongue than said so.

Sur. Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land

Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law:
The heads of all thy brother cardinals,

With thee and all thy best parts bound
together,

Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy!

You sent me deputy for Ireland, 260
Far from his succour, from the king, from all That might have mercy on the fault thou

gav'st him;

Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe.

Wol. This and all else
This talking lord can lay upon my credit,

I answer is most false. The duke by law Found his deserts: how innocent I was

From any private malice in his end,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.

If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell
you 270

You have as little honesty as honour,
That in the way of loyalty and truth

Toward the king, my ever royal master, Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can

be,
And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my soul,
Your long coat, priest, protects you; thou should'st feel

My sword i' the life-blood of thee else.

My lords,
Can ye endure to hear this arrogance?
And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely.

To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet, 280
Farewell nobility; let his grace go forward
And dare us with his cap like larks.

Wol. All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

Sur. Yes, that goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion;
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.

My Lord of Norfolk, as you are truly noble,
As you respect the common good, the state
Of our despis'd nobility, our issues, 291
Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen, Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles

Collected from his life; I'll startle you Worse than the sacring bell, when the brown wench

Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal.

Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise this man,

But that I am bound in charity against it!
Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand;

But, thus much, they are foul ones.

Wol. So much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise 301
When the king knows my truth.

Sur. This cannot save you:
I thank my memory, I yet remember
Some of these articles; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush and cry 'guilty,'
cardinal,

You'll show a little honesty.

Wol. Speak on, sir;
I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want those than my head. Have at you!
First, that without the king's assent or knowledge 310

You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that in all you writ to Rome, or else

To foreign princes, Ego et Rex meus
Was still inscrib'd; in which you brought
the king

To be your servant.

Suf. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of king or council, when you went Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission 320
To Gregory de Cassado, to conclude, Without the king's will or the state's allowance,

A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Suf. That, out of mere ambition, you have caus'd

Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin.

Sur. Then that you have sent innumerable substance,

By what means got I leave to your own con-
science,

To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities; to the mere undoing
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are; 330

Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord!
Press not a falling man too far; 't is virtue:
His faults lie open to the laws; let them,
Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him

So little of his great self.

Sur. I forgive him.
Suf. Lord cardinal, the king's further pleasure is,

Because all those things you have done of
late,

By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall into the compass of a præmunire, 340
That therefore such a writ be sued against
you;

To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection. This is my charge.

Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations

How to live better. For your stubborn
answer

About the giving back the great seal to us,
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall
thank you.

So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.
Exeunt all but WOLSEY.

Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear me. 350

Farewell! a long farewell, to all my great-
ness!

This is the state of man: to-day he puts
forth

The tender leaves of hopes; to-morrow
blossoms,

And bears his blushing honours thick upon
him;

The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And, when he thinks, good easy man, full surely

His greatness is a-ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur'd,

Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,

This many summers in a sea of glory, 360
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown
pride

At length broke under me, and now has left me,

Weary and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide
me.

Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate
ye:

I feel my heart new open'd. O! how wretched

Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favours.
 There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
 That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin,
 More pangs and fears than wars or women have;
 And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
 Never to hope again.

Enter CROMWELL, and stands amazed.

Why, how now, Cromwell!

Crom. I have no power to speak, sir.

Wol. What! amaz'd

At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder
 A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep,
 I am fall'n indeed.

Crom. How does your grace?

Wol. Why, well;

Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.
 I know myself now; and I feel within me
 A peace above all earthly dignities,
 A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd me.

I humbly thank his grace; and from these
 shoulders,

These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken
 A load would sink a navy, too much honour:
 O! 't is a burden, Cromwell, 't is a burden
 Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven.

Crom. I am glad your grace has made that right use of it.

Wol. I hope I have: I am able now, methinks,

Out of a fortitude of soul I feel,
 To endure more miseries and greater far
 Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.

What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest and the worst
 Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!

Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas More is chosen

Lord chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden:
 But he's a learned man. May he continue
 Long in his highness' favour, and do justice
 For truth's sake and his conscience; that his bones,

When he has run his course and sleeps in
 blessings,

May have a tomb of orphans' tears wept on
 'em!

What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome.

Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news indeed.

Crom. Last, that the Lady Anne,
 Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
 This day was view'd in open as his queen,
 Going to chapel: and the voice is now
 Only about her coronation.

Wol. There was the weight that pull'd me down. O Cromwell!

The king has gone beyond me: all my glories

In that one woman I have lost for ever.

No sun shall ever usher forth mine honours,

Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me,

Cromwell;

I am a poor fall'n man, unworthy now

To be thy lord and master: seek the king;
 That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told
 him

What and how true thou art: he will advance thee;

Some little memory of me will stir him.

I know his noble nature, not to let

Thy hopeful service perish too. Good Crom-
 well,

Neglect him not; make use now, and provide

For thine own future safety.

Crom.

O my lord

Must I then leave you? must I needs forge
 So good, so noble, and so true a master?

Bear witness all that have not hearts of iron,
 With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his
 lord.

The king shall have my service; but my
 prayers

For ever and for ever shall be yours.

Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear

In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me,
 Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman.

Let's dry our eyes; and thus far hear me,
 Cromwell,

And, when I am forgotten, as I shall be,
 And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention

Of me more must be heard of, say, I taught
 thee,

Say, Wolsey, that once trod the ways of
 glory,

And sounded all the depths and shoals of
 honour,

Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise
 in;

A sure and safe one, though thy master
 miss'd it.

Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.
 Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition:

By that sin fell the angels: how can man
 then,

The image of his Maker, hope to win by 't?
 Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate thee:

Corruption wins not more than honesty.
 Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,

To silence envious tongues: be just and fear not.

Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,

Thy God's, and truth's: then if thou fall'st,
 O Cromwell!

Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Serve the
 king;

And,—prithce, lead me in:

There take an inventory of all I have,

To the last penny: 't is the king's: my robe
 And my integrity to heaven is all
 I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell,
 Cromwell!
 Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
 I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
 Have left me naked to mine enemies.
 Crom. Good sir, have patience.
 Wol. So I have. Farewell
 The hopes of court! my hopes in heaven do dwell. Exeunt. 459

ACT IV

SCENE I.—A Street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

First Gent. You're well met once again.
 Second Gent. So are you.

First Gent. You come to take your stand here, and behold

The Lady Anne pass from her coronation?

Second Gent. 'T is all my business. At our last encounter

The Duke of Buckingham came from his trial.

First Gent. 'T is very true: but that time offer'd sorrow;

This, general joy.

Second Gent. 'T is well: the citizens,
 I am sure, have shown at full their royal
 minds,

As, let 'em have their rights, they are ever
 forward,

In celebration of this day with shows, 10
 Pageants, and sights of honour.

First Gent. Never greater;
 Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

Second Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains,

That paper in your hand?

First Gent. Yes; 't is the list
 Of those that claim their offices this day
 By custom of the coronation.

The Duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims To be high-steward: next, the Duke of Norfolk,

He to be earl marshal: you may read the
 rest.

Second Gent. I thank you, sir: had I not known those customs, 20

I should have been beholding to your paper.
 But, I beseech you, what 's become of Katharine,

The princess dowager? how goes her business?

First Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop

Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
 Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
 Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off
 From Ampthill, where the princess lay; to which

She was often cited by them, but appear'd
 not;

And, to be short, for not appearance and 30
 The king's late scruple, by the main assent
 Of all these learned men she was divorc'd,
 And the late marriage made of none effect:
 Since which she was remov'd to Kimbolton,
 Where she remains now sick.

Second Gent. Alas! good lady. Trumpets.

The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming. Hautboys.

THE ORDER OF THE CORONATION.

A lively flourish of trumpets.

1. Two Judges.

2. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before him.

3. Choristers, singing. Music.

4. Mayor of London, bearing the mace.
 Then, Garter in his coat of arms, and on his head a gilt copper crown.

5. Marquess DORSET, bearing a sceptre of gold; on his head a demi-coronal of gold. With him, the Earl of SURREY, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.

6. Duke of SUFFOLK, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of NORFOLK, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.

7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinqueports; under it, the QUEEN in her robe;
 her hair richly adorned with pearl;
 crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

8. The old Duchess of NORFOLK, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the QUEEN'S train.

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold, without flowers.
 They pass over the stage in order and
 state.

Second Gent. A royal train, believe me.
 These I know;

Who's that that bears the sceptre?

First Gent. Marquess Dorset:
 And that the Earl of Surrey with the rod.

Second Gent. A bold brave gentleman.
 That should be 40

The Duke of Suffolk.

First Gent. 'T is the same; high-steward.
 Second Gent. And that my Lord of Norfolk?

First Gent. Yes.

Second Gent. Heaven bless thee!
 Looking on the QUEEN.

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
 Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel;
 Our king has all the Indies in his arms,
 And more and richer, when he strains that
 lady:

I cannot blame his conscience.

First Gent. They that bear
 The cloth of honour over her, are four barons

Of the Cinque-ports.

Second Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all are near her. 50

I take it, she that carries up the train
 Is that old noble lady, Duchess of Norfolk.

First Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.

Second Gent. Their coronets say so.

These are stars indeed;
And sometimes falling ones.

First Gent.

No more of that.
Exit Procession, and then a great flourish of trumpets.

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! Where have you been broiling?

Third Gent. Among the crowd i' the Abbey; where a finger

Could not be wedg'd in more: I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy.

Second Gent. You saw
The ceremony?

Third Gent. That I did.

First Gent. How was it? 60

Third Gent. Well worth the seeing.

Second Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

Third Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream

Of lords and ladies, having brought the
queen

To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her; while her grace sat
down

To rest awhile, some half-an-hour or so,
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely

The beauty of her person to the people.
Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman

That ever lay by man: which when the people

Had the full view of, such a noise arose 71
As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,

As loud, and to as many tunes: hats,

cloaks,
Doublets, I think, flew up; and had their faces

Been loose, this day they had been lost.
Such joy

I never saw before. Great-bellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams

In the old time of war, would shake the press,

And make 'em reel before 'em. No man living

Could say 'This is my wife' there; all were woven 80

So strangely in one piece.

Second Gent. But what follow'd?

Third Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest paces

Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and saint-like

Cast her fair eyes to heaven and pray'd devoutly.

Then rose again and bow'd her to the
people:

When by the archbishop of Canterbury
She had all the royal makings of a queen;

As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems

Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir, 90

With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,

And with the same full state pac'd back
again

To York-place, where the feast is held.

First Gent. Sir,

You must no more call it York-place, that's past;

For since the cardinal fell, that title's lost:
'T is now the king's, and call'd Whitehall.

Third Gent. I know it.

But 't is so lately alter'd that the old name
Is fresh about me.

Second Gent. What two reverend bishops Were those that went on each side of the
queen? 100

Third Gent. Stokesly and Gardiner; the
one, of Winchester,

Newly prefer'd from the king's secretary;
The other, London.

Second Gent. He of Winchester

Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,

The virtuous Cranmer.

Third Gent. All the land knows that:
However, yet there's no great breach;

when it comes,
Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink
from him.

Second Gent. Who may that be, I pray
you?

Third Gent. Thomas Cromwell;
A man in much esteem with the king, and truly

A worthy friend. The king 110
Has made him master o' the jewel house,

And one, already, of the privy council.

Second Gent. He will deserve more.

Third Gent. Yes, without all doubt.
Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests:

Something I can command. As I walk
thither,

I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter KATHARINE, Dowager, sick; led between GRIFFITH and PATIENCE.

Grif. How does your grace?

Kath. O Griffith! sick to death:
My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the
earth,

Willing to leave their burden. Reach a
chair:

So; now, methinks, I feel a little ease.
Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,

That the great child of honour, Cardinal
Wolsey,

Was dead?

Grif. Yes, madam; but I think your
grace,

Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear
to 't.

Kath. Prithee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:

If well, he stepp'd before me, happily 120
For my example.

Grif. Well, the voice goes, madam:
For after the stout Earl Northumberland Arrested him at York, and brought him
forward,
As a man sorely tainted, to his answer,
He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill
He could not sit his mule.

Kath. Alas! poor man.
Grif. At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester;
Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,

With all his covent, honourably receiv'd him:
To whom he gave these words: 'O! father
abbot;

An old man, broken with the storms of state,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye;
Give him a little earth for charity.'
So went to bed, where eagerly his sickness Pursu'd him still; and three nights after
this,

About the hour of eight, which he himself
Foretold should be his last, full of repentance,

Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows,
He gave his honours to the world again,
His blessed part to heaven, and slept in
peace.

Kath. So may he rest; his faults lie gently on him!
Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak
him,

And yet with charity. He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes; one, that by suggestion

Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair-play;
His own opinion was his law; 'i the presence

He would say untruths, and be ever double Both in his words and meaning. He was never,

But where he meant to ruin, pitiful; 40
His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he is now, nothing:
Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example.

Grif. Noble madam,
Men's evil manners live in brass; their
virtues

We write in water. May it please your highness

To hear me speak his good now?

Kath. Yes, good Griffith;
I were malicious else.

Grif. This cardinal,
Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle. 50

He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one;
Exceeding wise, fair-spoken, and persuad-
ing;

Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that sought him sweet as summer.

And though he were unsatisfied in getting,
Which was a sin, yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely. Ever witness for
him

Those twins of learning, that he rais'd in
you,
Ipswich and Oxford! one of which fell with
him,

Unwilling to outlive the good that did it; 60
The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon
him;

For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little:
And, to add greater honours to his age
Than man could give him, he died fearing
God.

Kath. After my death I wish no other herald,

No other speaker of my living actions, 70
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I most hated living, thou hast made
me,

With thy religious truth and modesty,
Now in his ashes honour. Peace be with
him!

Patience, be near me still; and set me
lower:

I have not long to trouble thee. Good
Griffith,

Cause the musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to. 80

Grif. She is asleep: good wench, let's sit down quiet,
For fear we wake her: softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages, clad in white robes, wearing on their heads gar-lands of bays, and golden vizards on their faces; branches of bays or palm in their hands. They first congee unto her, then dance; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head;
at which the other four make reverent court'sies: then the two that held the garland deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head: which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order: at which, as it were by inspiration, she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven: and so in their dancing vanish, carrying the garland with them. The music continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye?
are ye all gone,
And leave me here in wretchedness behind
ye?

Grif. Madam, we are here.
Kath. It is not you I call for:
Saw ye none enter since I slept?
Grif. None, madam,

Kath. No? Saw you not, even now, a blessed troop?
 Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces
 Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun?
 They promis'd me eternal happiness, 90
 And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel

I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall, assuredly.

Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good dreams

Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave, They are harsh and heavy to me.

Music ceases.

Pat. Do you note
 How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?

How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,

And of an earthy cold? Mark her eyes!

Grif. She is going, wench. Pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. An't like your grace—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow: 100
 Deserve we no more reverence?

Grif. You are to blame,
 Knowing she will not lose her wonted greatness,

To use so rude behaviour: go to; kneel.

Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon;

My haste made me unmannerly. There is staying

A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: but this fellow

Let me ne'er see again.

Exeunt GRIFFITH and Messenger.

Re-enter GRIFFITH, with CAPUCIUS.

If my sight fail not,
 You should be lord ambassador from the emperor,

My royal nephew, and your name Capucius. 110

Cap. Madam, the same; your servant.

Kath. O, my lord!
 The times and titles now are alter'd strangely
 With me since first you knew me. But, I pray you,

What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble lady,
 First, mine own service to your grace; the next,

The king's request that I would visit you;
 Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me

Sends you his princely commendations,
 And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O! my good lord, that comfort comes too late; 120

'T is like a pardon after execution:

That gentle physic, given in time, had cur'd me;

But now I am past all comforts here but prayers.

How does his highness?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do! and ever flourish,

When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name

Banish'd the kingdom. Patience, is that letter

I caus'd you write yet sent away?

Pat. No, madam.

Giving it to KATHARINE.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver

This to my lord the king.

Cap. Most willing, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness 131

The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter:

The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on her!

Beseeching him to give her virtuous breeding,—

She is young, and of a noble modest nature,
 I hope she will deserve well,—and a little
 To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him,

Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition

Is, that his noble grace would have some pity

Upon my wretched women, that so long 140
 Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully:

Of which there is not one, I dare avow,
 And now I should not lie, but will deserve,

For virtue, and true beauty of the soul,
 For honesty, and decent carriage,

A right good husband, let him be a noble;
 And, sure, those men are happy that shall have 'em.

The last is, for my men: they are the poorest,
 But poverty could never draw 'em from me;

That they may have their wages duly paid 'em, 150

And something over to remember me by:

If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life

And able means, we had not parted thus.
 These are the whole contents: and, good

my lord,

By that you love the dearest in this world,
 As you wish Christian peace to souls departed,

Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king

To do me this last right.

Cap. By heaven, I will,
 Or let me lose the fashion of a man!

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me 160

In all humility unto his highness:

Say his long trouble now is passing

Out of this world; tell him, in death I bless'd him,

For so I will. Mine eyes grow dim. Farewell,

My lord. Griffith, farewell. Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet: I must to bed;
Call in more women. When I am dead,
good wench,

Let me be us'd with honour: strew me over
With maiden flowers, that all the world may
know

I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm
me,

Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd,
yet like

A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
I can no more. Exeunt, leading KATHARINE.

ACT V

SCENE I.—London. A Gallery in the Palace.

Enter GARDINER, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a torch before him, met by Sir THOMAS LOVELL.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy, is 't not?

Boy. It hath struck.

Gar. These should be hours for necessities,

Not for delights; times to repair our nature
With comforting repose, and not for us

To waste these times. Good hour of night,
Sir Thomas!

Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord?

Gar. I did, Sir Thomas; and left him at primero

With the Duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too,

Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gar. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovell. What's
the matter?

It seems you are in haste: an if there be No great offence belongs to't, give your
friend

Some touch of your late business: affairs, that walk

As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you,

And durst commend a secret to your ear
Much weightier than this work. The queen

's in labour,

They say, in great extremity; and fear'd
She'll with the labour end.

Gar. The fruit she goes with

I pray for heartily, that it may find

Good time, and live: but for the stock,

Sir Thomas,

I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks I could

Cry the amen; and yet my conscience says
She's a good creature, and, sweetlady, does Deserve our better wishes.

Gar. But, sir, sir,

Hear me, Sir Thomas: you're a gentleman
Of mine own way; I know you wise, religious;

And, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well,
'T will not, Sir Thomas Lovell, take 't of

me,

30

Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she,

Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two
The most remark'd i' the kingdom. As for

Cromwell,

Beside that of the jewel house, is made
master

O' the rolls, and the king's secretary;
further, sir,

Stands in the gap and trade of more prefer-
ments,

With which the time will load him. The archbishop

Is the king's hand and tongue; and who dare speak

One syllable against him?

Gar. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas,
There are that dare; and I myself have ventur'd

To speak my mind of him: and indeed this
day,

Sir, I may tell it you, I think I have Insens'd the lords o' the council that he is,
For so I know he is, they know he is,

A most arch heretic, a pestilence
That does infect the land: with which they mov'd

Have broken with the king; who hath so far Given ear to our complaint, of his great
grace

And princely care, foreseeing those fell mischiefs

Our reasons laid before him, hath commanded

To-morrow morning to the council-board
He be convened. He's a rank weed, Sir

Thomas,

And we must root him out. From your affairs

I hinder you too long: good night, Sir
Thomas!

Lov. Many good nights, my lord. I rest your servant.

Enter the KING and SUFFOLK.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-
night;

My mind's not on 't; you are too hard for me.

Suf. Sir. I did never win of you before.

K. Hen. But little, Charles;

Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play.

Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman

I sent your message; who return'd her
thanks

In the greatest humbleness, and desir'd your highness

Most heartily to pray for her.

K. Hen. What say'st thou, ha?

To pray for her? what! is she crying out?

Lov. So said her woman; and that her sufferance made Almost each pang a death.

K. Hen. Alas! good lady.

Suf. God safely quit her of her burden,
and

With gentle travail, to the gladding of
Your highness with an heir!

K. Hen. 'T is midnight, Charles;
Prithee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember
The estate of my poor queen. Leave me
alone;

For I must think of that which company
Would not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your highness
A quiet night; and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

K. Hen. Charles, good night.
Exit SUFFOLK.

Enter Sir ANTHONY DENNY.

Well, sir what follows?

Den. Sir, I have brought my lord the archbishop,

As you commanded me.

K. Hen. Ha! Canterbury?

Den. Ay, my good lord.

K. Hen. 'T is true: where is he, Denny?

Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Bring him to us.
Exit DENNY.

Lov. Aside. This is about that which the bishop spake:
I am happily come hither.

Re-enter DENNY, with CRANMER.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery.

LOVELL seems to stay.

Ha! I have said. Be gone.

What! Exeunt LOVELL and DENNY.

Cran. I am fearful. Wherefore frowns he thus?

'T is his aspect of terror: all's not well.

K. Hen. How now, my lord! You do desire to know

Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. Kneeling. It is my duty
To attend your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious lord of Canterbury.
Come, you and I must walk a turn together;
I have news to tell you: come, come, give me your hand.

Ah! my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And am right sorry to repeat what follows.
I have, and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord, Grievous complaints of you; which, being consider'd,

Have mov'd us and our council, that you shall

This morning come before us; where, I
know,

You cannot with such freedom purge your-
self,

But that, till further trial in those charges
Which will require your answer, you must take

Your patience to you, and be well contented

To make your house our Tower: you a brother of us,

It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. Kneeling. I humbly thank your highness;

And am right glad to catch this good occasion

Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff

And corn shall fly asunder; for I know There's none stands under more calumnious tongues

Than I myself, poor man.

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury:
Thy truth and thy integrity is rooted

In us, thy friend: give me thy hand, stand
up;

Prithee, let's walk. Now, by my holidame,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I
look'd

You would have given me your petition,
that

I should have ta'en some pains to bring together

Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you,

Without endurance, further.

Cran. Most dread liege,
The good I stand on is my truth and hon-
esty:

If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies,
Will triumph o'er my person; which I weigh not,

Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing

What can be said against me.

K. Hen. Know you not How your state stands i' the world, with the whole world?

Your enemies are many, and not small;
their practices

Must bear the same proportion; and not ever

The justice and the truth o' the question carries

The due o' the verdict with it. At what ease Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt

To swear against you? such things have been done.

You are potentially oppos'd, and with a malice
Of as great size. When you of better luck,
I mean in perjurd witness, than your
Master,

Whose minister you are, whiles here he liv'd

Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to;
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction.

Cran. God and your majesty Protect mine innocence! or I fall into

The trap is laid for me.

K. Hen. Be of good cheer;
They shall no more prevail than we give way to.

Keep comfort to you; and this morning see You do appear before them. If they shall chance,

In charging you with matters, to commit
you,

The best persuasions to the contrary
Fail not to use, and with what vehemency
The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties

Will render you no remedy, this ring 150
Deliver them, and your appeal to us
There make before them. Look! the good man weeps;

He's honest, on mine honour. God's blest mother!

I swear he is true-hearted; and a soul
None better in my kingdom. Get you gone,

And do as I have bid you. Exit CRANMER.
He has strangled
His language in his tears.

Enter an old Lady.

Gent. Within. Come back: what mean you?

Old Lady. I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring

Will make my boldness manners. Now, good angels 159

Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person
Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen. Now, by thy looks
I guess thy message. Is the queen delivered?

Say, ay; and of a boy.

Old Lady. Ay, ay, my liege;
And of a lovely boy: the God of heaven
Both now and ever bless her! 't is a girl,
Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger: 't is as like

you
As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen. Lovell!

Re-enter LOVELL.

Lov. Sir!

K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks.
I'll to the queen. Exit. 170

Old Lady. An hundred marks! By this light, I'll ha' more.

An ordinary groom is for such payment:
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this the girl was like to him?
I will have more, or else unsay 't; and now,
While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Lobby before the Council-Chamber. Pursuivants, Pages, etc. attending.

Enter CRANMER.

Cran. I hope I am not too late; and yet the gentleman
That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me
To make great haste. All fast? what means this? Ho!
Who waits there?

Enter Keeper.

Sure, you know me?

Keep. Yes, my lord;
But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?
Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd for.

Enter Doctor BUTTS.

Cran. So.
Butts. Aside. This is a piece of malice. I am glad

I came this way so happily: the king
Shall understand it presently. Exit.

Cran. Aside. 'T is Butts,
The king's physician. As he pass'd along, 't is How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me.
Pray heaven he sound not my disgrace! For certain,

This is of purpose laid by some that hate me.
God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice,

To quench mine honour: they would shame to make me

Wait else at door, a fellow-counsellor,
'Mong boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures

Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the KING and BUTTS at a window above.

Butts. I'll show your grace the strangest sight,—

K. Hen. What's that, Butts?

Butts. I think your highness saw this many a day. 21

K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it?

Butts. There, my lord:
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;

Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants,

Pages and footboys.

K. Hen. Ha! 't is he, indeed.

Is this the honour they do one another?
'T is well there 's one above 'em yet. I had thought

They had parted so much honesty among 'em,

At least good manners, as not thus to suffer
A man of his place, and so near our favour, 30

To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures,

And at the door, too, like a post with packets.
By holy Mary, Butts, there 's knavery:

Let 'em alone, and draw the curtain close;
We shall hear more anon. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Council-Chamber.

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of SUFFOLK, the Duke of NORFOLK, the Earl of SURREY, the Lord Chamberlain, GARDINER, and CROMWELL. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left void above him, as for the Archbishop of CANTERBURY. The rest seat themselves in order on each side. CROMWELL at the lower end, as secretary. Keeper at the door.

Cham. Speak to the business, master secretary:

Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours,
The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there?

Keep. Without, my noble lords?

Gar. Yes.

Keep. My lord archbishop;
And he has done half-an-hour, to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

Keep. Your grace may enter now.

CRANMER enters, and approaches the council-table.

Chan. My good lord archbishop, I'm very sorry
To sit here at this present and behold
That chair stand empty: but we all are
men, 10

In our own natures frail, and capable
Of our flesh: few are angels: out of which frailty

And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,

Have misdeemean'd yourself, and not a little,
Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling
The whole realm, by your teaching and your chaplains,

For so we are inform'd, with new opinions,
Divers and dangerous; which are heresies,
And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gar. Which reformation must be sudden,
too, 20
My noble lords; for those that tame wild horses

Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle,

But stop their mouths with stubborn bits,
and spur 'em,

Till they obey the manage. If we suffer,
Out of our easiness and childish pity
To one man's honour, this contagious sick-
ness,

Farewell all physic: and what follows then?
Commutations, uproars, with a general taint
Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours,

The upper Germany, can dearly witness, 30
Yet freshly pitied in our memories.

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress

Both of my life and office, I have labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching
And the strong course of my authority
Might go one way, and safely; and the end
Was ever to do well: nor is there living,
I speak it with a single heart, my lords,
A man that more detests, more stirs against,
Both in his private conscience and his
place, 40

Defacers of a public peace, than I do.
Pray heaven the king may never find a heart
With less allegiance in it! Men that make Envy and crooked malice nourishment Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships

That in this case of justice, my accusers,

Be what they will, may stand forth face to
face,

And freely urge against me.

Suf.

Nay, my lord,
That cannot be; you are a counsellor,
And by that virtue no man dare accuse
you. 50

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment,

We will be short with you. 'T is his highness' pleasure,

And our consent, for better trial of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower;
Where, being but a private man again,
You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,

More than, I fear, you are provided for.

Cran. Ah! my good lord of Winchester,
I thank you;

You are always my good friend: if your will pass,

I shall both find your lordship judge and
juror, 50

You are so merciful. I see your end;
'T is my undoing: love and meekness, lord,

Become a churchman better than ambition:
Win straying souls with modesty again,

Cast none away. That I shall clear my-
self,

Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,
I make as little doubt, as you do conscience
In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,
But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sec-
tary; 70

That's the plain truth; your painted gloss discovers,

To men that understand you, words and weakness.

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little,

By your good favour, too sharp; men so noble,

However faulty, yet should find respect
For what they have been: 't is a cruelty
To load a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary,
I cry your honour mercy; you may, worst
Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?

Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer 80
Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound?

Gar. Not sound, I say.

Crom. Would you were half so honest!
Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

Gar. I shall remember this bold language.
Crom. Do.

Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;
Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. And I.
Chan. Then thus for you, my lord: it stands agreed,

I take it, by all voices, that forthwith
You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner;

There to remain till the king's further pleasure
Be known unto us. Are you all agreed, lords?

All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy, But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other Would you expect? you are strangely troublesome.
Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

Cran. For me? Must I go like a traitor thither?

Gar. Receive him, And see him safe i' the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords; I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords;

By virtue of that ring I take my cause Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it 100 To a most noble judge, the king my master. Cham. This is the king's ring.

Sur. 'T is no counterfeit.

Suf. 'T is the right ring, by heaven! I told ye all, When we first put this dangerous stone a-rolling,

'T would fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords, The king will suffer but the little finger Of this man to be vex'd?

Chan. 'T is now too certain: How much more is his life in value with him?

Would I were fairly out on 't!

Crom. My mind gave me, In seeking tales and informations 110 Against this man, whose honesty the devil And his disciples only envy at, Ye blew the fire that burns ye: now have at ye!

Enter the KING, frowning on them; he takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince; Not only good and wise, but most religious: One that in all obedience makes the church The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen

That holy duty, out of dear respect, His royal self in judgment comes to hear 120 The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations, Bishop of Winchester; but know, I come not To hear such flattery now, and in my presence;

They are too thin and bare to hide offences. To me you cannot reach; you play the spaniel,

And think with wagging of your tongue to win me;

But, whatsoe'er thou tak'st me for, I'm sure Thou hast a cruel nature and a bloody.

To CRANMER. Good man, sit down. Now let me see the proudest, 130 He that dares most, but wag his finger at thee:

By all that's holy, he had better starve Than but once think this place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your grace,—

K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me. I had thought I had had men of some understanding

And wisdom of my council; but I find none. Was it discretion, lords, to let this man, This good man, few of you deserve that title, This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy At chamber-door? and one as great as you are? 140

Why, what a shame was this! Did my commission

Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye Power as he was a counsellor to try him, Not as a groom. There's some of ye, I see, More out of malice than integrity, Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean; Which ye shall never have while I live.

Chan.

Thus far, My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpos'd

Concerning his imprisonment, was rather, 150 If there be faith in men, meant for his trial And fair purgation to the world, than malice, I'm sure, in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him;

Take him, and use him well; he's worthy of it.

I will say thus much for him, if a prince

May be beholding to a subject, I

Am, for his love and service, so to him.

Make me no more ado, but all embrace him:

Be friends, for shame, my lords! My lord of Canterbury, 160

I have a suit which you must not deny me; That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism,

You must be godfather, and answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory

In such an honour: how may I deserve it, That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spoons. You shall have

Two noble partners with you; the old Duchess of Norfolk,

And Lady Marquess Dorset: will these please you? 170

Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you,

Embrace and love this man.

Gar. With a true heart And brother-love, I do it.

Cran. And let heaven Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation,

K. Hen. Good man! those joyful tears show thy true heart:

The common voice, I see, is verified

Of thee, which says thus, 'Do my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever.'

Come, lords, we trifle time away; I long
To have this young one made a Christian. 180
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.
Exeunt.

SCENE. IV.—The Palace Yard.

Noise and tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals. Do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.

Within. Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

Port. Port to the gallows, and be hanged, ye rogue! Is this a place to roar in? Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches to 'em. I'll scratch your heads: you must be seeing christenings! Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? 11

Man. Pray, sir, be patient: 't is as much impossible.

Unless we sweep 'em from the door with cannons,

To scatter 'em, as 't is to make 'em sleep
On May-day morning; which will never be.
We may as well push against Paul's as stir 'em.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?
Man. Alas! I know not; how gets the tide in?

As much as one sound cudgel of four foot,
You see the poor remainder, could distribute, 20

I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.

Man. I am not Samson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colbrand,

To mow 'em down before me; but if I spared any

That had a head to hit, either young or old,
He or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker,

Let me ne'er hope to see a chine again;
And that I would not for a cow, God save her!

Within. Do you hear, master porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy. Keep the door close, sirrah. 30

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock 'em down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a fry of fornication is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand: here will be father, godfather, and all together. 39

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in's nose: all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance. That fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me: he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pinked porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I missed the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out 'Clubs!' when I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope o' the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on; I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff to me; I defied 'em still; when suddenly a file of boys behind 'em, loose shot, delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let 'em win the work. The devil was amongst 'em, I think, surely. 62

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitten apples; that no audience but the Tribulation of Tower-hill, or the Limbs of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days; besides the running banquet of two beadles, that is to come. 70

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here!

They grow still too, from all parts they are coming,

As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters,

These lazy knaves? Ye have made a fine hand fellows:

There's a trim rabble let in. Are all these Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies,

When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour, We are but men; and what so many may do,

Not being torn a-pieces, we have done: 80
An army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I live,

If the king blame me for 't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads

Clap round fines for neglect: ye're lazy knaves;

And here ye lie baiting of bombards, when Ye should do service. Hark! the trumpets sound;

They're come already from the christening. Go, break among the press, and find a way out

To let the troop pass fairly, or I'll find A Marshalsea shall hold ye play these two months. 90

Port. Make way there for the princess.

Man. You great fellow, Stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.

Port. You i' the camlet, get up o' the rail;
I'll pick you o'er the pales else. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Palace.

Enter Trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, the Lord Mayor, Garter, CRANMER, the Duke of NORFOLK, with his marshal's staff, the Duke of SUFFOLK, two Noblemen bearing great standing-bowls for the christening-gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the Duchess of NORFOLK, godmother, bearing the child richly habited in a mantle, etc., train borne by a Lady; then follows the Marchioness of DORSET, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth!

Flourish. Enter the KING and Train.

Cran. Kneeling. And to your royal grace, and the good queen,
My noble partners, and myself, thus pray:
All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady,
Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy,
May hourly fall upon ye!

K. Hen. Thankyou, good lord archbishop:
What is her name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

K. Hen. Stand up, lord.

The KING kisses the Child.

With this kiss take my blessing: God protect thee! 11

Into whose hand I give thy life.

Cran. Amen.

K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal:

I thank ye heartily: so shall this lady
When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir,
For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter

Let none think flattery, for they'll find 'em truth.

This royal infant, heaven still move about her!

Though in her cradle, yet now promises
Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings,

Which time shall bring to ripeness: she shall be, 21

But few now living can behold that goodness,

A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed: Saba was never More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue
Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces,

That mould up such a mighty piece as this is,
With all the virtues that attend the good,
Shall still be doubled on her; truth shall nurse her;

Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her;

She shall be lov'd and fear'd; her own shall bless her;

Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn,
And hang their heads with sorrow; good grows with her.

In her days every man shall eat in safety
Under his own vine what he plants; and sing

The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours.

God shall be truly known; and those about her

From her shall read the perfect ways of honour,

And by those claim their greatness, not by blood.

Nor shall this peace sleep with her; but as when 40

The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
Her ashes new create another heir,

As great in admiration as herself,
So shall she leave her blessedness to one,

When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness,

Who, from the sacred ashes of her honour,
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,

And so stand fix'd. Peace, plenty, love, truth, terror,

That were the servants to this chosen infant,
Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him: 50

Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine,

His honour and the greatness of his name
Shall be, and make new nations; he shall flourish,

And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches

To all the plains about him; our children's children

Shall see this and bless heaven.

K. Hen. Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England,

An aged princess; many days shall see her,

And yet no day without a deed to crown it.
Would I had known no more! but she must die, 60

She must, the saints must have her, yet a virgin;

A most unspotted lily shall she pass
To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her.

K. Hen. O lord archbishop!

Thou hast made me now a man: never, before

This happy child, did I get any thing.

This oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me,
That, when I am in heaven, I shall desire

To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.

I thank ye all. To you, my good lord mayor, 70

And your good brethren, I am much beholding;

I have receiv'd much honour by your presence,

And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way, lords:
 Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye;
 She will be sick else. This day, no man think
 Has business at his house; for all shall stay:
 This little one shall make it holiday.

Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

'T is ten to one this play can never please
 All that are here: some come to take their ease,
 And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,

We have frighted with our trumpets; so 't is clear
They'll say 't is naught: others, to hear the city
Abus'd extremely, and to cry 'That 's witty!'
Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,
All the expected good we're like to hear
For this play, at this time, is only in
The merciful construction of good women; 10
For such a one we show'd 'em: if they smile
And say 't will do, I know, within a while
All the best men are ours; for 't is ill hap
If they hold when their ladies bid 'em clap.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

INTERPRETED in the light of to-day, Troilus and Cressida may justly be regarded as one of the greatest peace documents in all literature. Drawing its materials either immediately or remotely from the greatest and most widely diffused war epic of the world, it boldly strips from the brow of every hero his wreath of glory and makes the argument of the war itself a thing of open shame. The fact that the play was never acted during Shakespeare's lifetime and that it still remains practically unknown both to the stage and to the general reader, is sufficient evidence that in writing it Shakespeare was serving primarily some purpose of his own, and that he deliberately chose to sacrifice the applause of the moment to the more enlightened judgment of posterity. What that purpose was, still remains a puzzle to the critics. Whether we are right in assuming that Shakespeare had a vision of the disaster that must ensue to a civilization which, while nominally Christian, still persisted in the worship of pagan gods, the idolatry of pagan heroes, and the pursuit of pagan ideals, only the reader of the play can determine.

The play is obviously an interweaving of two stories: the one, the siege of Troy; the other, the so-called love story of Troilus and Cressida. With the story of Troy, Shakespeare had doubtless been familiar from his Stratford school days; the story of Troilus and Cressida he later learned from Chaucer. Both of these stories were almost universally known and in a variety of versions. The play gives evidence of Shakespeare's familiarity with the story of Troy, not only as told by Homer, where the heroism of the Greeks is extolled over that of the Trojans, but also in its mediaeval versions, in which the Trojans are extolled above the Greeks. The fact that the English traced with particular pride their ancestry to the Trojans, afforded Shakespeare a splendid opportunity, had he chosen to avail himself of it, for making this play appeal strongly to the patriotic pride of his countrymen. But there is no extolling here of either Greeks or Trojans. Instead, Shakespeare uses Thersites, a character which he found in Homer, as the sewer through which he empties his contempt on the whole enterprise and all connected with it.

Even the Troilus and Cressida story becomes here a story not of love, but of lust. No one who reads with attention the second scene of Act III can be for a moment deceived into thinking that Troilus is in love with Cressida. And as for Cressida, Ulysses sees through her at a glance. Their story is a fit accompaniment to a tale of "glorious war."

That Shakespeare had long reflected on the Troy story is evidenced by his frequent allusions to it in other plays, but more particularly by his extended treatment of the painting of the siege in his early poem, Lucrece. To Lucrece, as she looks upon the picture, he ascribes these words:

"Show me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear.
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear."

This reference to Paris does not indicate that Shakespeare at the age of thirty felt constrained from patriotic motives to extol the Trojans. Not only does he fix upon them responsibility for the war, but he proceeds thence to question war in general:

"Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many moe?
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so;
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe:
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?"

Here already is revealed the spirit in which Shakespeare had determined to deal some day with the siege of Troy—and through Troy, with all war. For ten years he waited for the thought to ripen, and then he wrote Troilus and Cressida.

It is apparent that Shakespeare's purpose in writing the play could never have been realized without the help of Thersites. No other character in the play combines the intellectual perception, the privilege and the propensity for railing that would have afforded him an outlet for expressing his own opinion in fitting and unmistakable language. Thersites is one of Shakespeare's most wonderful creations. He is so repulsive that we would gladly exonerate Shakespeare from any responsibility for his utterances; and yet he is so everlastingly right in his estimate of men and events, so contemptuous of brute force as a substitute for intelligence, that we cannot escape the conviction that he is serving Shakespeare himself an excellent turn. To him, Achilles and Ajax are "draught oxen" driven by Ulysses and old Nestor and made to "plough up the wars." "To, Achilles! to, Ajax! to!" From their commander down, all are fools to Thersites: "Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive."

We should give less heed to Thersites were he not supported in his judgments by the wisest counselors of both the Greeks and Trojans. Ulysses in his description of Achilles "on his press'd bed lolling," laughing at the "scurril jests" of Patroclus, justifies Thersites' estimate. Both Nestor and Ulysses reveal their own duplicity and craft as well as their contempt for the intelligence of either Ajax or Achilles by the way in which they work them each against the other with the sole purpose of making all possible use of their brute strength. Surely Thersites was justified in calling them "draught oxen."

Furthermore, Thersites' opinion is justified by the Trojans themselves. In Act II, Scene 2, Priam and his sons discuss the Greeks' proposal to strike off all damage resulting from the war if Helen be surrendered up. Hector counsels "Let Helen go." Troilus and Paris oppose. Pressed for reasons, Troilus exclaims:

"Nay, if we talk of reason,
Let's shut our gates and sleep: manhood and honour
Should have hare hearts, would they but fat their thoughts
With this cramm'd reason."

Reason, then, has no place in determining war; honor and courage are above reason. At last Hector, although insisting that the

"moral laws
Of nature and of nations speak aloud
To have her back returned,"

yet proposes to continue the fight,

"For 't is a cause that hath no mean dependence
Upon our joint and several dignities."

Upon which Troilus exclaims:

"Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:
Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence."

This, then, is why "so many fall." The "moral laws of nature and of nations" are set aside when the theme is one of "honour and renown" and when there is hope that through "valiant and magnanimous deeds" fame may "in time to come canonize us."

Thersites is right: this is a game only for fools. Surely the time has come for a wide and careful reading of Shakespeare's most pertinent message to our day, Troilus and Cressida.

PROLOGUE.

In Troy there lies the scene. From isles of Greece

The princes orgulous, their high blood chaf'd,

Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Fraught with the ministers and instruments

Of cruel war: sixty and nine, that wore Their crownets regal, from the Athenian bay

Put forth towards Phrygia; and their vow is made

To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures

The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen, With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.

To Tenedos they come, And the deep-drawing barks do there

disgorge Their war-like fraughtage: now on Dardan

Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits

On one and other side, Trojan and Greek, Sets all on hazard. And hither am I come

A prologue arm'd, but not in confidence

Of author's pen or actor's voice, but suited

In like conditions as our argument, To tell you, fair beholders, that our play

war.

ACT I

SCENE I.—Troy. Before PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter TROILUS armed, and PANDARUS.

Tro. Call here my varlet, I 'll unarm

again: Why should I war without the walls of Troy,

That find such cruel battle here within? Each Trojan that is master of his heart,

Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none. Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength,

Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;

But I am weaker than a woman's tear, Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance,

10 Less valiant than the virgin in the night, And skillless as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no further. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must needs tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried? Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting. Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening. 20

Tro. Still have I tarried. Pan. Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet

in the word 'hereafter' the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,

Doth lesser blench at sufferance than I do. At Priam's royal table do I sit;

And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—

So, traitor! 'when she comes!' When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee: when my heart,

As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain, Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,

I have, as when the sun doth light a storm, Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile;

But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladness,

Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's, well, go to, there were no more comparison between the women: but for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her; but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did: I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit, but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd,

Reply not in how many fathoms deep

They lie indrench'd. I tell thee I am mad In Cressid's love: thou answer'st, she is fair;

Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice;

Handlest in thy discourse, O! that her hand,

In whose comparison all whites are ink, Writing their own reproach; to whose soft seizure

The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense

Hard as the palm of ploughman: this thou tell'st me,

As true thou tell'st me, when I say I love her;

But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm, Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me

The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in 't. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 't is the better for her; an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus, how now, Pandarus!

Pan. I have had my labour for my travail; ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you: gone between, and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What! art thou angry, Pandarus? what! with me?

Pan. Because she's kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not an she were a black-a-moor; 't is all one to me.

Tro. Say I she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father: let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her. For my part, I'll meddle nor make no more i' the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—
Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—
Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me! I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

Exit PANDARUS. An alarum.

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,

When with your blood you daily paint her thus.

I cannot fight upon this argument; It is too starv'd a subject for my sword.

But Pandarus—O gods! how do you plague me.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar; And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo

As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit. Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,

What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?

Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl: Between our Ilium and where she resides,

Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood;

Ourselves the merchant, and this sailing Pandar

Our doubtful hope, our convoy' and our bark.

Alarum. Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. How now, Prince Troilus! wherefore not a-field?

Tro. Because not there: this woman's answer sorts,

For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Æneas, from the field to-day?

Æne. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Æneas?

Æne. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 't is but a scar to scorn;

Paris is gor'd with Menelaus' horn. Alarum.

Æne. Hark! what good sport is out of town to-day.

Tro. Better at home, if 'would I might' were 'may'.

But to the sport abroad: are you bound thither?

Æne. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we then together. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street.Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.Cres. Who were those went by?Alex. Queen Hecuba and Helen.Cres. And whither go they?Alex. Up to the eastern tower, Whose height commands as subject all the vale,To see the battle. Hector, whose patience is, as a virtue, fix'd, to-day was mov'd:He chid Andromache, and struck his armmourer;And, like as there were husbandry in war,
Before the sun rose he was harness'd light,
And to the field goes he; where every flowerDid, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw 10
In Hector's wrath.Cres. What was his cause of anger?Alex. The noise goes, this: there is among the GreeksA lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;
They call him Ajax.Cres. Good; and what of him?Alex. They say he is a very man per se,
And stands alone.Cres. So do all men; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs. 18*Alex.* This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions: he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant; a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours that his valour is crushed into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of, nor any man an attain but he carries some stain of it. He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every thing, but every thing
so out of joint that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight. 31*Cres.* But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?Alex. They say he yesterday coped Hector in the battle and struck him down; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.Cres. Who comes here?Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.Enter PANDARUS.Cres. Hector's a gallant man. 40*Alex.* As may be in the world, lady.Pan. What's that? what's that?Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid. What do you talk of? Good morrow, Alexander.
How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?Cres. This morning, uncle.Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hector armed and gone ere ye came to Ilium? Helen was not up, was she? 50*Cres.* Hector was gone, but Helen was not up.Pan. Even so: Hector was stirring early.
Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.Pan. Was he angry?Cres. So he says here.Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too: he'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that: and there's Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that too. 61*Cres.* What! is he angry too?Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.Cres. O Jupiter! there's no comparison.Pan. What! not between Troilus and Hector? Do you know a man if you see him?Cres. Ay, if I ever saw him before and knew him.Pan. Well, I say Troilus is Troilus. 70*Cres.* Then you say as I say; for I am sure he is not Hector.Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus in some degrees.Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.Pan. Himself! Alas! poor Troilus, I would he were.Cres. So he is.Pan. Condition, I had gone bare-foot to India.Cres. He is not Hector. 81*Pan.* Himself! no, he's not himself.
Would a' were himself: well, the gods are above; time must friend or end. Well, Troilus, well, I would my heart were in her body. No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.Cres. Excuse me.Pan. He is elder.Cres. Pardon me, pardon me. 89*Pan.* Th' other's not come to't; you shall tell me another tale when th' other's come to't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.Cres. He shall not need it if he have his own.Pan. Nor his qualities.Cres. No matter.Pan. Nor his beauty.Cres. 'T would not become him; his own's better.Pan. You have no judgment, niece:
Helen herself swore th' other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour, for so 'tis I must confess, not brown neither,— 102*Cres.* No, but brown.Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.Pan. So he has. 109*Cres.* Then Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his: he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose. 115

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek indeed. Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him th' other day into the compassed window, and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin,—

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter? 129

Pan. But to prove to you that Helen loves him: she came and puts me her white hand to his cloyen chin—

Cres. Juno have mercy! how came it cloyen?

Pan. Why, you know, 't is dimpled. I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O! he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O! yes, an 't were a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to then. But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,— 141

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you 'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus! why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin: indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess,— 151

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas! poor chin; many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing: Queen Hecuba laughed that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With millstones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run o'er too? 161

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An 't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer? 170

Pan. Quoth she, 'Here's but two-and-fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.'

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that. 'Two-and-fifty hairs,' quoth he, 'and one white: that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons,' 'Jupiter!' quoth she, 'which of these hairs is Paris my husband?' 'The forked one,' quoth he; 'pluck 't out, and give it him.' But there was such laughing, and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed. 182

Cres. So let it now, for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on 't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn 't is true: he will weep you, an 't were a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 't were a nettle against May. 191

A retreat sounded.

Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field. Shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Ilium? good niece, do; sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here; here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely.

I'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by, but mark Troilus above the rest. 200

Cres. Speak not so loud.

ÆNEAS passes over the stage.

Pan. That's Æneas: is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: but mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person. When comes Troilus? I'll show you Troilus anon: if he sees me, you shall see him nod at me. 211

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

HECTOR passes over.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow! Go thy way, Hector! There's a brave man, niece. O brave Hector! Look how he looks! there's a countenance! Is 't not a brave man?

Cres. O! a brave man. 220

Pan. Is a' not? It does a man's heart good. Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there: there's no jesting; there's laying on; take 't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

Pan. Swords! any thing, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: by God's lid, it does one's heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris.

PARIS passes over.

Look ye yonder, niece: is't not a gallant man too, is't not? Why, this is brave now. Who said he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now, ha! Would I could see Troilus now! You shall see Troilus anon. 236

HELENUS passes over.

Cres. Who's that?

Pan. That's Helenus. I marvel where Troilus is. That's Helenus. I think he went not forth to-day. That's Helenus. 240

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus? no. Yes, he'll fight indifferent well. I marvel where Troilus is. Hark! do you not hear the people cry 'Troilus'? Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes over.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus. 'T is Troilus! there's a man, niece! Hem! Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace! for shame, peace! 250

Pan. Mark him; note him. O brave Troilus! Look well upon him, niece: look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hacked than Hector's; and how he looks, and how he goes. O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three-and-twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way! Had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris? Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot. 260

Cres. Here come more.

Soldiers pass over.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die i' the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone: crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles, a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel. 271

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. 'Well, well!' Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and so forth, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be baked with no date in the pie, for then the man's date's out. 281

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches. 290

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding, and then it's past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS'S Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where? 299

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come.

Exit Boy.

I doubt he be hurt. Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle?

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token, you are a bawd.

Exit PANDARUS.

Words, vows, gifts, tears, and love's full sacrifice,

He offers in another's enterprise;

But more in Troilus thousand-fold I see 310
Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be.
Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing;
Things won are done; joy's soul lies in the doing:

That she below'd knows nought that knows not this:

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is:

That she was never yet that ever knew
Love got so sweet as when desire did sue.
Therefore this maxim out of love I teach:
Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech:

Then though my heart's content firm love
doth bear, 320

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before AGAMEMNON'S Tent.

Sennet. Enter AGAMEMNON, NESTOR, ULYSSES, MENELAUS, and Others.

Agam. Princes,

What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?

The ample proposition that hope makes

In all designs begun on earth below

Fails in the promis'd largeness: checks and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd;
As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine and divert his grain Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Nor, princes, is it matter new to us 10

That we come short of our suppose so far
That after seven years' siege yet Troy walls stand;

Sith every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim,
And that unbodied figure of the thought That gave't surmised shape. Why then,
you princes,

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our
works,

And think them shames? which are indeed
nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove 20
To find persistive constancy in men:
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love; for then the bold and coward,

The wise and fool, the artist and unread,
The hard and soft, seem all affin'd and kin:

But, in the wind and tempest of her frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away;
And what hath mass or matter, by itself
Lies rich in virtue and unmingled. 30

Nest. With due observance of thy god-like seat,

Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply
Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men: the sea being smooth,

How many shallow bauble boats dare sail
Upon her patient breast, making their way
With those of nobler bulk!

But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage
The gentle Thetis, and anon behold
The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut, 40

Bounding between the two moist elements,
Like Perseus' horse: where's then the saucy boat

Whose weak untimber'd sides but even
now

Co-rival'd greatness? Either to harbour fled,

Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so Doth valour's show and valour's worth divide

In storms of fortune; for in her ray and brightness

The herd hath more annoyance by the brize

Than by the tiger; but when the splitting
wind

Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, 50
And flies fled under shade, why then, the thing of courage,

As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,

And with an accent tun'd in self-same key,
Retorts to chiding fortune.

Ulyss. Agamemnon,
Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece,

Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit,
In whom the tempers and the minds of all
Should be shut up, hear what Ulysses
speaks.

Besides the applause and approbation
The which, To AGAMEMNON. most mighty for thy place and sway, 60

To NESTOR. And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,

I give to both your speeches, which were such

As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece Should hold up high in brass; and such
again

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver, Should with a bond of air, strong as the axletree

On which heaven rides, knit all the Greek-ish ears

To his experienc'd tongue, yet let it please
both,

Thou great, and wise, to hear Ulysses speak, Agam. Speak, Prince of Ithaca; and be't of less expect 70

That matter needless, of importless burden,
Divide thy lips, than we are confident,
When rank Thersites opes his mastick jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,

And the great Hector's sword had lack'd
a master,

But for these instances.

The specialty of rule hath been neglected:
And, look, how many Grecian tents do
stand

Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions. 80

When that the general is not like the hive
To whom the foragers shall all repair,

What honey is expected? Degree being vizarded,

The unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.

The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre

Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,

Office, and custom, in all line of order:
And therefore is the glorious planet Sol

In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd 80
Amidst the other; whose medicinal eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,

And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check to good and bad: but when the planets

In evil mixture to disorder wander,
What plagues, and what portents, what mutiny,

What raging of the sea, shaking of earth,
Commotion in the winds, frights, changes,
horrors,

Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states 100

Quite from their fixure! O! when degree is shak'd,

Which is the ladder to all high designs,
The enterprise is sick. How could communities,

Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,

Peaceful commerce from dividable shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,

Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentic place?

Take but degree away, untune that string,

And, hark! what discord follows; each thing meets 110

In mere oppugnancy: the bounded waters Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,

And make a sop of all this solid globe: Strength should be lord of imbecility, And the rude son should strike his father dead:

Force should be right; or rather, right and wrong,

Between whose endless jar justice resides, Should lose their names, and so should justice too.

Then every thing includes itself in power, Power into will, will into appetite; 120

And appetite, an universal wolf, So doubly seconded with will and power, Must make perforce an universal prey, And last eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,

This chaos, when degree is suffocate, Follows the choking.

And this neglect of degree it is That by a pace goes backward, in a purpose It hath to climb. The general's disdain'd By him one step below, he by the next, 130 That next by him beneath; so every step, Exemplary by the first pace that is sick Of his superior, grows to an envious fever Of pale and bloodless emulation:

And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot, Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,

Troy in our weakness lives, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd

The fever whereof all our power is sick. Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses, 140

What is the remedy?

Ulyss. The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns

The sinew and the forehand of our host, Having his ear full of his airy fame, Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent Lies mocking our designs. With him

Patroclus Upon a lazy bed the livelong day

Breaks scurril jests,

And with ridiculous and awkward action, Which, slanderer, he imitation calls, 150

He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon,

Thy topless deputation he puts on,

And, like a strutting player, whose conceit Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich

To hear the wooden dialogue and sound 'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,—

Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,

'Tis like a chime a-mending; with terms unsquar'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd, 160

Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling, From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;

Cries 'Excellent! 'tis Agamemnon just.

Now play me Nestor; hem, and stroke thy beard,

As he being dress'd to some oration.'

That's done; as near as the extremest ends Of parallels, as like as Vulcan and his wife: Yet god Achilles still cries 'Excellent!'

'Tis Nestor right. Now play him me, Patroclus, 170

Arming to answer in a night alarm.'

And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age Must be the scene of mirth; to cough and spit,

And with a palsy-fumbling on his gorget, Shake in and out the rivet: and at this sport Sir Valour dies; cries 'O! enough, Patroclus,

Or give me ribs of steel; I shall split all In pleasure of my spleen.' And in this fashion,

All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes, Severals and generals of grace exact, 180 Achievements, plots, orders, preventions, Excitements to the field, or speech for truce, Success or loss, what is or is not, serves As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain, Who, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns With an imperial voice, many are infect. Ajax is grown self-will'd, and bears his head

In such a rein, in full as proud a place As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him; 190

Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war,

Bold as an oracle, and sets Thersites, A slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint,

To match us in comparisons with dirt;

To weaken and discredit our exposure, How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;

Count wisdom as no member of the war; Forestall prescience, and esteem no act But that of hand: the still and mental parts, 200

That do contrive how many hands shall strike,

When fitness calls them on, and know by measure

Of their observant toil the enemies' weight,—

Why, this hath not a finger's dignity.

They call this bed-work, mappery, closet-war;

So that the ram that batters down the wall, For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,

They place before his hand that made the engine,

Or those that with the fineness of their souls

By reason guide his execution. 210

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse Makes many Thetis' sons. A tucket.
Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.
Men. From Troy.

Enter ÆNEAS.
Agam. What would you fore our tent?
Æne. Is this great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?
Agam. Even this.
Æne. May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?
Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm
Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
Call Agamemnon head and general.
Æne. Fair leave and large security. How may
A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. How!
Æne. Ay;
I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phœbus.
Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?
Agam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonair, un-arm'd,
As bending angels; that's their fame in peace;
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Jove's accord,
Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Æneas!

Peace, Trojan! lay thy finger on thy lips. 240
The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If that the prais'd himself bring the praise forth;
But what the repining enemy commends,
That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Æneas?
Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.
Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?
Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.
Agam. He hears nought privately that comes from Troy.
Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him: 250

I bring a trumpet to awake his ear,
To set his sense on the attentive bent,
And then to speak.
Agam. Speak frankly as the wind:
It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour;
That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

Æne. Trumpet, blow loud,

Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud.
Trumpet sounds.
We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy 260
A prince call'd Hector, Priam is his father,
Who in this dull and long-continued truce
Is rusty grown: he bade me take a trumpet,
And to this purpose speak: Kings, princes, lords!

If there be one among the fair'st of Greece
That holds his honour higher than his ease,
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril,
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear,
That loves his mistress more than in confession, 269
With truant vows to her own lips he loves,
And dare avow her beauty and her worth
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.

Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it.
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,
Midway between your tents and walls of Troy,

To rouse a Grecian that is true in love:
If any come, Hector shall honour him; 280
If none, he'll say in Troy when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sunburnt, and not worth

The splinter of a lance. Even so much.
Agam. This shall be told our lovers,
Lord Æneas;

If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home: but we are soldiers;
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he. 290

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd: he is old now;

But if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his love, tell him from me
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brawn;

And, meeting him, will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste
As may be in the world: his youth in flood,
I'll pawn this truth with my three drops of blood. 301

Æne. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth!

Ulyss. Amen.
Agam. Fair Lord Æneas, let me touch your hand;
To our pavilion shall I lead you first.
Achilles shall have word of this intent;

So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent:

Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

Exeunt all but ULYSSES and NESTOR.

Ulyss. Nestor! 310

Nest. What says Ulysses?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain;

Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is 't?

Ulyss. This 't is:

Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded pride

That hath to this maturity blown up

In rank Achilles must or now be cropp'd,

Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,

To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how? 320

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,

However it is spread in general name,

Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,

Whose grossness little characters sum up:

And, in the publication, make no strain,

But that Achilles, were his brain as barren

As banks of Libya, though, Apollo knows,

'T is dry enough, will, with great speed of judgment,

Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose 330
Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you?

Nest. Yes, 't is most meet: whom may you else oppose,

That can from Hector bring his honour off,
If not Achilles? Though 't be a sportful combat,

Yet in the trial much opinion dwells;

For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute

With their fin'st palate: and trust to me,
Ulysses,

Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd

In this wild action; for the success, 340

Although particular, shall give a scantling

Of good or bad unto the general;

And in such indexes, although small pricks

To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant mass

Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd

He that meets Hector issues from our choice;

And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,

Makes merit her election, and doth boil,

As 't were from forth us all, a man distill'd 350

Out of our virtues; who miscarrying,

What heart receives from hence the conquering part,

To steel a strong opinion to themselves?

Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,

In no less working than are swords and bows

Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech:

Therefore 't is meet Achilles meet not Hector.

Let us like merchants show our foulest wares,

And think perchance they'll sell; if not, 360

The lustre of the better yet to show

Shall show the better. Do not consent

That ever Hector and Achilles meet;

For both our honour and our shame in this

Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are they?

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,

Were he not proud, we all should wear with him:

But he already is too insolent;

And we were better parch in Afric sun 370

Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,

Should he 'scape Hector fair: if he were foil'd,

Why then we did our main opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No; make a lottery;

And by device let blockish Ajax draw

The sort to fight with Hector: among ourselves

Give him allowance as the worthier man,

For that will physic the great Myrmidon

Who broils in loud applause; and make him fall

His crest that prouder than blue Iris bends.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off, 381

We'll dress him up in voices: if he fail,

Yet go we under our opinion still

That we have better men. But, hit or miss,

Our project's life this shape of sense assumes:

Ajax employ'd plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,

Now I begin to relish thy advice;

And I will give a taste of it forthwith

To Agamemnon: go we to him straight. 390

Two curs shall tame each other; pride alone

Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 't were their bone. Exeunt.

ACT II

SCENE I.—A Part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

Ajax. Thersites!

Ther. Agamemnon, how if he had boils? full, all over, generally?

Ajax. Thersites!

Ther. And those boils did run? say so: did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core?

Ajax. Dog!

Ther. Then would come some matter from him: I see none now. 10

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear? Feel then. Strikes him.

Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak then, thou vinewen'd'st leaven, speak: I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: but I think thy horse will sooner can an oration than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murrain o' thy jade's tricks! 21

Ajax. Toadstool, learn me the proclamation.

Ther. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strikeme thus?

Ajax. The proclamation!

Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porpentine, do not: my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the loathsome scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou striketh as slow as another. 33

Ajax. I say, the proclamation!

Ther. Thou grumblest and raillest every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou barkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!

Ther. Thou should'st strike him. 40

Ajax. Cobloaf!

Ther. He would pun thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. You whoreson cur! Beating him.

Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!

Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assinego may tutor thee, thou scurvy-valiant ass! thou art here but to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!

Ajax. You dog!

Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ajax. You cur!

Ther. Mars his idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do. 59

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax! wherefore do you thus? How now, Thersites! what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. 'Well!' why, so I do.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him; for, whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax. 70

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have bobbed his brain more than he has beat my bones; I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord,

Achilles, Ajax, who wears his wit in his belly and his guts in his head, I'll tell you what I say of him. 81

Achil. What?

Ther. I say, this Ajax—

Ajax offers to strike him.

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool! 89

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look you there.

Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame it.

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl go learn me the tenour of the proclamation, and he rails upon me. 100

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 't was not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. E'en so; a great deal of your wit too lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch if he knock out either of your brains: a' were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. 112

Achil. What! with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses, and old Nestor, whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on their toes, yoke you like draught-oxen and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth: to Achilles! to, Ajax! to! 120

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'T is no matter; I shall speak as much as thou afterwords.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace!

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring and leave the faction of fools. Exit. 131

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaim'd through all our host:

That Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun, Will with a trumpet 'twixt our tents and Troy

To-morrow morning call some knight to arms

That hath a stomach; and such a one that dare

Maintain—I know not what: 't is trash.

Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not: 'tis put to lottery;
 otherwise 140
He knew his man.
Ajax. O! meaning you. I will go learn more of it. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Troy. A room in Priam's Palace.

Enter PRIAM, HECTOR, TROILUS, PARIS, and HELENUS.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,
 Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:

'Deliver Helen, and all damage else,
 As honour, loss of time, travail, expense,
 Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consum'd

In hot digestion of this cormorant war,
 Shall be struck off.' Hector, what say you to 't?

Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,

As far as toucheth my particular,
 Yet, dread Priam, 10

There is no lady of more softer bowels,
 More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,
 More ready to cry out 'Who knows what follows?'

Than Hector is. The wound of peace is surety,

Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
 The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches

To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
 Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand dismes,

Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours; 20

If we have lost so many tenths of ours,
 To guard a thing not ours nor worth to us,
 Had it our name, the value of one ten,
 What merit 's in that reason which denies
 The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie, my brother,
 Weigh you the worth and honour of a king
 So great as our dread father in a scale
 Of common ounces? will you with counters sum

The past proportion of his infinite?
 And buckle in a waist most fathomless 30

With spans and inches so diminutive
 As fears and reasons? fie, for godly shame!

Hel. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,

You are so empty of them. Should not our father

Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,

Because your speech hath none that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;

You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:

You know an enemy intends you harm;

You know a sword employ'd is perilous, 40
 And reason flies the object of all harm:
 Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds
 A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
 The very wings of reason to his heels,
 And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
 Or like a star disorb'd? Nay, if we talk of reason,

Let's shut our gates and sleep: manhood and honour

Should have hare-hearts, would they but fat their thoughts

With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect

Make livers pale and lustihood deject. 50

Hect. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost
 The holding.

Tro. What is aught but as 't is valued?

Hect. But value dwells not in particular will;

It holds his estimate and dignity
 As well wherein 't is precious of itself

As in the prizer. 'Tis mad idolatry
 To make the service greater than the god;

And the will dotes that is inclinable
 To what infectiously itself affects,

Without some image of the affected merit. 60

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
 Is led on in the conduct of my will;

My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
 Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores

 Of will and judgment. How may I avoid,

Although my will distaste what it elected,
 The wife I chose? there can be no evasion

To blench from this and to stand firm by honour.

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant

When we have soil'd them, nor the remainder viands 70

We do not throw in unrespective sieve,
 Because we now are full. It was thought meet

Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:

Your breath of full consent bellied his sails;
 The seas and winds, old wranglers, took a truce

 And did him service: he touch'd the ports

desir'd,
 And for an old aunt whom the Greeks held captive,

 He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness

Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes stale the morning.

Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt: 80

Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,
 Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,

And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.

If you'll avouch 't was wisdom Paris went,
 As you must needs, for you all cried 'Go, go';

If you'll confess he brought home noble prize,

As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands
And cried 'Inestimable!' why do you now
The issue of your proper wisdoms rate,
And do a deed that Fortune never did, 90
Beggars the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea and land? O! theft most base,
That we have stol'n what we do fear to keep:
But thieves unworthy of a thing so stol'n,
That in their country did them that disgrace
We fear to warrant in our native place.
Cas. Within. Cry, Trojans, cry!
Pri. What noise? what shriek?
Tro. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voice.
Cas. Within. Cry, Trojans!
Hect. It is Cassandra. 100

Enter CASSANDRA, raving.
Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.
Hect. Peace, sister, peace!
Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled eld,
Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of moan to come.
Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears!
Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilion stand;
Our frebrand brother, Paris, burns us all. 110
Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen and a woe!
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go.
Exit.

Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains
Of divination in our sister work
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot that no discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?
Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it,
Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures 122
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons;
And Jove forbid there should be done amongst us
Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain.
Par. Else might the world convince of levity 130
As well my undertakings as your counsels;
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project:
For what, alas! can these my single arms?
What propugnation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,

And had as ample power as I have will, 140
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.
Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights;
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant is no praise at all.
Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasure such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.
What treason were it to the ransack'd queen, 150
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up
On terms of base compulsion! Can it be
That so degenerate a strain as this Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?
There's not the meanest spirit on our party
Without a heart to dare or sword to draw
When Helen is defended, nor none so noble
Whose life were ill bestow'd or death unfam'd
Where Helen is the subject: then, I say, 160
Well may we fight for her whom, we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.
Hect. Paris and Troilus, you have both said well;
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glaz'd, but superficially; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy.
The reasons you allege do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood
Than to make up a free determination 170
'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure and revenge
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves
All dues be render'd to their owners: now,
What nearer debt in all humanity
Than wife is to the husband? If this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great minds, of partial indulgence
To their benumbed wills, resist the same,
There is a law in each well-order'd nation
To curb those raging appetites that are 181
Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen then be wife to Sparta's king,
As it is known she is, these moral laws
Of nature and of nations speak aloud
To have her back return'd; thus to persist
In doing wrong extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion
Is this, in way of truth; yet, nevertheless,
My spritely brethren, I propend to you 190
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 't is a cause that hath no mean dependence
Upon our joint and several dignities.
Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design;
Were it not glory that we more affected

Than the performance of our heaving spleens,

I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,

She is a theme of honour and renown, A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds, 200 Whose present courage may beat down our foes,

And fame in time to come canonize us; For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose So rich advantage of a promis'd glory As smiles upon the forehead of this action For the wide world's revenue.

Hect. I am yours, You valiant offspring of great Priamus. I have a roisting challenge sent amongst The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits. 210

I was advertis'd, their great general slept Whilst emulation in the army crept: This, I presume, will wake him. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before ACHILLES' Tent.
Enter THERSITES.

Ther. How now, Thersites! what! lost in the labyrinth of thy fury. Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me. 'Sfoot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles, a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O! thou great thunder-darter of Olympus; forget that thou art Jove the king of gods, and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy caduceus, if ye take not that little, little, less than little wit from them that they have; which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or rather, the Neapolitan bone-ache! for that, methinks, is the curse dependent on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers, and, devil Envy, say Amen. What ho! my Lord Achilles! 24

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites! Good Thersites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit thou would'st not have slipped out of my contemplation: but it is no matter; thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if she that lays thee out says thou art a fair corpse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon 't she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen. Where's Achilles?

Patr. What! art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay; the heavens hear me! 40

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where? Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come, what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles. Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites. Then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself? 50

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus. Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou may'st tell that knowest.

Achil. O! tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool! I have not done. 60

Achil. He is a privileged man. Proceed, Thersites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Thersites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this, come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive. 70

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand to the Creator. It suffices me thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody. Come in with me, Thersites. Exit.

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold and a whore: a good quarrel to draw emulous factions and bleed to death upon. Now, the dry serpigo on the subject! and war and lechery confound all! Exit. 82

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and AJAX.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent; but ill dispos'd. my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here.

He shent our messengers; and we lay by Our apertaintments, visiting of him:

Let him be told so; lest perchance he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. Exit. 90

Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent: He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 't is pride: but why, why? let him show us a cause. A word, my lord. Takes AGAMEMNON aside.

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him. 100

Nest. Who, Thersites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No, you see, he is his argument that has his argument, Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their faction is more our wish than their faction: but it was a strong composure a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie. Here comes Patroclus. 111

Nest. No Achilles with him?

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry,

If any thing more than your sport and pleasure

Did move your greatness and this noble state

To call upon him; he hopes it is no other But for your health and your digestion sake, 120

An after-dinner's breath.

Agam. Hear you, Patroclus; We are too well acquainted with these answers:

But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn,

Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath, and much the reason

Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues, Not virtuously on his own part beheld,

Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss, Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish,

Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him, We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin 121

If you do say we think him over-proud And under-honest, in self-assumption greater

Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on,

Disguise the holy strength of their command,

And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch

His pettish luns, his ebbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action 140

Rode on his tide. Go tell him this, and add, That if he overhold his price so much,

We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine

Not portable, lie under this report: 'Bring action hither, this cannot go to war';

A stirring dwarf we do allowance give Before a sleeping giant; tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently. Exit.

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied;

We come to speak with him. Ulysses, enter you. Exit ULYSSES.

Ajax. What is he more than another? 151

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable. 160

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind is the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud eats up himself; pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads. 170

Nest. Aside. Yet he loves himself: is't not strange?

Re-enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field tomorrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none, But carries on the stream of his dispose Without observance or respect of any,

In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not upon our fair request

Untent his person and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only,

He makes important: possess'd he is with greatness, 180

And speaks not to himself but with a pride That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd

worth

Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse,

That 'twixt his mental and his active parts Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages

And batters 'gainst itself: what should I say?

He is so plagu' proud that the death-tokens of it

Cry 'No recovery.'

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent: 'T is said he holds you well, and will be led 190

At your request a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon! let it not be so. We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes

When they go from Achilles: shall the proud lord

That bastes his arrogance with his own seam,

And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts, save such as do revolve
And ruminate himself, shall he be worshipp'd

Of that we hold an idol more than he? 199
No, this thrice-worthy and right valiant lord
Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;
Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is,
By going to Achilles:
That were to enlard his fat already pride,
And add more coals to Cancer when he
burns

With entertaining great Hyperion.
This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid,
And say in thunder 'Achilles, go to him.'

Nest. Aside. O! this is well; he rubs the vein of him. 210

Dio. Aside. And how his silence drinks up this applause!

Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed fist
I'll pash him o'er the face.

Agam. O, no! you shall not go.
Ajax. An a' be proud with me, I'll pheeze his pride.

Let me go to him.
Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!
Nest. Aside. How he describes himself!

Ajax. Can he not be sociable? 220
Ulyss. Aside. The raven chides black-
ness.

Ajax. I'll let his humours blood.
Agam. Aside. He will be the physician that should be the patient.

Ajax. An all men were o' my mind.—
Ulyss. Aside. Wit would be out of fashion.

Ajax. A' should not bear it so, a' should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. Aside. An 't would, you'd carry half. 229

Ulyss. Aside. A' would have ten shares.
Ajax. I will knead him; I'll make him supple.

Nest. Aside. He's not yet through warm: force him with praises: pour in, pour in;
his ambition is dry.

Ulyss. To AGAMEMNON. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.
Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ulyss. Why, 't is this naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—but 'tis before his face; 240
I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?
He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter
thus with us!

Would he were a Trojan!
Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now,—

Ulyss. If he were proud,—
Dio. Or covetous of praise,—

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne,—

Dio. Or strange, or self-affected!

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure;

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee
suck:

Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice-fam'd, beyond all erudition:

But he that disciplin'd thine arms to fight,
Let Mars divide eternity in twain,

And give him half: and, for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield

To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,

Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines 260

Thy spacious and dilated parts: here's Nestor,

Instructed by the antiquary times,
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise;

But pardon, father Nestor, were your days
As green as Ajax' and your brain so tem-per'd,

You should not have the eminence of him.
But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?
Nest. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be rul'd by him, Lord Ajax.
Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the hart Achilles 269

Keeps thicket. Please it our great general
To call together all his state of war;

Fresh kings are come to Troy: to-morrow
We must with all our main of power stand
fast:

And here's a lord,—come knights from east
to west,

And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the
best.

Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles
sleep:

Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks
draw deep. Exeunt.

ACT III

SCENE I.—Troy. PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter PANDARUS and a Servant.

Pan. Friend! you! pray you, a word: do not you follow the young Lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.
Pan. You depend upon him? I mean.

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.
Pan. You depend upon a noble gentleman;
I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!
Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. Faith, sir, superficially. 10
Pan. Friend, know me better. I am the Lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.
Serv. You are in the state of grace.

Pan. Grace! not so, friend; honour and lordship are my titles. Music within.

What music is this?
Serv. I do but partly know, sir: it is music in parts. 11

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.

Pan. Command, I mean, friend.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request do these men play? 31

Serv. That's to 't, indeed, sir. Marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who's there in person; with him the mortal Venus, the heartblood of beauty, love's invisible soul.

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen: could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a complimentary assault upon him, for my business seethes. 43

Serv. Sudden business: there's a stewed phrase, indeed.

Enter PARIS and HELEN, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them! especially to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow! 49

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen. Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Par. You have broke it, cousin; and, by my life, you shall make it whole again: you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance. Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O, sir!

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude. 60

Par. Well said, my lord! Well, you say so in fits.

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen. My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me. But, marry, thus, my lord: my dear lord and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus.— 70

Helen. My Lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to: commends himself most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody: if you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen! that's a sweet queen, i' faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sour offence. 80

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la! Nay, I care not for such words; no, no. And, my lord, he desires you, that if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My Lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen, my very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to-night? 90

Helen. Nay, but, my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen? My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposer Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter; you are wide. Come, your disposer is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick. 101

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy? Come, give me an instrument. Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twain. 111

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this. I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, prithee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid! 120

Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, i' faith.

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so. Sings.

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, O! love's bow

Shoots buck and doe:

The shaft confounds,

Not that it wounds,

But tickles still the sore. 130

These lovers cry O! O! they die!

Yet that which seems the wound to kill,

Doth turn O! O! to ha! ha! he!

So dying love lives still:

O! O! a while, but ha! ha! ha!

O! O! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Heigh-ho!

Helen. In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the nose. 139

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds? Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-day, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not? 151

Helen. He hangs the lip at something: you know all, Lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen. I long to hear how they sped to-day. You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece. 159

Pan. I will, sweet queen. Exit.

A retreat sounded.

Par. They're come from field: let us to Priam's hall

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you

To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles,

With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd,

Shall more obey than to the edge of steel Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings,—disarm great Hector.

Helen. 'T will make us proud to be his servant, Paris;

Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty Gives us more palm in beauty than we have, 170

Yea, overshines ourself.

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. PANDARUS'S Orchard.

Enter PANDARUS and TROILUS'S Boy, meeting.

Pan. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Boy. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. O! here he comes. How now, how now!

Pan. Sirrah, walk off. Exit Boy.

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,

Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks 10

Staying for waftage. O! be thou my Charon, And give me swift transportance to those fields

Where I may wallow in the lily-beds Propos'd for the deserver. O gentle Pandarus!

From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,

And fly with me to Cressid.

Pan. Walk here i' the orchard. I'll bring her straight. Exit.

Tro. I am giddy, expectation whirls me round.

The imaginary relish is so sweet 20
That it enchants my sense. What will it be When that the watery palate tastes indeed Love's thrice repured nectar? death, I fear me,

Swooning destruction, or some joy too fine, Too subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness

For the capacity of my ruder powers: I fear it much: and I do fear besides That I shall lose distinction in my joys; As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps The enemy flying. 30

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. She's making her ready; she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were frayed with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath so short as a new-ta'en sparrow. Exit.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom: My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;

And all my powers do their bestowing lose, Like vassalage at unawares encountering 40 The eye of majesty.

Re-enter PANDARUS with CRESSIDA.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby. Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me. What! are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways: an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills. Why do you not speak to her? Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day! how loath you are to offend daylight; and 't were dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress. How now! a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' the river: go to, go to. 58
Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds; but she'll bereave you o' the deeds too if she call your activity in question. What! billing again? Here's 'In witness whereof the parties interchangeably'—Come in, come in: I'll go get a fire. Exit.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O Cressida! how often have I wished me thus.

Cres. Wished, my lord! The gods grant,—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption? What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love? 71

Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils of cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: to fear the worst oft cures the worse. 79

Tro. O! let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrosity in love, lady, that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit. 90

Cres. They say all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions and the act of hares, are they not monsters? 96

Tro. Are there such? such are not we. Praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare till merit crown it. No perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert before his birth, and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what envy can say worst shall be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truest not truer than Troilus. 106

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What! blushing still? have you not done talking yet? 110

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me. Be true to my lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word, and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too. Our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant being won: they are burrs, I can tell you: they'll stick where they are thrown. 120

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart.

Prince Troilus, I have loved you night and day

For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord,

With the first glance that ever—pardon me—

If I confess much you will play the tyrant. I love you now; but not, till now, so much

But I might master it: in faith, I lie; My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown 130

Too headstrong for their mother. See, we fools!

Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us

When we are so unsecret to ourselves?

But, though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not;

And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man, Or that we women had men's privilege Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue;

For in this rapture I shall surely speak The thing I shall repent. See, see! your silence,

Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws 140

My very soul of counsel. Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Pan. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me;

'T was not my purpose thus to beg a kiss: I am asham'd: O heavens! what have I done!

For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid!

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning,— 150

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try.

I have a kind of self resides with you; But an unkind self, that itself will leave, To be another's fool. Where is my wit? I would be gone. I speak I know not what.

Tro. Well know they what they speak that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more craft than love, 160

And fell so roundly to a large confession, To angle for your thoughts; but you are wise,

Or else you love not, for to be wise and love Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

Tro. O! that I thought it could be in a woman,

As if it can I will presume in you, To feed for aye her lamp and flames of love;

To keep her constancy in plight and youth, Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind 169 That doth renew swifter than blood decays: Or that persuasion could but thus convince me,

That my integrity and truth to you Might be affronted with the match and weight

Of such a winnow'd purity in love; How were I then uplifted! but, alas! I am as true as truth's simplicity, And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight! When right with right wars who shall be most right.

True swains in love shall in the world to come

Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rimes, 181

Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes, truth tir'd with iteration,
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
'As true as Troilus' shall crown up the verse
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth, 191
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,

And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing, yet let memory,
From false to false, among false maids in love,

Upbraid my falsehood! when they've said
'as false

As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf, 200
Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son,'
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
'As false as Cressid.'

Pan. Go to, a bargain made; seal it, seal it: I'll be the witness. Here I hold your hand, here my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name; call them all Pandars; let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers-between Pandars! say, amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen. 214

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber with a bed; which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away!
And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens
here

Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear!
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.

*Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES,
NESTOR, AJAX, MENELAUS, and CAL-
CHAS.*

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
The advantage of the time prompts me
aloud

To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind

That through the sight I bear in things to
come,

I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession,

Incurr'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself,
From certain and possess'd conveniences,

To doubtful fortunes; sequestering from me all

That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition

Made tame and most familiar to my nature; 10

And here, to do you service, am become
As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:

I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,

Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

Agam. What would'st thou of us, Trojan? make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor.

Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you, often have you thanks
therefore, 20

Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied; but this
Antenor

I know is such a wrest in their affairs
That their negotiations all must slack,

Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,

In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,

And he shall buy my daughter; and her
presence

Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have 31

What he requests of us. Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:

Withal bring word if Hector will to-morrow
Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and 't is a burden

Which I am proud to bear.

Exeunt DIOMEDES and CALCHAS.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, before their Tent.

Ulys. Achilles stands i' the entrance of his tent:

Please it our general to pass strangely by
him,

As if he were forgot; and, princes all, 40
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:

I will come last. 'T is like he'll question me
Why such unplausive eyes are bent on him:

If so, I have derision medicinable
To use between your strangeness and his
pride,

Which his own will shall have desire to drink.

It may do good: pride hath no other glass
To show itself but pride, for supple knees

Feed arrogance and are the proud man's fees.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on 53

A form of strangeness as we pass along:
So do each lord, and either greet him not,

Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What! comes the general to speak with me?

You know my mind; I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us?

Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?

Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord. 60

Agam. The better.

Exeunt AGAMEMNON and NESTOR.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How do you? how do you? Exit.

Achil. What! does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus!

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. Exit.

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles? 70

Patr. They pass by strangely: they were us'd to bend,

To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
 To come as humbly as they us'd to creep
 To holy altars.

Achil. What! am I poor of late?
 'T is certain, greatness, once fall'n out with fortune,

Must fall out with men too: what the declin'd is

He shall as soon read in the eyes of others
 As feel in his own fall; for men, like butterflies,

Show not their mealy wings but to the summer,

And not a man, for being simply man, 80

Hath any honour, but honour for those honours

That are without him, as place, riches, and favour,

Prizes of accident as oft as merit:

Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,

The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,

Doth one pluck down another, and together

Die in the fall. But 't is not so with me:

Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy

At ample point all that I did possess,

Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find out 90

Something not worth in me such rich beholding

As they have often given. Here is Ulysses:

I'll interrupt his reading.

How now, Ulysses!

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son!

Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here

Writes me:

*That man, how dearly ever parted,
 How much in having, or without, or in,
 Cannot make boast to have that which he
 hath,*

*Nor feels not what he owes but by reflection;
 As when his virtues shining upon others 100
 Heat them, and they retort that heat again
 To the first giver.*

Achil.

This is not strange, Ulysses. The beauty that is borne here in the face The bearer knows not, but commends itself To other' eyes: nor doth the eye itself, That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself, Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd Salutes each other with each other's form; For speculation turns not to itself Till it hath travell'd, and is married there 110 Where it may see itself. This is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position, It is familiar, but at the author's drift; Who in his circumstance expressly proves That no man is the lord of any thing, Though in and of him there be much consisting,

Till he communicate his parts to others: Nor doth he of himself know them for aught Till he behold them form'd in the applause Where they're extended; who, like an arch, reverberates 120

The voice again, or, like a gate of steel Fronting the sun, receives and renders back His figure and his heat. I was much wrapt in this;

And apprehended here immediately The unknown Ajax.

Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse;

That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,

Most abject in regard, and dear in use!

What things, again most dear in the esteem,

And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow, 130

An act that very chance doth throw upon him, Ajax renown'd. O heavens! what some men do,

While some men leave to do.

How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,

While others play the idiots in her eyes!

How one man eats into another's pride,

While pride is fasting in his wantonness!

To see these Grecian lords! why, even already

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast, 140

And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I do believe it; for they pass'd by me

As misers do by beggars, neither gave to me Good word nor look: what! are my deeds forgot?

Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,

Wherein he puts alms for oblivion, A great-siz'd monster of ingratitude:

Those scraps are good deeds past; which are devour'd

As fast as they are made, forgot as soon As done: perseverance, dear my lord, 150

Keeps honour bright: to have done is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
 In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
 For honour travels in a strait so narrow
 Where one but goes abreast: keep then the path;
 For emulation hath a thousand sons
 That one by one pursue: if you give way,
 Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
 Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by.
 And leave you hindmost:
 Or, like a gallant horse fall'n in first rank,
 Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
 O'errun and trampled on: then what they do in present,
 Though less than yours in past, must o'er-top yours;
 For time is like a fashionable host,
 That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand,
 And with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
 Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
 And farewell goes out sighing. O! let not virtue seek Remuneration for the thing it was: 170
 For beauty, wit,
 High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
 Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
 To envious and calumniating time.
 One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,
 That all with one consent praise new-born gawds,
 Though they are made and moulded of things past,
 And give to dust that is a little gilt
 More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.
 The present eye praises the present object: 180
 Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
 That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax;
 Since things in motion sooner catch the eye
 Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
 And still it might, and yet it may again,
 If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,
 And case thy reputation in thy tent;
 Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
 Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
 And drove great Mars to faction.
Achil. Of this my privacy 190
 I have strong reasons.
Ulyss. But 'gainst your privacy
 The reasons are more potent and heroic.
 'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
 With one of Priam's daughters.
Achil. Ha! known!
Ulyss. Is that a wonder?
 The providence that's in a watchful state
 Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold,
 Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps,
 Keeps place with thought, and almost, like the gods,

Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles.
 There is a mystery, with whom relation
 Durst never meddle, in the soul of state,
 Which hath an operation more divine
 Than breath or pen can give expressure to.
 All the commerce that you have had with Troy
 As perfectly is ours as yours, my lord;
 And better would it fit Achilles much
 To throw down Hector than Polyxena;
 But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home,
 When fame shall in our islands sound her trump, 210
 And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing,
 'Great Hector's sister did Achilles win,
 But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.'
 Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak;
 The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.
Exit.
Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd you.
 A woman impudent and mannish grown
 Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man
 In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this:
 They think my little stomach to the war 220
 And your great love to me restrains you thus.
 Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Cupid
 Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
 And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane
 Be shook to air.
Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?
Patr. Ay; and perhaps receive much honour by him.
Achil. I see my reputation is at stake;
 My fame is shrewdly gor'd.
Patr. O! then beware;
 Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves:
 Omission to do what is necessary 230
 Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
 And danger, like an ague, subtly taints
 Even then when we sit idly in the sun.
Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet
Patroclus:
 I'll send the fool to Ajax and desire him
 To invite the Trojan lords after the combat
 To see us here unarm'd. I have a woman's longing,
 An appetite that I am sick withal,
 To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;
 To talk with him and to behold his visage, 240
 Even to my full of view. A labour sav'd!

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. A wonder!
Achil. What?
Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field,
 asking for himself.
Achil. How so?
Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector, and is so prophetically proud of an heroic cudgelling that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be? 250

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock, a stride and a stand; ruminates like an hostess that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning; bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say 'There were wit in this head, an 't would out'; and so there is, but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for if Hector break not his neck i' the combat, he 'll break 't himself in vain-glory. He knows not me: I said 'Good morrow, Ajax'; and he replies 'Thanks, Agamemnon.' What think you of this man that takes me for the general? He's grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. 266

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, Theristes.

Ther. Who, I? why, he 'll answer nobody; he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in 's arms. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax. 273

Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe-conduct for his person of the magnanimous, and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon, et cetera. Do this. 280

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax!

Ther. Hum!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent,—

Ther. Hum!

Patr. And to procure safe-conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon! 290

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to 't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart. 300

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not; but, I am sure, none, unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse, for that's the more capable creature. 310

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd;

And I myself see not the bottom of it.

Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep than such a valiant ignorance. Exit.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—Troy. A Street.

Enter, at one side, ÆNEAS, and Servant with a torch; at the other, PARIS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTENOR, DIOMEDES, and Others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who is that there?

Dei. It is the Lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lie long As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business

Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dio. That's my mind too. Good morrow, Lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas; take his hand:

Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told how Diomed, a whole week by days,

Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir, 10

During all question of the gentle truce;

But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance

As heart can think or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.

Our bloods are now in calm, and, so long, health!

But when contention and occasion meet, By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life

With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly

With his face backward. In humane gentleness, 20

Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises' life,

Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear,

No man alive can love in such a sort

The thing he means to kill more excellently.

Dio. We sympathize. Jove, let Æneas live,

If to my sword his fate be not the glory, A thousand complete courses of the sun!

But, in mine emulous honour, let him die, With every joint a wound, and that to-morrow!

Æne. We know each other well. 30

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most spiteful gentle greeting,

The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.

What business, lord, so early?

Æne. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you: 't was to bring this Greek
To Calchas' house, and there to render him,

For the enfréed Antenor, the fair Cressid.
Let's have your company; or, if you please,

Haste there before us. I constantly do think,

Or rather, call my thought a certain knowledge,

My brother Troilus lodges there to-night:
Rouse him and give him note of our approach,

With the whole quality wherefore: I fear
We shall be much unwelcome.

Ane. That I assure you:
Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece

Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help;
The bitter disposition of the time
Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Ane. Good morrow, all. Exit. 50

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed; faith,
tell me true,

Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,

Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen most,

Myself or Menelaus?

Dio. Both alike:

He merits well to have her that doth seek her,

Not making any scruple of her soilure,
With such a hell of pain and world of charge,

And you as well to keep her that defend her,

Not palating the taste of her dishonour,
With such a costly loss of wealth and friends: 60

He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece;

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors:

Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor more;

But he as he, the heavier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your country-woman.

Dio. She's bitter to her country. Hear me, Paris:

For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple 70

Of her contaminated carrion weight
A Trojan hath been slain. Since she could speak,

She hath not given so many good words

breath
As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do;
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy;

But we in silence hold this virtue well,
We'll but commend what we intend to sell.

Here lies our way. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Court of PANDARUS'S House.

Enter TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down;

He shall unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;

To bed, to bed: sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses
As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good morrow then.

Tro. I prithee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you aware of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ribald

crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer, 10

I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous

wights she stays

As tediously as hell, but flies the grasps of love

With wings more momentary-swift than thought.

You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Prithee, tarry:

You men will never tarry.
O foolish Cressid! I might have still held

off,

And then you would have tarried. Hark!
there's one up.

Pan. Within. What! 's all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle. 20

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:

I shall have such a life!

Enter PANDARUS.

Pan. How now, how now! how go maidenheads?

Here, you maid! where's my cousin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!

You bring me to do—and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what? let her say what: has not slept to-night? would

Cres. Come, come; beshrew your heart!

you'll ne'er be good, 30

Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchia! has not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him! Knocking within.

Cres. Did not I tell you? Would he were knock'd o' the head!

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.

My lord, come you again into my chamber:

You smile and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no such thing. Knocking within. 40
How earnestly they knock! Pray you, come in;

I would not for half Troy have you seen here. Exeunt TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now! what's the matter?

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my Lord Æneas! By my troth, I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Æne. Is not Prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here? 50

Æne. Come, he is here, my lord; do not deny him:

It doth import him much to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know, I'll be sworn: for my own part, I came in late. What should he do here?

Æne. Who! nay, then: come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you're ware. You'll be so true to him, to be false to him. Do not you know of him, but yet go fetch him hither; go.

Re-enter TROILUS.

Tro. How now! what's the matter? 60

Æne. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you.

My matter is so rash: there is at hand Paris your brother, and Deiphobus, The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith, Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour, We must give up to Diomedes' hand The Lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it concluded so?

Æne. By Priam and the general state of Troy:

They are at hand and ready to effect it. 70
Tro. How my achievements mock me! I will go meet them; and, my Lord Æneas, We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Æne. Good, good, my lord; the secrets of nature
Have not more gift in taciturnity.

Exeunt TROILUS and ÆNEAS.

Pan. Is 't possible? no sooner got but lost? The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad. A plague upon Antenor! I would they had broke 's neck!

Re-enter CRESSIDA.

Cres. How now! what's the matter? Who was here? 81

Pan. Ah! ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord? gone! Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods! what's the matter? 88

Pan. Prithee, get thee in. Would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew thou would'st be his death. O poor gentleman! A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you, on my knees I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou'rt chang'd for Antenor. Thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus: 't will be his death; 't will be his bane; he cannot bear it. 99

Cres. O you immortal gods! I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father;

I know no touch of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me As the sweet Troilus. O you gods divine! Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood

If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,

Do to this body what extremes you can; But the strong base and building of my love Is as the very centre of the earth, 110
Drawing all things to it. I'll go in and weep,—

Pan. Do, do.

Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks,
Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart

With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before PANDARUS'S House.

Enter PARIS, TROILUS, ÆNEAS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTENOR, and DIOMEDES.

Par. It is great morning, and the hour prefix'd

Of her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon. Good my brother Troilus, Tell you the lady what she is to do, And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk into her house; I'll bring her to the Grecian presently: And to his hand when I deliver her, Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus A priest there offering to it his own heart. Exit.

Par. I know what 't is to love; 10
And would, as I shall pity, I could help! Please you walk in, my lords. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Room in PANDARUS'S House.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation? The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste, And violenteth in a sense as strong As that which causeth it: how can I moderate it?
If I could temporize with my affection,

Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment could I give my grief:
My love admits no qualifying dross;
No more my grief, in such a precious loss. 10

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes. Ah!
sweet ducks.

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus!

Embracing him.

Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here!
Let me embrace too. O heart, as the goodly saying is,—

—O heart, heavy heart,

Why sigh'st thou without breaking?

where he answers again,

*Because thou canst not ease thy smart
By friendship nor by speaking.* 21

There was never a truer rime. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it. How now, lams!

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity,
That the bless'd gods, as angry with my
fancy,

More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities, take thee
from me.

Cres. Have the gods envy? 30

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 't is too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

Cres. What! and from Troilus too!

Tro. From Troy and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance

Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents
Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows

Even in the birth of our own labouring
breath. 40

We two, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves

With the rude brevity and discharge of one.
Injurious time now with a robber's haste Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how;

As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses
to them,

He fumbles up into a loose adieu,
And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,
Distinguing with the salt of broken tears. 50

Ene. Within. My lord, is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: some say the Genius so

Cries 'Come!' to him that instantly must die.
Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root!

Exit.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woeful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!

When shall we see again?

Tro. Hear me, my love. Be thou but true
of heart,— 60

Cres. I true! how now! what wicked deem is this?

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,

For it is parting from us:

I speak not 'be thou true,' as fearing thee,
For I will throw my glove to Death himself,

That there's no maculation in thy heart;
But 'be thou true,' say I, to fashion in
My sequent protestation; be thou true,

And I will see thee.

Cres. O! you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers 70

As infinite as imminent; but I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger.
Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens! 'be true' again!

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love:

The Grecian youths are full of quality;
Their loving well compos'd with gift of nature,

Flowing and swelling o'er with arts and exercise; 80

How novelties may move, and parts with
person,

Alas! a kind of godly jealousy,
Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin,
Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain then!

In this I do not call your faith in question
So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant: 90

But I can tell that in each grace of these
There lurks a still and dumb-discoursive devil

That tempts most cunningly. But be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.

But something may be done that we will not;
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves

When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeable potency. 99

Ene. Within. Nay good, my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. Within. Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;

And bring Aeneas and the Grecian with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas! it is my vice, my fault;
Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,

I with great truth catch mere simplicity;

Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit
Is 'plain and true'; there's all the reach of it. 110

Enter ÆNEAS, PARIS, ANTEOR, DEIPHOBUS, and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! Here is the lady Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand.
And by the way possess thee what she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek.

If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Ilion.

Dio. Fair Lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:

The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek, 120

Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,

To shame the seal of my petition to thee
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee use her well, even for my charge;

For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O! be not mov'd, Prince Troilus.
Let me be privileg'd by my place and message 132

To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I'll answer to my lust; and know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge: to her own worth
She shall be priz'd; but that you say 'be't so,'

I'll speak it in my spirit and honour, 'no.'

Tro. Come, to the port. I'll tell thee, Diomed,

This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head. 139

Lady, give me your hand, and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

Exeunt TROILUS, CRESSIDA, and DIOMEDES. Trumpet sounded.

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning!
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. 'T is Troilus' fault. Come, come, to field with him.

Dei. Let us make ready straight.

Æne. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity,

Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
On his fair worth and single chivalry. 150

Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Grecian Camp. Lists set out.

Enter AJAX armed; AGAMEMNON, ACHILLES, PATROCLUS, MENELAUS, ULYSSES, NESTOR, and Others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair,

Anticipating time with starting courage.
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse.
Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe:

Blow, villain, till thy spher'd bias cheek
Outswell the colic of puff'd Aquilon.

Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes
spout blood; 10

Thou blow'st for Hector. Trumpet sounds.

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'T is but early days.

Agam. Is not yond Diomed with Calchas' daughter?

Ulyss. 'T is he, I ken the manner of his gait;

He rises on the toe; that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter DIOMEDES, with CRESSIDA.

Agam. Is this the Lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss. 19

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;
'T were better she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips,
fair lady:

Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now;

For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment,
And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns! 20

For which we lose our heads to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss; this, mine:

Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O! this is trim.

Patr. Paris and I kiss evermore for him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir. Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive?

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live,
The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

- Men.* I'll give you boot; I'll give you three for one. 40
- Cres.* You're an odd man; give even, or give none.
- Men.* An odd man, lady! every man is odd.
- Cres.* No, Paris is not; for you know 't is true,
- That you are odd, and he is even with you.
- Men.* You fillip me o' the head.
- Cres.* No, I'll be sworn.
- Ulyss.* It were no match, your nail against his horn.
- May I sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?
- Cres.* You may.
- Ulyss.* I do desire it.
- Cres.* Why, beg then.
- Ulyss.* Why then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
- When Helen is a maid again, and his. 50
- Cres.* I am your debtor; claim it when 't is due.
- Ulyss.* Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.
- Dio.* Lady, a word: I'll bring you to your father.
- DIOMEDES leads out CRESSIDA.
- Nest.* A woman of quick sense.
- Ulyss.* Fie, fie upon her! There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
- Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out
- At every joint and motive of her body.
- O! these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
- That give a coasting welcome ere it comes,
- And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
- To every tickling reader, set them down 61
- For sluttish spoils of opportunity
- And daughters of the game.
- Trumpet within.
- All.* The Trojans' trumpet.
- Agam.* Yonder comes the troop.
- Enter HECTOR, armed; ÆNEAS, TROILUS, and other Trojans, with Attendants.
- Æne.* Hail, all you state of Greece! what shall be done
- To him that victory commands? or do you purpose
- A victor shall be known? will you the knights
- Shall to the edge of all extremity
- Pursue each other, or shall be divided
- By any voice or order of the field? 70
- Hector bade ask.
- Agam.* Which way would Hector have it?
- Æne.* He cares not; he'll obey conditions.
- Achil.* 'T is done like Hector; but securely done,
- A little proudly, and great deal disprizing
- The knight oppos'd.
- Æne.* If not Achilles, sir,
- What is your name?
- Achil.* If not Achilles, nothing.
- Æne.* Therefore Achilles; but, what'er, know this:
- In the extremity of great and little,
- Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
- The one almost as infinite as all, 80
- The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
- And that which looks like pride is courtesy.
- This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:
- In love whereof half Hector stays at home;
- Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
- This blended knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.
- Achil.* A maiden battle then? O! I perceive you.
- Re-enter DIOMEDES.
- Agam.* Here is Sir Diomed. Go, gentle knight,
- Stand by our Ajax: as you and Lord Æneas
- Consent upon the order of their fight, 90
- So be it; either to the uttermost,
- Or else a breath: the combatants being kin
- Half stints their strife before their strokes begin.
- AJAX and HECTOR enter the lists.
- Ulyss.* They are oppos'd already.
- Agam.* What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?
- Ulyss.* The youngest son of Priam, a true knight;
- Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word,
- Speaking of deeds and deedless in his tongue;
- Not soon provok'd nor being provok'd soon
- calm'd:
- His heart and hand both open and both free; 100
- For what he has he gives, what thinks he shows;
- Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
- Nor dignifies an impure thought with breath.
- Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
- For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
- To tender objects; but he in heat of action
- Is more vindicative than jealous love.
- They call him Troilus, and on him erect
- A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.
- Thus says Æneas; one that knows the youth 111
- Even to his inches, and with private soul
- Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me.
- Alarum. HECTOR and AJAX fight.
- Agam.* They are in action.
- Nest.* Now, Ajax, hold thine own!
- Tro.* Hector, thou sleep'st; awake thee!
- Agam.* His blows are well dispos'd: there, Ajax!
- Dio.* You must no more. Trumpets cease.
- Æne.* Princes, enough, so please you.
- Ajax.* I am not warm yet; let us fight again.
- Dio.* As Hector pleases.
- Hect.* Why, then will I no more.
- Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
- A cousin-german to great Priam's seed; 121
- The obligation of our blood forbids
- A gory emulation 'twixt us twain.
- Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so

That thou could'st say 'This hand is Grecian
all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's
blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister Bounds in my father's; by Jove multi-potent,
Thou should'st not bear from me a Greekish
member 130
Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our rank feud. But the just gods gainsay That any drop thou borrow'dst from thy
mother,
My sacred aunt, being by my mortal sword
Be drain'd! Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin, all honour to thee!
Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:
Thou art too gentle and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death. 141
Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable,
On whose bright crest Fame with her loudest eyes
Cries 'This is he!' could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector.
Æne. There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will do.
Hect. We'll answer it;
The issue is embracement: Ajax, farewell.
Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,
As said I have the chance, I would desire 150
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.
Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish, and great
Achilles
Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.
Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to
me,
And signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part; Desire them home. Give me thy hand, my
cousin;
I will go eat with thee and see your knights.
Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet
us here.
Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name
by name; 160
But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes Shall find him by his large and portly
size.
Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy;
But that's no welcome: understand more clear,
What's past and what's to come is strew'd with husks
And formless ruin of oblivion;
But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-draw-
ing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity, 170
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.
Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Aga-memnon.

Agam. To TROILUS. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less to you.
Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting:
You brace of war-like brothers, welcome
hither.
Hect. Who must we answer?
Æne. The noble Menelaus.
Hect. O! you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!
Mock not that I affect the untraded oath;
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus'
glove:
She's well, but bade me not commend her
to you. 180
Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.
Hect. O! pardon; I offend.
Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,
Labouring for destiny, make cruel way
Through ranks of Greekish youth: and I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
And seen thee scornful forfeits and subduc-
ments,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i'
th' air,
Not letting it decline on the declin'd; 189
That I have said to some my standers by:
'Lo! Jupiter is yonder, dealing life.'
And I have seen thee pause and take thy
breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in, 190
Like an Olympian wrestling: this have I
seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in
steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grand-
sire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier
good;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace
thee; 199
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.
Æne. 'Tis the old Nestor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
Thou hast so long walk'd hand in hand with
time:
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp
thee.
Nest. I would my arms could match thee
in contention,
As they contend with thee in courtesy.
Hect. I would they could.
Nest. Ha!
By this white beard, I'd fight with thee tomorrow.
Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the
time— 210
Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city
stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by
us.
Hect. I know your favour, Lord Ulysses,
well.

Ah! sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,

Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.

Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:

My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that pertly front your town,

Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,

Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you: There they stand yet, and modestly I think, The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all, And that old common arbitrator, Time, Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it. Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome.

After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou!

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.

Hect. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee.

Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second time,

As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. O! like a book of sport thou 't read me o'er;

But there's more in me than thou understand'st.

Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body

Shall I destroy him? whether there, or there, or there?

That I may give the local wound a name,
And make distinct the very breach whereout
Hector's great spirit flew. Answer me, heavens!

Hect. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud man,

To answer such a question. Stand again: Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly As to prenominate in nice conjecture
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou the oracle to tell me so,

I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well,

For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there;

But, by the forge that stithied Mars his helm,

I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er. You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag; His insolence draws folly from my lips;

But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,

Or may I never—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee, cousin: And you Achilles, let these threats alone, 261 Till accident and purpose bring you to 't: You may have every day enough of Hector, If you have stomach. The general state, I fear,

Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field;

We have had pelting wars since you refus'd The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector? To-morrow do I meet thee, fell as death; To-night all friends.

Hect. Thy hand upon that match.

Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent; 271

There in the full convive we: afterwards, As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat him.

Beat loud the tabourines, let the trumpets blow,

That this great soldier may his welcome know.

Exeunt all but TROILUS and ULYSSES.

Tro. My Lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,

In what place of the field doth Calchas keep?

Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus:

There Diomed doth feast with him to-night; 280

Who neither looks on heaven nor on earth, But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view On the fair Cressid.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,

After we part from Agamemnon's tent, To bring me thither?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir. As gentle tell me, of what honour was

This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there

That waits her absence?

Tro. O, sir! to such as boasting show their scars 290

A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord? She was belov'd, she lov'd; she is, and doth:

But still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—The Grecian Camp. Before ACHILLES' Tent.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,

Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow. Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter THERSITES.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy! Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol of idiot-worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, fragment?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, adversity! and what need these tricks?

Ther. Prithce, be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk: thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! what's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now the rotten diseases of the south, the guts-griping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads o' gravel i' the back, lethargies, cold palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume, sciaticas, lime-kilns i' the palm, incurable bone-ache, and the rivelled fee-simple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!

Patr. Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt, you whoreson indistinguishable cur, no.

Ther. No! why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleeve silk, thou green sarcenet flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou? Ah! how the poor world is pestered with such water-flies, diminutives of nature.

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Finch-egg!

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite

From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.

Here is a letter from Queen Hecuba, A token from her daughter, my fair love, Both taxing me and gaging me to keep An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:

Fall, Greeks; fail, fame; honour or go or stay;

My major vow lies here, this I'll obey. Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent;

This night in banqueting must all be spent. Away, Patroclus!

Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad; but if with too much brain and too little blood they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon, an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails, but he has not so much brain as ear-wax: and the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull, the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckolds; a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form but that he is, should wit larded with malice and malice forced with wit turn him to? To an ass, were nothing: he is both ass and ox; to an ox, were nothing: he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew, a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe, I would not care; but to be Menelaus! I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites, for I care not to be the louse of a lazar, so I were not Menelaus. Hey-day! spirits and fires!

Enter HECTOR, TROILUS, AJAX, AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, MENELAUS, and DIOMEDES, with lights.

Agam. We go wrong; we go wrong.

Ajax. No, yonder 't is.

There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulyss. Here comes himself to guide you.

Re-enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good night.

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks and good night to the Greeks' general.

Men. Good night, my lord.

Hect. Good night, sweet Lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: 'sweet' quoth a! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night and welcome both at once to those

That go or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

Exeunt AGAMEMNON and MENELAUS.

Achil. Old Nestor tarries; and you too, Diomed,

Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business,

The tide whereof is now. Good night, great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

Ulyss. Aside to TROILUS. Follow his torch; he goes to Calchas' tent.

I'll keep you company.

Tro. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hect. And so, good night.

Exit DIOMEDES; ULYSSES and TROILUS following.

Achil. Come, come; enter my tent.

Exeunt ACHILLES, HECTOR, AJAX, and NESTOR.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers than I will a serpent when he hisses. He will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brabblers the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it: it is prodigious, there will come some change: the sun borrows of the moon when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to dog him: they say he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent. I'll after, Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets!

Exit,

SCENE II.—The Same. Before CALCHAS' Tent.Enter DIOMEDES.Dio. What, are you up here, ho? speak.Cal. Within. Who calls?Dio. Diomed. Calchas, I think. Where's your daughter?Cal. Within. She comes to you.Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at a distance; after them, THERSITES.Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.Enter CRESSIDA.Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.Dio. How now, my charge!Cres. Now, my sweet guardian! Hark! a word with you. Whispers.Tro. Yea, so familiar!Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cleft; she's noted. 11*Dio.* Will you remember?Cres. Remember! yes.Dio. Nay, but do then;
And let your mind be coupled with your words.Tro. What should she remember?Ulyss. List!Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.Ther. Roguery!Dio. Nay, then,— 20*Cres.* I'll tell you what,—Dio. Foh, foh! come, tell a pin: you are forsworn.Cres. In faith, I cannot. What would you have me do?Ther. A juggling trick,—to be secretly open.Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?Cres. I prithee, do not hold me to mine oath;Bid me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.Dio. Good night.Tro. Hold, patience!Ulyss. How now, Trojan! 30*Cres.* Diomed,— Dio. No, no; good night: I'll be your fool no more.Tro. Thy better must.Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.Tro. O plague and madness!Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince; let us depart, I pray you,Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself To wrathful terms. This place is dangerous; 38*The time right deadly: I beseech you, go.Tro.* Behold, I pray you!Ulyss. Nay, good my lord, go off: You flow to great distraction; come, my lord,Tro. I pray thee, stay.Ulyss. You have not patience: come.Tro. I pray you, stay. By hell and all hell's torments,

I will not speak a word!

Dio. And so, good night.Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Ulyss. Why, how now, lord!Tro. By Jove,

I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!Dio. Foh, foh! adieu; you palter.Cres. In faith, I do not: come hither once again.Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something: will you go? 50

You will break out.

Tro. She strokes his cheek!Ulyss. Come, come.Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word:

There is between my will and all offences A guard of patience: stay a little while.

Ther. How the devil Luxury, with his fat rump and potato-finger, tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!Dio. But will you then?Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it. 60*Cres.* I'll fetch you one. Exit.Ulyss. You have sworn patience.Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord;

I will not be myself, nor have cognition

Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter CRESSIDA.Ther. Now the pledge! now, now, now!Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.Tro. O beauty! where is thy faith?Ulyss. My lord,—Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.Cres. You look upon that sleeve; behold it well.He lov'd me—O false wench!—Give 't me again. 70*Dio.* Whose was 't?Cres. It is no matter, now I have 't again:

I will not meet with you to-morrow night.

I prithee, Diomed, visit me no more.Ther. Now she sharpens: well said, whetstone!Dio. I shall have it.Cres. What, this? Ay, that.Dio. O! all you gods. O! pretty, pretty pledge.Thy master now lies thinking in his bed Of thee and me; and sighs, and takes my glove,And gives memorial dainty kisses to it, 80 As I kiss thee. Nay, do not snatch it from me;He that takes that doth take my heart withal.Dio. I had your heart before; this follows it.Tro. I did swear patience.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed;
faith, you shall not;

I'll give you something else.

Dio. I will have this. Whose was it?

Cres. 'T is no matter.

Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.

Cres. 'T was one's that lov'd me better than you will. 89

But, now you have it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it?

Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women
yond.

And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm.

And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.

Tro. Wert thou the devil, and wor'st it on thy horn,

It should be challeng'd.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past:
and yet it is not:

I will not keep my word.

Dio. Why then, farewell;

Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.

Cres. You shall not go: one cannot speak
a word 100

But it straight starts you.

Dio. I do not like this fooling.

Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not me

Pleases me best.

Dio. What! shall I come? the hour?

Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!—

Do come:—I shall be plagu'd.

Dio. Farewell till then.

Cres. Good night: I prithee, come.

Exit DIOMEDES.

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on
thee,

But with my heart the other eye doth see.

Ah! poor our sex; this fault in us I find,

The error of our eye directs our mind. 110

What error leads must err. O! then conclude

Minds sway'd by eyes are full of turpitude.

Exit.

Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more,

Unless she said, 'My mind is now turn'd whore.'

Ulyss. All 's done, my lord.

Tro. It is.

Ulyss. Why stay we then?

Tro. To make a recordation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke.

But if I tell how these two did co-act,

Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart, 120

An esperance so obstinately strong,

That doth invert the attest of eyes and ears,

As if those organs had deceptive functions,

Created only to calumniate.

Was Cressid here?

Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.

Tro. She was not, sure.

Ulyss. Most sure she was.

Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of madness.

Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but now.

Tro. Let it not be believ'd for womanhood!

Think we had mothers; do not give advantage 130

To stubborn critics, apt, without a theme,
For depravation, to square the general sex

By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were
she.

Ther. Will he swagger himself out on 's own eyes?

Tro. This she? no; this is Diomed's Cressida.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;
If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimony,

If sanctimony be the gods' delight, 140
If there be rule in unity itself,

This is not she. O madness of discourse,
That cause sets up with and against thyself;

Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt
Without perdition, and loss assume all reason

Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid.

Within my soul there doth conduce a fight
Of this strange nature that a thing in-separate

Divides more wider than the sky and earth;

And yet the spacious breadth of this division
Admits no orifice for a point as subtle 151

As Ariachne's broken woof to enter.
Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's

gates;
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of

heaven:
Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;

The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolv'd,

and loos'd;
And with another knot, five-finger-tied,

The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy

reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to

Diomed. 160
Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half at-tach'd

With that which here his passion doth express?

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divolv'd well

In characters as red as Mars his heart

Inflam'd with Venus: never did young man fancy

With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek: as much as I do Cressid love,

So much by weight hate I her Diomed;

That sleeve is mine that he'll bear in his
helm;

Were it a casque compos'd by Vulcan's
skill, 170

My sword should bite it. Not the dreadful spout

Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Constrin'd in mass by the almighty sun,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent than shall my prompted sword
Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He 'll tickle it for his concupy.

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!

Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And they 'll seem glorious.

Ulyss. O! contain yourself;
Your passion draws ears hither. 181

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. I have been seeking you this hour,
my lord.

Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy:

Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince. My courteous lord, adieu.

Farewell, revolted fair! and, Diomed,

Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!

Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept distracted thanks. 189

Exeunt TROILUS, ÆNEAS, and ULYSSES.

Ther. Would I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would croak like a raven; I would bode, I would bode. Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond than he for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery: nothing else holds fashion. A burning devil take them! Exit. 197

SCENE III.—Troy. Before PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,

To stop his ears against admonishment?

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in:

By all the everlasting gods, I'll go!

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.

Hect. No more, I say.

Enter CASSANDRA.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?
And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent.

Consort with me in loud and dear petition;
Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd 10

Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night
Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O! 'tis true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound.

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Be gone, I say: the gods have heard me swear.

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows:

They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O! be persuaded: do not count it holy

To hurt by being just: it is as lawful, 20
For we would give much, to use violent thefts,

And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow;

But vows to every purpose must not hold.

Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;
Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:

Life every man holds dear; but the dear man

Holds honour far more precious-dear than life.

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man! mean'st thou to fight to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade. Exit CASSANDRA.

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth; 31

I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry:

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,

And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.

Unarm thee, go, and doubt thou not, brave boy,

I'll stand to-day for thee and me and Troy.

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,

Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecian falls, 40

Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword
You bid them rise, and live.

Hect. O! 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now! how now!

Tro. For the love of all the gods,
Let's leave the hermit pity with our mothers,

And when we have our armours buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords,

Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

Hect. Fie, savage, fie!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day. 50

Tro. Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire;

Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears;

Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,

Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

Re-enter CASSANDRA, with PRIAM.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast: 59

He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,
Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come; go back:
Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions;

Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
Am like a prophet suddenly enrap,
To tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore, come back.

Hect. Aeneas is a-field;
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valour, to appear
This morning to them.

Pri. Ay, but thou shalt not go.
Hect. I must not break my faith. 71
You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shame respect, but give me
leave

To take that course by your consent and voice,

Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.
Cas. O Priam! yield not to him.

And. Do not, dear father.
Hect. Andromache, I am offended with
you:

Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

Exit ANDROMACHE.
Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious
girl
Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell! dear Hector.
Look! how thou diest; look! how thy eye turns pale; 81
Look! how thy wounds do bleed at many vents:

Hark! how Troy roars: how Hecuba cries
out!

How poor Andromache shrills her dolour
forth!

Behold, distraction, frenzy, and amazement,
Like witless antics, one another meet,
And all cry, Hector! Hector's dead! O
Hector!

Tro. Away! away!

Cas. Farewell. Yet soft! Hector, I take
my leave:

Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. Exit. 90

Hect. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim.

Go in and cheer the town: we'll forth and
fight.

Do deeds worth praise and tell you them at
night.

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee!

Exeunt severally PRIAM and HECTOR.
Alarums.

Tro. They are at it; hark! Proud Diomed, believe,
I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

Enter PANDARUS.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter come from yond poor girl.

Tro. Let me read. 100

Pan. A whoreson tisick, a whoreson ras-cally tisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o'
these days: and I have a rheum in mine eyes too, and such an ache in my bones that, unless a man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on't. What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart;

The effect doth operate another way.

Tearing the letter.
Go, wind to wind, there turn and change
together. 110

My love with words and errors still she feeds,

But edifies another with her deeds.

Exeunt severally.

SCENE IV.—Plains between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter THER-SITES.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another; I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy dotting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm; I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whore-masterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissem-bling luxurious drab, of a sleeveless errand.
O' the other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals, that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor, and that same dog-fox, Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry: they set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles; and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day; whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft! here comes sleeve, and t' other. 18

Enter DIOMEDES, TROILUS following.

Tro. Fly not; for should'st thou take the river Styx,
I would swim after.

Dio. Thou dost miscall retire:
I do not fly, but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the odds of multitude.
Have at thee!

Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian! now for thy whore,

Trojan! now the sleeve! now the sleeve!
Exeunt TROILUS and DIOMEDES,
fighting.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hector's match?

Art thou of blood and honour?

Ther. No, no; I am a rascal; a scurvy railing knave; a very filthy rogue. 31

Hect. I do believe thee: live. Exit.

Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me; but a plague break thy neck for frightening me! What's become of the wenching rogues? I think they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle; yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them. Exit.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter DIOMEDES and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse;
Present the fair steed to my Lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty:
Tell her I have chastis'd the amorous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.
Serv. I go, my lord. Exit.

Enter AGAMEMNON.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamas
Hath beat down Menon; bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner,
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,
Upon the pashed corpses of the kings;<sup>10</sup>
Epistrophus and Cedijs; Polyxenes is slain;
Amphimachus, and Thoas, deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta'en, or slain; and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruis'd; the dreadful Sagittary
Appals our numbers: haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles;
And bid the snail-pac'd Ajax arm for shame.
There is a thousand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathe his horse, 20
And there lacks work; anon he's there afoot,
And there they fly or die, like scaled sculls
Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath:
Here, there, and every where, he leaves and takes,
Dexterity so obeying appetite
That what he will he does; and does so much
That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. O! courage, courage, princes;
great Achilles<sup>30</sup>
Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance;
Patroclus' wounds have rous'd his drowsy blood,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
That noseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd,
come to him,
Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend.

And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd and at it,
Roaring for Troilus, who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastic execution,
Engaging and redeeming of himself
With such a careless force and forceless care<sup>40</sup>
As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
Bade him win all.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! Exit.
Dio. Ay, there, there.
Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector?
Come, come, thou boy-queller, show thy face;
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry:
Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector.
Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?
Ajax. What would'st thou?
Dio. I would correct him.
Ajax. Were I the general, thou should'st have my office
Ere that correction. Troilus, I say! what, Troilus!

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. O traitor Diomed! turn thy false face, thou traitor,
And pay thy life thou ow'st me for my horse!
Dio. Ha! art thou there?
Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.
Dio. He is my prize; I will not look upon.<sup>10</sup>
Tro. Come, both you cogging Greeks; have at you both! Exeunt, fighting.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O! well fought, my youngest brother.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee. Ha! Have at thee, Hector!
Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.
Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.
Be happy that my arms are out of use:
My rest and negligence befriended thee now,
But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till when, go seek thy fortune. Exit.
Hect. Fare thee well.
I would have been much more a fresher man,<sup>20</sup>
Had I expected thee. How now, my brother!

Re-enter TROILUS.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas: shall it be? No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven, He shall not carry him: I'll be ta'en too, Or bring him off. Fate, hear me what I say! I reckon not though thou end my life to-day.

Exit.Enter One in sumptuous armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark. No? wilt thou not? I like thy armour well; I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all, But I'll be master of it. Wilt thou not, beast, abide? <sup>30</sup> Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.

*Exeunt.*SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Plains.Enter ACHILLES, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons; Mark what I say. Attend me where I wheel: Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath: And when I have the bloody Hector found, Empale him with your weapons round about; In fellest manner execute your aims. Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye: It is decreed Hector the great must die. <sup>8</sup>

Exeunt.Enter MENELAUS and PARIS, fighting: then THERSITES.

Ther. The cuckold and the cuckold-maker are at it. Now, bull! now, dog! 'Loo, Paris, 'loo! now, my double-henned sparrow! 'loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game: ware horns, ho!

Exeunt PARIS and MENELAUS.Enter MARGARELON.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Mar. A bastard son of Priam's. <sup>15</sup>

Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards; I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in everything illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment. Farewell, bastard. <sup>23</sup>

Mar. The devil take thee, coward!

*Exeunt.*SCENE VIII.—Another Part of the Plains.Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Most putrefied core, so fair without, Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life. Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath: Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death.

Puts off his helmet, and lays his sword aside.

Enter ACHILLES and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;

How ugly night comes breathing at his heels:

Even with the veil and darkening of the sun, To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd; forgo this vantage, Greek.

Achil. Strike, fellows, strike! this is the man I seek. <sup>10</sup> HECTOR falls.

So, Ilium, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down!

Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.

On! Myrmidons, and cry you all amain, Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

A retreat sounded.

Hark! a retreat upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'er-spreads the earth,

And, stickler-like, the armies separates.

My half-suppl'd sword, that frankly would have fed,

Pleas'd with this dainty bit, thus goes to bed. <sup>20</sup> Sheathes his sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;

Along the field I will the Trojan trail.

*Exeunt.*SCENE IX.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and Others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that? Nest. Peace, drums!

Within. Achilles! Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!

Dio. The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be;

Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam. March patiently along. Let one be sent

To pray Achilles see us at our tent.

If in his death the gods have us befriended, Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended. <sup>10</sup>

*Exeunt, marching.*SCENE X.—Another Part of the Plains.Enter ÆNEAS and Trojan Forces.

Æne. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field.

Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector! The gods forbid!

Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail,

In beastly sort, dragg'd through the shameful field.

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!

Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!

I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy.

And linger not our sure destructions on!

Æne. My lord, you do discomfort all the host. 10

Tro. You understand me not that tell me
so:

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death,
But dare all imminence that gods and
men

Address their dangers in. Hector is gone:
Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?

Let him that will a screech-owl aye be
call'd

Go in to Troy, and say there Hector's dead:
There is a word will Priam turn to stone,
Make wells and Niobes of the maids and
wives,

Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word 20
Scare Troy out of itself. But march away:
Hector is dead; there is no more to say.

Stay yet. You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plains,

Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
I'll through and through you! And, thou great-siz'd coward,

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates:

I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience

still,
That mouldeth goblins swift as frenzies

thoughts.
Strike a free march to Troy! with comfort

go: 30
Hope of revenge shall hide our inward

woe.
Exeunt ÆNEAS and Trojan Forces.

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. But hear you, hear you!

Tro. Hence, broker-lackey! ignomy and
shame

Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name!
Exit.

Pan. A goodly medicine for mine aching bones! O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised. O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a-work, and how ill requited! why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed? what verse for it? what instance for it? Let me see: 41

*Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey and his sting;
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail.*

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.

*As many as be here of pandar's hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's
fall;*

*Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some
groans, 50*

*Though not for me, yet for your aching
bones.*

*Brethren, and sisters, of the hold-door
trade,*

*Some two months hence my will shall here
be made:*

*It should be now, but that my fear is this,
Some galled goose of Winchester would hiss.*

*Till then I'll sweat, and seek about for eases;
And at that time bequeath you my diseases.*

Exit.

CORIOLANUS

CORIOLANUS has been often cited as evidence of Shakespeare's sympathy with the aristocratic as opposed to the democratic principle of government. That the play itself justifies no such inference is too apparent to require discussion. The central theme of the tragedy is the character of Coriolanus himself, to the portrayal of which the conflict between plebeian and patrician is but incidental. Shakespeare's purpose requires that the hero shall command some measure of sympathy from the audience from first to last, and to that end he has portrayed the plebeians in a light which affords some justification for the contempt in which Coriolanus holds them. To say, however, that Shakespeare himself shares in that contempt is utterly to misread the play.

The problem in which Shakespeare is here interested is clearly not a political, but an educational one. Coriolanus is the tragedy of a mother's son. It begins with that son's birth, is fostered and nourished by a mother's pride and folly, reaches its climax in the rich soil of civil discord, and seals its catastrophe in a mother's love. The full significance of the tragedy can be grasped only by recognition of the fact that it has its beginning and its ending in Volumnia. To support this view it is not necessary to go outside the play itself; and yet, it may be helpful to turn for a moment to Plutarch from which Shakespeare read the following: "Caius Marcius, being left an orphan by his father, was brought up under his mother, a widow. . . . This man also is good proof to confirm some men's opinions: That a rare and excellent wit, untaught, doth bring forth many good and evil things together. . . . For this Marcius' natural wit and great heart did marvellously stir up his courage to do and attempt notable acts. But on the other side, for lack of education, he was so choleric that he would yield to no living creature; which made him churlish, uncivil, and altogether unfit for any man's conversation. . . . But Marcius began from his childhood to give himself to handle weapons, and daily did exercise himself therein."

Now with this passage in mind let us turn to the play. As is his custom, Shakespeare has given us the key to the tragedy in the opening scene. When the Second Citizen interposes for Marcius, recalling his services to his country, the First Citizen replies: "Though soft-conscienced men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud." This is so strange a charge to bring against a national hero, that it at once arrests our attention. True or false, it reveals the fact that among the common people there is a widespread belief that Volumnia exercises an unusual influence over her son. Of the nature of that influence we are not left long in doubt. The third scene, one of the most significant in the play, is laid in the house of Marcius. The purpose of this scene is clearly to reveal the nature of the childhood training of Marcius at his mother's hands. To lend vividness to the picture, Shakespeare has substituted for the "young children" of Marcius, as given by Plutarch, Marcius' young son. Virgilia, the wife of Marcius, is portrayed throughout in striking contrast to Volumnia as a "gracious silence" and as one who abhors blood and strife. The scene opens with Volumnia telling Virgilia of the ideals which she has ever held before Marcius—ideals of war and patriotism. "When yet he was but tender-bodied to a cruel war I sent him." Valeria enters and inquires of Virgilia about her little son. In what follows it is as if we saw Marcius himself as a child. Volumnia is proud that "He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his schoolmaster." Why here is something strictly modern; something for pedagogues to ponder. But observe further. Shakespeare proceeds to the concrete. Valeria glowingly recounts the incident of the butterfly: "I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth and tear it; O, I warrant, how he mammoocked it!" Volumnia, who clearly is enchanted with the tale, cries: "One on 's father's moods." To which Valeria responds: "Indeed, la, 't is a noble child." Virgilia, who all the while has been sewing, looks up from her work—or does she not? and observes, "A crack, madam."

Poor Virgilia! No wonder she sought to retire on Valeria's approach. No wonder she cannot be persuaded to leave her sewing and go forth with them to share their mirth. A crack, indeed! A defect, a moral defect in the boy. This is clearly what is in Virgilia's mind. It cannot be that, as many commentators think, she speaks approvingly of Valeria's story. She sees in the boy's conduct evidence of what Hamlet calls the "vicious mole" or "the dram of eale" that often drives out all a man's noble qualities and scandalizes him. Something in this child that promises to develop into a habit that "too much o'erleavens the form of plausible manners." It is hardly necessary to seek further for an explanation of the character of Coriolanus. The tragedy has its origin here. The entire development of the man's character is but the unfolding of this germ. The problem is an educational one—swords and drums, or schoolmasters?

It is useless to dwell upon the virtues of Coriolanus. They are perfectly obvious. But it is also obvious that they are what we might call barbaric virtues, found equally in the untutored with the tutored. Greatness, in a civilized society, calls for something more than these; for these very virtues, without the restraining influence of an education that makes a man fit to converse with his fellow men, menace the state and at last destroy themselves.

That the First Citizen spoke true is proved by the event. Too late Volumnia tries to impart wisdom to her son. When upon his banishment he bids her farewell, he rebukes her for her tears as inconsistent with the spirit of her own teaching. He who supposedly had risked life for love of country now turns against his country and threatens its destruction. Yielding at last to his mother's prayer that he will spare Rome lest his name should go down "to the ensuing age abhorred," he is conscious that he now turns traitor to the Volsces. Well may he now cry out in anguish:

"O mother, mother!

What have you done?"

ACT I

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter a company of mutinous Citizens, with staves, clubs, and other weapons.

First Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.

All. Speak, speak.

First Cit. You are all resolved rather to die than to famish?

All. Resolved, resolved.

First Cit. First, you know Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

All. We know 't, we know 't.

First Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is 't a verdict? 11

All. No more talking on 't; let it be done. Away, away!

Second Cit. One word, good citizens.

First Cit. We are accounted poor citizens, the patricians, good. What authority surfeits on would relieve us. If they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them. Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes: for the gods know I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge. 25

Second Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

All. Against him first: he's a very dog to the commonalty. 29

Second Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

First Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for 't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

Second Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

First Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft-conscienced men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue. 41

Second Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him. You must in no way say he is covetous.

First Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations: he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. Shouts within. What shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen: why stay we prating here? to the Capitol! 41

All. Come, come.

First Cit. Soft! who comes here? 50

Enter MENENIUS AGRIPPA.

Second Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa: one that hath always loved the people.

First Cit. He's one honest enough: would all the rest were so!

Men. What work 's, my countrymen, in hand? where go you

With bats and clubs? The matter? Speak, I pray you.

First Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say poor suitors have strong breaths: they shall know we have strong arms too. 62

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,

Will you undo yourselves?

First Cit. We cannot, sir: we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care
Have the patricians of you. For your wants,
Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well
Strike at the heaven with your staves as lift them <sup>80</sup>
Against the Roman state, whose course will on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong link asunder than can ever
Appear in your impediment. For the dearth,
The gods, not the patricians, make it, and
Your knees to them, not arms, must help.
Alack!
You are transported by calamity
Thither where more attends you; and you slander
The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers,
When you curse them as enemies. <sup>80</sup>
First Cit. Care for us! True, indeed! They ne'er cared for us yet: suffer us to famish, and their storehouses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.
Men. Either you must <sup>90</sup>
Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you A pretty tale: it may be you have heard it; But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture
To stale 't a little more.
First Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir; yet you must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale; but, an 't please you, deliver.
Men. There was a time when all the body's members
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it: That only like a gulf it did remain <sup>101</sup>
I' the midst o' the body, idle and unactive, Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest, where the other instruments
Did see and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel, And, mutually participate, did minister Unto the appetite and affection common
Of the whole body. The belly answer'd,—
First Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?
Men. Sir, I shall tell you. With a kind of smile,
Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even thus.
For, look you, I may make the belly smile
As well as speak, it tauntingly replied
To the discontented members, the mutinous parts
That envied his receipt; even so most fitly
As you malign our senators for that
They are not such as you.
First Cit. Your belly's answer? What!
The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye,

The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier, <sup>120</sup>
Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter,
With other muniments and petty helps
In this our fabric, if that they—
Men. What then? What then?
Fore me this fellow speaks! What then? what then?
First Cit. Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sink of the body,—
Men. Well, what then?
First Cit. The former agents, if they did complain,
What could the belly answer?
Men. I will tell you; If you 'll bestow a small, of what you have little, <sup>129</sup>
Patience awhile, you 'll hear the belly's answer.
First Cit. Ye 're long about it.
Men. Note me this, good friend; Your most grave belly was deliberate, Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd:
'True is it, my incorporate friends,' quoth he, 'That I receive the general food at first, Which you do live upon; and fit it is, Because I am the store-house and the shop Of the whole body; but, if you do remember, I send it through the rivers of your blood, Even to the court, the heart, to the seat o' the brain; <sup>140</sup>
And, through the cranks and offices of man, The strongest nerves and small inferior veins
From me receive that natural competency Whereby they live. And though that all at once,
You, my good friends,'—this says the belly, mark me,—
First Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.
Men. 'Though all at once cannot See what I do deliver out to each, Yet I can make my audit up, that all From me do back receive the flour of all, And leave me but the bran.' What say you to 't? <sup>150</sup>
First Cit. It was an answer. How apply you this?
Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,
And you the mutinous members; for examine
Their counsels and their cares, digest things rightly Touching the weal o' the common, you shall find
No public benefit which you receive
But it proceeds or comes from them to you, And no way from yourselves. What do you think,
You, the great toe of this assembly?
First Cit. I the great toe? Why the great toe? <sup>160</sup>
Men. For that, being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,
Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:
Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,

Lead'st first to win some vantage.
But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs:
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle;

Enter CAIUS MARCIUS.

The one side must have bale. Hail, noble
Marcius!

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That, rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,

Make yourselves scabs?

First Cit. We have ever your good word.
Mar. He that will give good words to these will flatter

Beneath abhorring. What would you have,
you curs,

That like nor peace nor war? the one affrights you,

The other makes you proud. He that trusts
to you,

Where he should find you lions, finds you
hares;

Where foxes, geese: you are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,

Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is To make him worthy whose offence subdues him,

And curse that justice did it. Who deserves
greatness

Deserves your hate; and your affections are
A sick man's appetite, who desires most that Which would increase his evil. He that depends

Upon your favours swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye!

Trust ye?

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble that was now your hate,
Him vile that was your garland. What's
the matter,

That in these several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate, who,

Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else Would feed on one another? What's their seeking?

Men. For corn at their own rates: whereof, they say,

The city is well stor'd.

Mar. Hang 'em! They say!
They'll sit by the fire, and presume to know What's done i' the Capitol: who's like to
rise,

Who thrives, and who declines; side factions, and give out

Conjectural marriages; making parties
strong,

And feebling such as stand not in their lik-
ing,

Below their cobbled shoes. They say there's grain enough!

Would the nobility lay aside their ruth,
And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high

As I could pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded;

For though abundantly they lack discretion,

Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you,

What say the other troop?

Mar. They are dissolved: hang 'em!
They said they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth
proverbs:

That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs
must eat;

That meat was made for mouths; that the gods sent not

Corn for the rich men only. With these shreds

They vented their complainings; which being answer'd,

And a petition granted them, a strange one,
To break the heart of generosity,

And make bold power look pale, they threw their caps

As they would hang them on the horns o'
the moon,

Shouting their emulation.

Men. What is granted them?
Mar. Five tribunes, to defend their vulgar wisdoms,

Of their own choice: one's Junius Brutus,
Sicinius Velutus, and I know not—'Sdeath!

The rabble should have first unroof'd the
city,

Ere so prevail'd with me; it will in time Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes

For insurrection's arguing.

Men. This is strange.
Mar. Go; get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger, hastily.

Mess. Where's Caius Marcius?

Mar. Here: what is the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volscies are in arms.

Mar. I am glad on't; then we shall ha'
means to vent

Our musty superfluity. See, our best elders.

Enter COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, and other Senators; JUNIUS BRUTUS and SICINIUS VELUTUS.

First Sen. Marcius, 'tis true that you have lately told us;

The Volscies are in arms.

Mar. They have a leader,
Tullius Aufidius, that will put you to 't.

I sin in envying his nobility,
And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.
Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears, and he

Upon my party, I'd revolt, to make
Only my wars with him: he is a lion

That I am proud to hunt.

First Sen. Then, worthy Marcius,
Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.
Mar. Sir, it is;

And I am constant. Titus Lartius, thou Shalt see me once more strike at Tullius'

face.
What! art thou stiff? stand'st out?

Tit. No, Caius Marcius;
I'll lean upon one crutch and fight with t' other.

Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O! true-bred.
First Sen. Your company to the Capitol;
where I know

Our greatest friends attend us.

Tit. To COMINIUS. Lead you on:
To MARCIUS. Follow Cominius; we must follow you; 250

Right worthy you priority.

Com. Noble Marcius!
First Sen. To the Citizens. Hence! To your homes! be gone.

Mar. Nay, let them follow:
These Volsces have much corn; take these rats thither

To gnaw their garners. Worshipful muti-ners,

Your valour puts well forth; pray, follow.

Exeunt Senators, COMINIUS, MARCIUS, TITUS, and MENENIUS. Citizens steal away.

Sic. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius?

Bru. He has no equal.

Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for
the people,—

Bru. Mark'd you his lips and eyes?

Sic. Nay, but his taunts.
Bru. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. 260

Sic. Bemock the modest moon.

Bru. The present wars devour him; he is grown

Too proud to be so valiant.

Sic. Such a nature, Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow

Which he treads on at noon. But I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded Under Cominius.

Bru. Fame, at the which he aims,
In whom already he's well grac'd, can not Better be held nor more attain'd than by 269
A place below the first; for what miscarries Shall be the general's fault, though he perform

To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure

Will then cry out of Marcius, 'O! if he Had borne the business.'

Sic. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Bru. Come:
Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius,
Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults 278

To Marcius shall be honours, though indeed
In aught he merit not.

Sic. Let's hence and hear How the dispatch is made; and in what
fashion,

More than his singularity, he goes
Upon his present action.

Bru. Let's along.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Corioli. The Senate-house.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS and Senators.

First Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
That they of Rome are enter'd in our coun-
sels,

And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?
What ever have been thought on in this
state,

That could be brought to bodily act ere
Rome

Had circumvention? 'Tis not four days
gone

Since I heard thence; these are the words:
I think

I have the letter here; yes, here it is.

They have press'd a power, but it is not known

Whether for east or west: the dearth is great; 10

*The people mutinous; and it is rumour'd,
Cominius, Marcius your old enemy,*

*Who is of Rome worse hated than of you,
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,*

*These three lead on this preparation
Whither 't is bent: most likely 't is for you:*

Consider of it.

First Sen. Our army's in the field:

We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready

To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly

To keep your great pretences veil'd till when They needs must show themselves; which in the hatching, 21

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery

We shall be shorten'd in our aim, which was,
To take in many towns ere almost Rome

Should know we were afoot.

Second Sen. Noble Aufidius,

Take your commission; hie you to your
bands;

Let us alone to guard Corioli:

If they set down before's, for the remove Bring up your army; but I think you'll find They've not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O! doubt not that;

I speak from certainties. Nay, more; 31
Some parcels of their power are forth already,

And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,
'Tis sworn between us we shall ever strike
Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you!

Auf. And keep your honours safe!

First Sen. Farewell.

Second Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—*A Room in MARCIUS'S
House.*

Enter VOLUMNIA and VIRGILIA. They set them down on two low stools and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort. If my son were my husband, I should freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour than in the embracements of his bed where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied and the only son of my womb, when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way, when for a day of kings' entreaties a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding, I, considering how honour would become such a person, that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir, was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. 19

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam; how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely: had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius, I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself. 30

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks I hear hither your husband's drum,

See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair, As children from a bear, the Volsces shunning him:

Methinks I see him stamp thus, and call thus:

"Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear,

Though you were born in Rome.' His bloody brow

With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes,

Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow Or all or lose his hire. 40

Vir. His bloody brow! O Jupiter! no blood.

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man

Than gilt his trophy: the breasts of Hecuba, When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier

Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood

At Grecian swords, contemning. Tell Valeria

We are fit to bid her welcome.

Exit Gentlewoman.

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee,

And tread upon his neck. 50

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with VALERIA and an Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith. How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see the swords and hear a drum, than look upon his school-master. 61

Val. O' my word, the father's son; I'll swear 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; catch'd it again: or whether his fall enraged him, or how 't was, he did so set his teeth and tear it; O! I warrant, how he mammocked it. 71

Vol. One on 's father's moods.

Val. Indeed, la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack, madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Val. Not out of doors!

Vol. She shall, she shall. 80

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience; I'll not over the threshold till my lord return from the wars.

Vol. Fie! you confine yourself most unreasonably. Come; you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'T is not to save labour, nor that I want love. 91

Val. You would be another Penelope; yet, they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come; I would your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed I will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband. 101

Vir. O! good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily. I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is: the Volsces have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord and Titus Lartius are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us. 112

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady: as she is now she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think she would. Fare you well then. Come, good sweet lady, Prithee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us. 121

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed I must not. I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then, farewell.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Enter, with drum and colours, MARCIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Captains, and Soldiers. To them a Messenger.

Mar. Yonder comes news: a wager they have met.

Lart. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. 'T is done.

Lart. Agreed.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy?

Mess. They lie in view, but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So the good horse is mine.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll not sell nor give him: lend you him I will
For half a hundred years. Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their 'larum, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I prithee, make us quick in work, 10

That we with smoking swords may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends! Come, blow thy blast.

A parley sounded. Enter, on the walls, two Senators, and Others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

First Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he.

That's lesser than a little. Drums afar off.

Are bringing forth our youth: we'll break our walls,

Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates,

Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;

They'll open of themselves.

Alarum afar off

Hark you, far off!

There is Aufidius: list, what work he makes

Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O! they are at it.

Lart. Their noise be our instruction.

Ladders, ho!

The Volsces enter and pass over the stage.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight

With hearts more proof than shields.

Advance, brave Titus:

They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,

Which makes me sweat with wrath. Come on, my fellows:

He that retires, I'll take him for a Volsce, And he shall feel mine edge.

Alarum. The Romans are beaten back to their trenches.

Re-enter MARCIUS.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you, 30

You shames of Rome! you herd of—Boils and plagues

Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhorr'd Further than seen, and one infect another

Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese,

That bear the shapes of men, how have you run

From slaves that apes would beat! Pluto and hell!

All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale With flight and agued fear! Mend and charge home,

Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe And make my wars on you; look to 't:

come on; 40

If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives,

As they us to our trenches followed.

Another alarum. The Volsces and Romans re-enter, and the fight is renewed. The Volsces retire into Corioli, and MARCIUS follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are ope: now prove good seconds:

'T is for the followers fortune widens them, Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like.

He enters the gates.

First Sol. Foolhardiness! not I.

Second Sol. Nor I.

MARCIUS is shut in.

Third Sol. See, they have shut him in.

All. To the pot, I warrant him.

Alarum continues.

Re-enter TITUS LARTIUS.

Lart. What is become of Marcius?

All. Slain, sir, doubtless.

First Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels,

With them he enters; who, upon the sudden,

Clapp'd to their gates; he is himself alone, 51

To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow!
Who sensibly outdares his senseless sword,

And, when it bows, stands up. Thou art left, Marcius:
A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art,
Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier

Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks and

The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world

Were feverous and did tremble.

Re-enter MARCIUS, bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

First Sol. Look! sir.

Lart. O! 't is Marcius:
Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.
They fight, and all enter the city.

SCENE V.—Corioli. A Street.

Enter certain Romans, with spoils.

First Rom. This will I carry to Rome.

Second Rom. And I this.

Third Rom. A murrain on' t! I took this for silver.

Alarum continues still afar off.

Enter MARCIUS and TITUS LARTIUS, with a trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers that do prize their hours

At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons,

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,

Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Down with them!

And hark, what noise the general makes!
To him!

There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius,
Piercing our Romans: then, valiant Titus, take

Convenient numbers to make good the city,
Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste

To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st;
Thy exercise hath been too violent
For a second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not;
My work hath yet not warm'd me: fare you well:

The blood I drop is rather physical
Than dangerous to me: to Aufidius thus 20
I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms

Misguide thy opposers' swords! Bold gentleman,

Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest! So, farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius!

Exit MARCIUS.

Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;
Call thither all the officers o' the town,
Where they shall know our mind. Away!
Exeunt

SCENE VI.—Near the Camp of COMINIUS.

Enter COMINIUS and Forces, as in retreat.

Com. Breathe you, my friends: well fought; we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,

By interims and conveying gusts we have heard

The charges of our friends. Ye Roman gods!
Lead their successes as we wish our own,
That both our powers, with smiling fronts encountering,

May give you thankful sacrifice.

Enter a Messenger.

Thy news?

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued,

And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
I saw our party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth,
Methinks thou speak'st not well. How long is 't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'T is not a mile; briefly we heard their drums:

How could'st thou in a mile confound an hour,

And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volsces
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir, 20
Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter MARCIUS.

Com. Who's yonder,
That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods!

He has the stamp of Marcius, and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor

More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue

From every meaner man.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,

But mantled in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip ye
In arms as sound as when I woo'd, in heart 30
As merry as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burn'd to bedward.

Com. Flower of warriors,
How is 't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees:

Condemning some to death, and some to exile;

Ransoming him, or pitying, threat'ning the other;

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave Which told me they had beat you to your trenches? 40

Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone;
He did inform the truth: but for our gentlemen,

The common file,—a plague! tribunes for them!

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat as they did budge

From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think.

Where is the enemy? are you lords o' the field?

If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcius, we have at disadvantage fought,

And did retire to win our purpose. 50

Mar. How lies their battle? know you on which side

They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcius,
Their bands i' the vaward are the Antiates,
Of their best trust; o'er them Aufidius,
Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,
By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we have shed together, by the vows

We have made to endure friends, that you directly

Set me against Aufidius and his Antiates;
And that you not delay the present, but, 60
Filling the air with swords advanc'd and darts,

We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish
You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking: take your choice of those
That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they
That most are willing. If any such be here,
As it were sin to doubt, that love this painting
Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear
Lesser his person than an ill report; 70
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
And that his country's dearer than himself;
Let him, alone, or so many so minded,
Wave thus, to express his disposition,
And follow Marcius.

*They all shout and wave their swords;
take him up in their arms, and cast
up their caps.*

O! me alone? Make you a sword of me?
If these shows be not outward, which of you
But is four Volscs? none of you but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius
A shield as hard as his. A certain number, 80
Though thanks to all, must I select from all:
the rest

Shall bear the business in some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Please you to
march;

And four shall quickly draw out my command,

Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows:
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

TITUS LARTIUS, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with drum and trumpet toward COMINIUS and CAIUS MARCIUS, enters with a Lieutenant, a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So; let the ports be guarded: keep your duties,

As I have set them down. If I do send, dispatch

Those centuries to our aid; the rest will serve

For a short holding: if we lose the field,

We cannot keep the town.

Lieu. Fear not our care, sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us.
Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us. Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volscian Camps.

Alarum. Enter from opposite sides MARCIUS and AUFIDIUS.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee

Worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike:

Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor

More than thy fame and envy. Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first budger die the other's slave,

And the gods doom him after!

Auf. If I fly, Marcius,

Halloo me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus,

Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,

And made what work I pleas'd; 't is not my blood

Wherein thou seest me mask'd; for thy revenge 10

Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector

That was the whip of your bragg'd progeny,

Thou should'st not 'scape me here.

They fight, and certain Volscs come to the aid of AUFIDIUS.

Officious, and not valiant, you have sham'd me

In your condemned seconds.

Exeunt fighting, all driven by MARCIUS.

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

Alarum. A retreat sounded. Flourish.
Enter, at one side, COMINIUS and Romans; at the other side, MARCIUS, with his arm in a scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,
Thou 'dst not believe thy deeds: but I'll report it
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles,
Where great patricians shall attend and shrug,
I' the end admire; where ladies shall be frightened,
And, gladly quak'd, hear more; where the dull tribunes,
That, with the fusty plebeians, hate thine honours,
Shall say, against their hearts,
'We thank the gods our Rome hath such a soldier!'
Yet can'st thou to a morsel of this feast, 10
Having fully din'd before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS, with his power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison:
Hadst thou beheld—
Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me grieves me. I have done
As you have done; that's what I can;
induc'd
As you have been; that's for my country:
He that has but effected his good will Hath overta'en mine act.

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving; Rome must know 20
The value of her own: 't were a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traduce-
ment,
To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest. Therefore, I beseech you,
In sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done, before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not, Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude, 30
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses,
Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store, of all
The treasure, in this field achiev'd and city,
We render you the tenth; to be ta'en forth,

Before the common distribution,
At your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing. 40

A long flourish. They all cry, 'MARCUS! MARCIUS!' cast up their caps and lances; COMINIUS and LARTIUS stand bare.

May these same instruments, which you profane, Never sound more! When drums and trumpets shall

I' the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing!

When steel grows soft as the parasite's silk,
Let him be made a coverture for the wars!
No more, I say! For that I have not wash'd
My nose that bled, or foil'd some debile wretch,

Which, without note, here's many else have done,

You shout me forth 50

In acclamations hyperbolical;
As if I loved my little should be dieted
In praises sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you;
More cruel to your good report than grateful
To us that give you truly. By your patience,
If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you,

Like one that means his proper harm, in manacles,
Then reason safely with you. Therefore, be it known,

As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcius
Wears this war's garland; in token of the which, 60

My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,

With all his trim belonging; and from this time,

For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all the applause and clamour of the host,

CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS! Bear
The addition nobly ever!

All. Caius Marcius Coriolanus!
Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums.

Cor. I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush or no: howbeit, I thank you. 70

I mean to stride your steed, and at all times
To undercrest your good addition

To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent;
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success. You, Titus Lartius,

Must to Corioli back: send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate,
For their own good and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I, that now
Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to 80

Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: 't is yours. What is 't?

Cor. I sometime lay here in Corioli
At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly;
He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;

But then Aufidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request
you

To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O! well begg'd.
Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcius, his name?
Cor. By Jupiter! forgot.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd. 91
Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent:
The blood upon your visage dries; 't is time
It should be look'd to: come. Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The camp of the Volsces.

*A Flourish. Cornets. Enter TULLUS
AUFIDIUS, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.*

Auf. The town is ta'en!
First Sold. 'T will be deliver'd back on good condition.

Auf. Condition!
I would I were a Roman; for I cannot,
Being a Volscie, be that I am. Condition!
What good condition can a treaty find
I' the part that is at mercy? Five times,

Marcius,
I have fought with thee; so often hast thou
beat me,
And would'st do so, I think, should we encounter 10

As often as we eat. By the elements,
If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,
He's mine, or I am his: mine emulation
Hath not that honour in 't it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force, True sword to sword, I'll potch at him some
way

Or wrath or craft may get him.
First Sold. He's the devil.

Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle. My valour's poison'd

With only suffering stain by him; for him Shall fly out of itself. Nor sleep nor sanctuary,

Being naked, sick, nor fane nor Capitol, 20
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Marcius. Where I find him, were it

At home, upon my brother's guard, even
there,

Against the hospitable canon, would I Wash my fierce hand in-'s heart. Go you to the city;

Learn how 't is held, and what they are that must

Be hostages for Rome.

First Sold. Will not you go?

Auf. I am attended at the cypress grove:
I pray you, 30

'T is south the city mills, bring me word
thither

How the world goes, that to the peace of it
I may spur on my journey.

First Sold. I shall, sir.

Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, SICINIUS, and BRUTUS
Men. The augurer tells me we shall have news to-night.

Bru. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their
friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry
plebeians would the noble Marcius. 11

Bru. He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a
bear.

Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb. You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Sic., Bru. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He's poor in no one fault, but stored with all. 21

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: do you two know how you are censured here in the city,
I mean of us o' the right-hand file? do you?

Sic., Bru. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now,— will you not be angry?

Sic., Bru. Well, well, sir; well. 30

Men. Why, 't is no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you in being so. You blame
Marcius for being proud? 36

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone;
for your helps are many, or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone.
You talk of pride: O! that you could turn your eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves. O! that you could. 45

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, alias fools, as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too. 50

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tiber in 't; said to be something imperfect in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like upon too trivial motion; one that converses more with the buttock of the night than with the forehead of the morning. What I think I utter, and spend my malice in my breath.

Meeting two such weals-men as you are, I cannot call you Lycurguses, if the drink you give me touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I can't say your worships have delivered the matter well when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables; and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men, yet they lie deadly that tell you you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follows it that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson conspectivities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too? 72

Bru. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs; you wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fosset-seller, and then rejoin the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience. When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the colic, you make faces like mummings, set up the bloody flag against all patience, and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause is, calling both the parties knaves. You are a pair of strange ones. 89

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table than a necessary benchman in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave as to stuff a botcher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying Marcius is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors since Deucalion, though peradventure some of the best of 'em were hereditary hangmen. Good den to your worship; more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsman of thy beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you. 105

BRUTUS and SICINIUS go aside.

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and VALERIA.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies, and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler, whither do you follow your eyes so fast? 109

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcius approaches; for the love of Juno, let 's go.

Men. Ha! Marcius coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee. Hoo! Marcius coming home!

Vol., Vir. Nay, 't is true.

Vol. Look, here 's a letter from him: the state hath another, his wife another; and I think there 's one at home for you. 120

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night. A letter for me!

Vir. Yes, certain, there 's a letter for you; I saw 't.

Men. A letter for me! It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiric, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded. 131

Vir. O! no, no, no.

Vol. O! he is wounded; I thank the gods for 't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much. Brings a' victory in his pocket? The wounds become him.

Vol. On 's brows, Menenius; he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Meh. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes they fought together, but Aufidius got off. 141

Men. And 't was time for him too, I 'll warrant him that: an he stayed by him I would not have been so fidiused for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that 's in them. Is the senate possessed of this? 148

Vol. Good ladies, let 's go. Yes, yes, yes; the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war. He hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly. 151

Vol. In troth there 's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous! ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! pow, wow.

Men. True! I 'll be sworn they are true. Where is he wounded? To the Tribunes. God save your good worships! Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud. Where is he wounded? 162

Vol. I' the shoulder and i' the left arm: there will be large cicatrices to show the people when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts i' the body. 169

Men. One i' the neck, and two i' the thigh, there 's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him. 170

Men. Now it 's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave.

A shout and flourish.

Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him he carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears:

Death, that dark spirit, in 's nervy arm doth lie;

Which, being advanc'd, declines, and then men die.

A Sennet. Trumpets sounded. Enter COMINIUS and TITUS LARTIUS; between them, CORIOLANUS, crowned with an oaken garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight
 Within Corioli gates: where he hath won,
 With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these
 In honour follows Coriolanus.
 Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Flourish.
All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. No more of this; it does offend my heart:

Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother!
Cor. O!

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods
 For my prosperity.

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up;
 My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius, and 189
 By deed-achieving honour newly nam'd,—
 What is it? Coriolanus must I call thee?
 But, O! thy wife—

Cor. My gracious silence, hail!
 Would'st thou have laugh'd had I come
 coffin'd home,
 That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah! my dear,

Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear,
 And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now, the gods crown thee!
Cor. And live you yet? To VALERIA. O my sweet lady, pardon.

Vol. I know not where to turn: O!
 welcome home;
 And welcome, general; and ye 're welcome
 all.

Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep,
 And I could laugh; I am light, and heavy.
 Welcome!

A curse begin at very root on 's heart
 That is not glad to see thee! You are three That Rome should dote on; yet, by the faith
 of men,

We have some old crab-trees here at home that will not Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors!

We call a nettle but a nettle, and
 The faults of fools but folly.

Com. Ever right.
Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on!

Cor. To VOLUMNIA and VIRGILIA. Your hand, and yours:
 Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
 The good patricians must be visited;
 From whom I have receiv'd not only greet-
 ings,

But with them change of honours.

Vol. I have liv'd
 To see inherited my very wishes,
 And the buildings of my fancy: only
 There's one thing wanting, which I doubt not but

Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother,
 I had rather be their servant in my way
 Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitol!

Flourish. Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before. The Tribunes remain.

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
 Are spectacled to see him: your prattling nurse

Into a rapture lets her baby cry
 While she chats him: the kitchen malkin pins

Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck, Clambering the walls to eye him: stalls,
 bulks, windows,
 Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges
 hors'd

With variable complexions, all agreeing
 In earnestness to see him: seld-shown flamens

Do press among the popular throngs, and puff

To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames Commit the war of white and damask in Their nicely-gawded cheeks, to the wanton
 spoil

Of Phoebus' burning kisses: such a pother
 As if that whatsoever god who leads him
 Were slyly crept into his human powers,
 And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. On the sudden,
 I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may,
 During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honours
 From where he should begin and end, but
 will

Lose those he hath won.

Bru. In that there 's comfort.
Sic. Doubt not the commoners, for whom we stand,

But they upon their ancient malice will Forget with the least cause these his new
 honours,

Which that he 'll give them, make I as little question
 As he is proud to do 't.

Bru. I heard him swear,
 Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put
 The napless vesture of humility:

Sic. Nor, showing, as the manner is, his wounds
 To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'T is right.
Bru. It was his word. Oh! he would miss it rather

Than carry it but by the suit o' the gentry
 to him

And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better
 Than have him hold that purpose and to put it
 In execution.

Bru. 'T is most like he will.

Sic. It shall be to him then as our good
 wills,

A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out
 To him or our authorities. For an end, 260
 We must suggest the people in what hatred
 He still hath held them; that to 's power he would

Have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders, and
Disproportion'd their freedoms; holding them,
In human action and capacity,
Of no more soul nor fitness for the world
Than camels in the war; who have their provand
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Sic This, as you say, suggested
At some time when his soaring insolence Shall reach the people, which time shall not want

If he be put upon 't; and that's as easy
As to set dogs on sheep, will be his fire
To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru. What 's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'T is thought
That Marcius shall be consul.
I have seen the dumb men throng to see him,
and
The blind to hear him speak: matrons flung gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handker-
chers, 280
Upon him as he pass'd; the nobles bended,
As to Jove's statue, and the commons made A shower and thunder with their caps and shouts:
I never saw the like.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the
time,
But hearts for the event.
Sic. Have with you.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. The Capitol.

Enter two Officers, to lay cushions.

First Off. Come, come; they are almost here. How many stand for consulships?

Second Off. Three, they say; but 't is thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it.

First Off. That 's a brave fellow; but he 's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

Second Off. Faith, there have been many great men that have flattered the people, who ne'er loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground.
Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition;
and out of his noble carelessness lets them
plainly see 't. 17

First Off. If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waver'd indifferently
'twixt doing them neither good nor harm;
but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him, and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love. 28

Second Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country; and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bon-netted, without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report;
but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury; to report otherwise, were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof
and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

First Off. No more of him; he 's a worthy man: make way, they are coming. 40

*A Sennet. Enter, with Lictors before them,
COMINIUS the Consul, MENENIUS,
CORIOLANUS, many other Senators,
SICINIUS and BRUTUS. The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.*

Men. Having determin'd of the Volscs,
and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains,
As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service that Hath thus stood for his country: therefore,
please you,

Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present consul, and last general
In our well-found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Marcius Coriolanus, whom 50
We met here both to thank and to remember
With honours like himself.

First Sen. Speak, good Cominius: Leave nothing out for length, and make us
think

Rather our state 's defective for requital
Than we to stretch it out. To the Tribunes.

Masters o' the people,
We do request your kindest ears, and after,
Your loving motion toward the common
body,

To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are convented
Upon a pleasing treaty, and have hearts
Inclinable to honour and advance 60
The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather
We shall be blest to do, if he remember
A kinder value of the people than
He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That 's off, that 's off;
I would you rather had been silent. Please
you

To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly;
But yet my caution was more pertinent
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bedfellow.
Worthy Cominius, speak.

CORIOLANUS rises and offers to go away.
Nay, keep your place, 70

First Sen. Sit, Coriolanus; never shame to hear

What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon: I had rather have my wounds to heal again Than hear say how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope My words disbench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir: yet oft, When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.

You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not. But your people,

I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the sun

When the alarum were struck than idly sit

To hear my nothings monster'd. Exit.

Men. Masters o' the people, Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter, That 's thousand to one good one, when you now see

He had rather venture all his limbs for honour

Than one on 's ears to hear it? Proceed, Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus

Should not be utter'd feebly. It is held That valour is the chiefest virtue, and

Most dignifies the haver: if it be, The man I speak of cannot in the world

Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years, When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought Beyond the mark of others: our then dic-tator,

Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,

When with his Amazonian chin he drove The bristled lips before him. He bestrid

An o'er-press'd Roman, and i' the consul's view

Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met, And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats, When he might act the woman in the scene,

He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his deed

Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age

Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea, And in the brunt of seventeen battles since

He lurch'd all swords of the garland. For this last,

Before and in Corioli, let me say, I cannot speak him home: he stopp'd the fliers, And by his rare example made the coward

Turn terror into sport: as weeds before A vessel under sail, so men obey'd

And fell below his stem: his sword, death's stamp,

Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot He was a thing of blood, whose every motion

Was tim'd with dying cries: alone he enter'd

The mortal gate of the city, which he painted With shunless destiny; aidless came off,

And with a sudden reinforcement struck Corioli like a planet. Now all 's his:

When by and by the din of war gan pierce His ready sense; then straight his doubled

spirit 120

Re-quicken'd what in flesh was fatigate, And to the battle came he; where he did

Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if 'T were a perpetual spoil; and till we call'd

Both field and city ours, he never stood To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man! First Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours Which we devise him.

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at, And look'd upon things precious as they were The common muck o' the world: he covets

less 130

Than misery itself would give; rewards His deeds with doing them, and is content

To spend the time to end it. Men. He 's right noble:

Let him be call'd for. First Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd

To make thee consul. Cor. I do owe them still

My life and services. Men. It then remains

That you do speak to the people. Cor. I do beseech you,

Let me o'erleap that custom, for I cannot

Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,

For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage; please you

That I may pass this doing. Sic. Sir, the people

Must have their voices; neither will they bate One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to 't: Pray you, go fit you to the custom, and Take to you, as your predecessors have, Your honour with your form.

Cor. It is a part That I shall blush in acting, and might well

Be taken from the people. Bru. Mark you that?

Cor. To brag unto them, thus I did, and thus;

Show them the unaching scars which I should hide,

As if I had receiv'd them for the hire Of their breath only!

Men. Do not stand upon 't. We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,

Our purpose to them; and to our noble consul

Wish we all joy and honour.

Senators. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!

Flourish. Exeunt all but SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sic. May they perceive's intent! He will require them,

As if he did condemn what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come; we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here; on the marketplace

I know they do attend us. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Forum.

Enter several Citizens.

First Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

Second Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

Third Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do; for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingrateful were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

First Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve; for once we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

Third Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured: and truly I think if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points o' the compass.

Second Cit. Think you so? Which way do you judge my wit would fly?

Third Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; 't is strongly wedged up in a blockhead; but if it were at liberty, 't would, sure, southward.

Second Cit. Why that way?

Third Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where, being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return, for conscience sake, to help to get thee a wife.

Second Cit. You are never without your tricks: you may, you may.

Third Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter CORIOLANUS in a gown of humility, and MENENIUS.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behaviour. We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars; wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore, follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content. Exeunt Citizens.

Men. O sir, you are not right: have you not known

The worthiest men have done 't?

Cor. What must I say?

'I pray, sir,'—Plague upon 't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace. 'Look, sir, my wounds!

I got them in my country's service, when Some certain of your brethren roar'd and ran

From the noise of our own drums.'

Men. O me! the gods!

You must not speak of that: you must desire them

To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me! Hang 'em!

I would they would forget me, like the virtues

Which our divines lose by 'em.

Men. You'll mar all:

I'll leave you. Pray you, speak to 'em, I pray you,

In wholesome manner.

Exit. Bid them wash their faces, And keep their teeth clean.

Re-enter two Citizens.

So, here comes a brace. You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.

First Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to 't.

Cor. Mine own desert.

Second Cit. Your own desert!

Cor. Ay, not mine own desire.

First Cit. How! not your own desire!

Cor. No, sir; 't was never my desire yet to trouble the poor with begging.

First Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the consulship?

First Cit. The price is, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly! Sir, I pray, let me ha' 't: I have wounds to show you, which shall be yours in private. Your good voice, sir; what say you?

Second Cit. You shall ha' 't, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir. There's in all two worthy voices begged. I have your alms: adieu.

First Cit. But this is something odd.

Second Cit. An 't were to give again,—but 't is no matter.

Exeunt the two Citizens.

Re-enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

Third Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma?

Third Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not indeed loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; 't is a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitingly; that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountiful to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

Fourth Cit. We hope to find you our friend, and therefore give you our voices heartily.

Third Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily! Exeunt.

Cor. Most sweet voices! Better it is to die, better to starve, Than crave the hire which first we do deserve.

Why in this woolvish toge should I stand here,

To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear, Their needless vouches? Custom calls me to 't:

What custom wills, in all things should we do 't,

The dust on antique time would lie unswept, And mountainous error be too highly heap'd For truth to o'erpeer. Rather than fool it so, Let the high office and the honour go To one that would do thus. I am half through;

The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Re-enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices.

Your voices: for your voices I have fought; Watch'd for your voices; for your voices bear Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six I have seen and heard of; for your voices have Done many things, some less, some more: your voices:

Indeed, I would be consul.

Fifth Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.

Sixth Cit. Therefore let him be consul. The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people!

All. Amen, amen.

God save thee, noble consul!

Exeunt Citizens.
Worthy voices!

Cor.

Re-enter MENENIUS, with BRUTUS and SICINIUS.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice: remains That, in the official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have discharged:

The people do admit you, and are summon'd To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself again,

Repair to the senate-house.

Men. I'll keep you company. Will you along?

Bru. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well.

Exeunt CORIOLANUS and MENENIUS.
He has it now; and by his looks, methinks, 'T is warm at 's heart.

Bru. With a proud heart he wore His humble weeds. Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters! have you chose this man?

First Cit. He has our voices, sir.

Bru. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves.

Second Cit. Amen, sir. To my poor unworthy notice,

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices.

Third Cit. Certainly,

He flouted us downright.

First Cit. No, 't is his kind of speech; he did not mock us.

Second Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says

He us'd us scornfully: he should have show'd us

His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for 's country.

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.

All. No, no; no man saw 'em.

Third Cit. He said he had wounds, which he could show in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn, 'I would be consul,' says he: 'aged custom,

But by your voices, will not so permit me; Your voices therefore.' When we granted

that,

Here was, 'I thank you for your voices, thank you;

Your most sweet voices: now you have left your voices

I have no further with you.' Was not this mockery?

Sic. Why, either were you ignorant to see 't,

Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him
 As you were lesson'd, when he had no
 power,
 But was a petty servant to the state,
 He was your enemy, ever spake against
 Your liberties and the charters that you bear
 I' the body of the weal; and now, arriving
 A place of potency and sway o' the state, 190
 If he should still malignantly remain
 Fast foe to the plebeii, your voices might Be curses to yourselves? You should have said
 That as his worthy deeds did claim no less Than what he stood for, so his gracious nature
 Would think upon you for your voices and Translate his malice towards you into love,
 Standing your friendly lord.
Sic. Thus to have said,
 As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his
 spirit
 And tried his inclination; from him pluck'd Either his gracious promise, which you
 might, 201
 As cause had call'd you up, have held him
 to;
 Or else it would have gall'd his surly nature,
 Which easily endures not article
 Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage,
 You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler,
 And pass'd him unelected.
Bru. Did you perceive
 He did solicit you in free contempt
 When he did need your loves, and do you think
 That his contempt shall not be bruising to
 you 210
 When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies
 No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry
 Against the rectorship of judgment?
Sic. Have you
 Ere now denied the asker? and now again
 Of him that did not ask, but mock, bestow
 Your sued-for tongues?
Third Cit. He's not confirm'd; we may deny him yet.
Second Cit. And will deny him:
 I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.
First Cit. I twice five hundred and their friends to piece 'em. 220
Bru. Get you hence instantly, and tell those friends,
 They have chose a consul that will from them take
 Their liberties; make them of no more voice
 Than dogs that are so often beat for barking
 As therefore kept to do so.
Sic. Let them assemble;
 And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
 Your ignorant election. Enforce his pride,
 And his old hate unto you; besides, forget
 not
 With what contempt he wore the humble
 weed;
 How in his suit he scorn'd you; but your
 loves, 230

Thinking upon his services, took from you
 The apprehension of his present portance,
 Which most gibingly, ungravely, he did
 fashion
 After the inveterate hate he bears you.
Bru. Lay
 A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labour'd,
 No impediment between, but that you must
 Cast your election on him.
Sic. Say you chose him
 More after our commandment than as guided By your own true affections; and that your
 minds,
 Pre-occupied with what you rather must do Than what you should, made you against the grain 241
 To voice him consul: lay the fault on us.
Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say we read lectures to you,
 How youngly he began to serve his country,
 How long continued, and what stock he springs of,
 The noble house o' the Marcians, from whence came
 That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's
 son,
 Who, after great Hostilius, here was king;
 Of the same house Publius and Quintus
 were,
 That our best water brought by conduits
 hither; 250
 And Censorinus that was so surnam'd,
 And nobly named so, twice being censor,
 Was his great ancestor.
Sic. One thus descended,
 That hath beside well in his person wrought
 To be set high in place, we did commend
 To your remembrances: but you have found,
 Scaling his present bearing with his past,
 That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
 Your sudden approbation.
Bru. Say you ne'er had done 't.
 Harp on that still, but by our putting on; 260
 And presently, when you have drawn your number,
 Repair to the Capitol.
All. We will so: almost all Repent in their election. Exeunt Citizens.
Bru. Let them go on;
 This mutiny were better put in hazard
 Than stay, past doubt, for greater.
 If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
 With their refusal, both observe and answer
 The vantage of his anger.
Sic. To the Capitol:
 Come, we 'll be there before the stream o'
 the people;
 And this shall seem, as partly 't is, their
 own, 270
 Which we have goaded onward. Exeunt.

ACT III
 SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.
Cornets. Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Senators and Patricians.

Cor. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head?

Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was which caus'd our swifter composition.

Cor. So then the Volscies stand but as at first.

Ready when time shall prompt them, to make road

Upon 's again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul, so, That we shall hardly in our ages see Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?

Lart. On safe-guard he came to me; and did curse

Against the Volscies, for they had so vilely yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? what? Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword;

That of all things upon the earth he hated Your person most, that he would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?

Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there,

To oppose his hatred fully. Welcome home. 20

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,

The tongues o' the common mouth: I do despise them;

For they do prank them in authority

Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Bru. It will be dangerous to go on: no further.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the noble and the common?

Bru. Cominius, no.

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

First Cit. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place. 31

Bru. The people are incens'd against him.

Sic. Stop,

Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?

Must these have voices, that can yield them now,

And straight disclaim their tongues? What are your offices?

You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?

Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,

To curb the will of the nobility: 39

Suffer 't, and live with such as cannot rule Nor ever will be rul'd.

Bru. Call 't not a plot: The people cry you mock'd them, and of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;

Scandal'd the suppliants for the people, call'd them

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them sithence?

Bru. How! I inform them!

Com. You are like to do such business.

Bru. Not unlike,

Each way, to better yours.

Cor. Why then should I be consul? By yond clouds, 50

Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me Your fellow tribune.

Sic. You show too much of that For which the people stir: if you will pass

To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,

Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit; Or never be so noble as a consul,

Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abus'd; set on.

This paltering

Becomes not Rome, nor has Coriolanus 59

Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely 't the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn! This was my speech, and I will speak 't again—

Men. Not now, not now.

First Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will. My nobler friends,

I crave their pardons:

For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them

Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves: I say again,

In soothing them we nourish 'gainst our senate

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition, Which we ourselves have plough'd for,

sow'd and scatter'd, 71

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number;

Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

First Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How! no more!

As for my country I have shed my blood, Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs

Coin words till their decay against those measles,

Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought

The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak o' the people

As if you were a god to punish, not 81

A man of their infirmity.

Sic. 'T were well
We let the people know 't.
Men. What, what? his choler?
Cor. Choler!
Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Jove, 't would be my mind.
Sic. It is a mind
That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.
Cor. Shall remain!
Hear you this Triton of the minnows? mark
you
His absolute 'shall'?
Com. 'T was from the canon.
Cor. 'Shall'?
O good but most unwise patricians! why, if You grave but reckless senators, have you
thus
Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
That with his peremptory 'shall,' being but
The horn and noise o' the monster's, wants not spirit
To say he 'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? If he have
power,
Then vail your ignorance; if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. If you are learned,
Be not as common fools; if you are not, 100
Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians
If they be senators; and they are no less,
When, both your voices blended, the great'st
taste
Most palates theirs. They choose their magistrate,
And such a one as he, who puts his 'shall,'
His popular 'shall,' against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. By Jove himself!
It makes the consuls base; and my soul
aches
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion 110
May enter 'twixt the gap of both and take
The one by the other.
Com. Well, on to the market-place.
Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give
forth
The corn o' the storehouse gratis, as 't was us'd
Sometime in Greece,—
Men. Well, well; no more of that.
Cor. Though there the people had more absolute power,
I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.
Bru. Why, shall the people give
One that speaks thus their voice?
Cor. I'll give my reasons.
More worthier than their voices. They know the corn 120
Was not our recompense, resting well
assur'd
They ne'er did service for 't. Being press'd to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was
touch'd,
They would not thread the gates: this kind of service

Did not deserve corn gratis. Being i' the
war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valour, spoke not for them. The accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,
All cause unborn, could never be the motive
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then?
How shall this bisson multitude digest 131
The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express What's like to be their words: 'We did request it;
We are the greater poll, and in true fear
They gave us our demands.' Thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares fears; which will in time break ope
The locks o' the senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles.
Men. Come, enough.
Bru. Enough, with over-measure.
Cor. No, take more:
What may be sworn by, both divine and human, 141
Seal what I end withal! This double worship,
Where one part does disdain with cause, the other
Insult without all reason; where gentry,
title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance,—it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while
To unstable slightness: purpose so barr'd,
it follows
Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore,
beseech you,
You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state 151
More than you doubt the change on 't, that prefer
A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump a body with a dangerous physic
That's sure death without it, at once pluck
out
The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the
state
Of that integrity which should become it,
Not having the power to do the good it
would, 160
For the ill which doth control 't.
Bru. Has said enough.
Sic. Has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
As traitors do.
Cor. Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm
thee!
What should the people do with these bald
tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench. In a rebellion,

When what 's not meet, but what must be,
was law,
Then were they chosen: in a better hour,
Let what is meet be said it must be meet,
And throw their power i' the dust. 171

Bru. Manifest treason!

Sic. This a consul! no.

Bru. The ædiles, ho!

Enter an Ædile.

Let him be apprehended.

Sic. Go, call the people; Exit Ædile.
in whose name myself

Attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal: obey, I charge
thee,

And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Senators. We 'll surely him.

Com. Aged sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing! or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments.

Sic. Help, ye citizens!

Re-enter the Ædile, with Others, and a rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect. 181

Sic. Here 's he that would take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, ædiles!

Citizens. Down with him!—down with
him!

Senators. Weapons!—weapons!—weapons!

*They all bustle about CORIOLANUS, crying Tribunes!—Patricians!—Citizens!—What,
ho!*

Sicinius!—Brutus!—Coriolanus!—Citizens!

Peace! Peace! Peace!—Stay!—Hold!—
Peace!

Men. What is about to be? I am out of
breath;

Confusion 's near; I cannot speak. You,
tribunes 190

To the people! Coriolanus, patience!

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me, people; peace!

Citizens. Let 's hear our tribune:—
Peace!—Speak, speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:
Marcius would have all from you; Marcius,
Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fie, fie, fie!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

First Sen. To unbuild the city and to lay all flat.

Sic. What is the city but the people?

Citizens. True, 200

The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd

The people's magistrates.

Citizens. You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Com. That is the way to lay the city flat;

To bring the roof to the foundation,

And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death.

Bru. Or let us stand to our authority.
Or let us lose it. We do here pronounce,

Upon the part o' the people, in whose power
We were elected theirs, Marcius is worthy 211
Of present death.

Sic. Therefore lay hold of him;
Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence

Into destruction cast him.

Bru. Ædiles, seize him!

Citizens. Yield, Marcius, yield!

Men. Hear me one word;

Beseech you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Æd. Peace, peace!

Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's friend,

And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.

Bru. Sir, those cold ways,

That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous 221

Where the disease is violent. Lay hands
upon him,

And bear him to the rock.

Cor. No; I 'll die here.

Drawing his sword.

There 's some among you have beheld me
fighting:

Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me.

Men. Down with that sword! Tribunes, withdraw awhile.

Bru. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Help Marcius, help,
You that be noble; help him, young and old!

Citizens. Down with him!—down with him!

In this mutiny, the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and the People, are beat in.

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone, away! 220

All will be naught else.

Second Sen. Get you gone.

Com. Stand fast:

We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

First Sen. The gods forbid!
I prithee, noble friend, home to thy house;
Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 't is a sore upon us
You cannot tent yourself: be gone, beseech
you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us.

Cor. I would they were barbarians, as
they are,

Though in Rome litter'd, not Romans, as they are not, 239

Though calv'd i' the porch o' the Capitol,—
Men. Be gone;

Put not your worthy rage into your tongue;
One time will owe another.

Cor. On fair ground

I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself

Take up a brace o' the best of them; yea,
the two tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic;
And manhood is call'd foolery when it stands
Against a falling fabric. Will you hence,
Before the tag return? whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters and o'erbear
What they are us'd to bear.

Men. Pray you, be gone.
I'll try whether my old wit be in request 251
With those that have but little: this must be patch'd
With cloth of any colour.

Com. Nay, come away.
*Exeunt CORIOLANUS, COMINIUS,
and Others.*

First Pat. This man has marr'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,

Or Jove for 's his power to thunder. His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;

And, being angry, does forget that ever 259
He heard the name of death. A noise within.
Here's goodly work!

Second Pat. I would they were a-bed!
Men. I would they were in Tiber! What the vengeance!

Could he not speak 'em fair?

Re-enter BRUTUS and SICIINIUS, with the rabble.

Sic. Where is this viper
That would depopulate the city and
Be every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes,—
Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock

With rigorous hands: he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial

Than the severity of the public power,
Which he so sets at nought.

First Cit. He shall well know
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands. 272

Citizens. He shall, sure on 't.

Men. Sir, sir,—

Sic. Peace!

Men. Do not cry havoc, where you should but hunt

With modest warrant.

Sic. Sir, how comes 't that you
Have help to make this rescue?

Men. Hear me speak:
As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults.

Sic. Consul! what consul?

Men. The Consul Coriolanus.

Bru. He a consul!

Citizens. No, no, no, no, no. 281

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours,
good people,

I may be heard, I would crave a word or two,
The which shall turn you to no further harm
Than so much loss of time.

Sic. Speak briefly then;
For we are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor. To eject him hence
Were but one danger, and to keep him here
Our certain death; therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude Towards her deserved children is enroll'd 292

In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own!

Sic. He's a disease that must be cut
away.

Men. O! he's a limb that has but a disease;

Mortal to cut it off; to cure it easy.

What has he done to Rome that's worthy
death?

Killing our enemies, the blood he hath lost,
Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he
hath, 300

By many an ounce, he dropp'd it for his
country;

And what is left, to lose it by his country,
Were to us all, that do 't and suffer it,
A brand to th' end o' the world.

Sic. This is clean kam.

Bru. Merely awry; when he did love his country
It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was.

Bru. We'll hear no more.
Pursue him to his house, and pluck him
thence,

Lest his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread further.

Men. One word more, one word.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find 312
The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will, too
late,

Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Proceed by process;

Lest parties, as he is belov'd, break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans.

Bru. If it were so,—

Sic. What do ye talk?
Have we not had a taste of his obedience?
Our ædiles smote? ourselves resisted?

Come!

Men. Consider this: he has been bred i'
the wars 320
Since he could draw a sword, and is ill
school'd

In bolted language; meal and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me
leave,

I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
In peace, to his utmost peril.

First Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody, and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer. 330
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.
Sic. Meet on the market-place. We'll attend you there:
 Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
 In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you.
To the Senators. Let me desire your company. He must come,
 Or what is worst will follow.

First Sen. Pray you, let's to him.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in COR-IOLANUS'S House.

Enter CORIOLANUS and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears;
 present me
 Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;
 Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
 That the precipitation might down stretch
 Below the beam of sight; yet will I still
 Be thus to them.

First Pat. You do the nobler.

Cor. I muse my mother
 Does not approve me further, who was wont
 To call them woollen vassals, things created
 To buy and sell with groats, to show bare
 heads
 In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder,

When one but of my ordinance stood up 12
 To speak of peace or war.

Enter VOLUMNIA.

I talk of you:
 Why did you wish me milder? Would you
 have me
 False to my nature? Rather say I play
 The man I am.

Vol. O! sir, sir, sir,
 I would have had you put your power well on
 Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.
Vol. You might have been enough the man you are
 With striving less to be so: lesser had
 been 20

The thwartings of your dispositions if You had not show'd them how ye were dis-
 pos'd
 Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.
Vol. Ay, and burn too.

Enter MENENIUS and Senators.

Men. Come, come; you have been too rough, something too rough;
 You must return and mend it.

First Sen. There's no remedy;
 Unless, by not so doing, our good city
 Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray be counsell'd.
 I have a heart of mettle apt as yours,
 But yet a brain that leads my use of anger 30
 To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman!
 Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but
 that

The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic
 For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,

Which I can scarcely bear.
Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well, what then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them! I cannot do it to the gods;
 Must I then do 't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;
 Though therein you can never be too noble,
 But when extremities speak. I have heard you say, 41

Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
 I' the war do grow together: grant that, and tell me,

In peace what each of them by the other
 lose,

That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour in your wars to seem
 The same you are not, which, for your best
 ends,

You adopt your policy, how is it less or
 worse,

That it shall hold companionship in peace
 With honour, as in war, since that to both 50
 It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to
 speak

To the people; not by your own instruction,
 Nor by the matter which your heart prompts
 you,

But with such words that are but rooted in Your tongue, though but bastards and syllables

Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.
 Now, this no more dishonours you at all
 Than to take in a town with gentle words,
 Which else would put you to your fortune and
 The hazard of much blood. 61

I would dissemble with my nature where My fortunes and my friends at stake requir'd

I should do so in honour: I am in this,
 Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;

And you will rather show our general louts
 How you can frown than spend a fawn upon
 'em,

For the inheritance of their loves and safeguard

Of what that want might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!
 Come, go with us; speak fair; you may salve so, 70

Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
 Of what is past.

Vol. I prithee now, my son,
 Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
 And thus far having stretch'd it, here be
 with them,

Thy knee bussing the stones, for in such business

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant

More learned than the ears, waving thy head,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout
heart,
Now humble as the ripest mulberry
That will not hold the handling: or say to
them,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in
broils
Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but thou wilt
frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power and person.
Men. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were
yours;
For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.
Vol. Prithee now, Go, and be rul'd; although I know thou hadst rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf
Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Comi- nus.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. I have been 'i the market-place;
and, sir, 't is fit
You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness or by absence: all 's in anger.
Men. Only fair speech.
Com. I think 't will serve if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.
Vol. He must, and will.
Prithee now, say you will, and go about it.
Cor. Must I go show them my unbarbed sconce?
Must I with base tongue give my noble
heart
A lie that it must bear? Well, I will do 't:
Yet were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcius, they to dust should grind it
And throw 't against the wind. To the market-place!
You have put me now to such a part which never
I shall discharge to the life.
Com. Come, come, we 'll prompt you.
Vol. I prithee now, sweet son, as thou hast said
My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.
Cor. Well, I must do 't.
Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! my throat of war be
turn'd,
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lull asleep! the smiles of knaves
Tent in my cheeks, and school-boys' tears
take up
The glasses of my sight! a beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips, and my arm'd knees,

Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms! I will not do 't,
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth, 121
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice then:
To beg of thee it is my more dishonour
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin; let Thy mother rather feel thy pride than fear Thy dangerous stoutness, for I mock at
death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it
from me,
But owe thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content:
Mother, I am going to the market-place; 131 Chide me no more. I 'll mountebank their
loves,
Cog their hearts from them, and come home
belov'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going:
Commend me to my wife. I 'll return consul,

Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I' the way of flattery further.

Vol. Do your will. Exit.
Com. Away! the tribunes do attend you:
arm yourself

To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd
With accusations, as I hear, more strong 140
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is 'mildly.' Pray you, let us go:

Let them accuse me by invention, I
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then. Mildly!
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Forum.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects
Tyrannical power: if he evades us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoil, got on the Antiates,
Was ne'er distributed.

Enter an Ædile.

What, will he come?

Æd. He 's coming.

Bru. How accompanied?

Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favour'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd 9
Set down by the poll?

Æd. I have; 't is ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither;
And when they hear me say 'It shall be so I' the right and strength o' the commons,' be it either

For death, for fine, or banishment, then let
them,

If I say fine, cry 'fine'; if death, cry 'death';
Insisting on the old prerogative
And power i' the truth o' the cause.

Æd. I shall inform them.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd
Enforce the present execution 21
Of what we chance to sentence.

Æd. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong and ready for this hint,
When we shall hap to give 't them.

Bru. Go; about it. Exit Ædile.
Put him to choler straight. He hath been
us'd

Ever to conquer, and to have his worth
Of contradiction: being once chaf'd, he cannot

Be rein'd unto temperance; then he
speaks

What's in his heart; and that is there which
looks

With us to break his neck.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you. 31

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece

Will bear the knave by the volume. The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice

Supplied with worthy men! plant love
among us!

Throng our large temples with the shows of
peace,

And not our streets with war!

First Sen. Amen, amen.

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter Ædile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people.

Æd. List to your tribunes. Audience:
peace! I say. 40

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Sic., Bru. Well, say. Peace, ho!

Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this present?

Must all determine here?

Sic. I do demand,

If you submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and are content

To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you?

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo! citizens, he says he is content:
The war-like service he has done, consider;
think

Upon the wounds his body bears, which
show 50

Like graves i' the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with briers;
Scars to move laughter only.

Men. Consider further,
That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier: do not take

His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy you.

Com. Well, well; no more.

Cor. What is the matter

That being pass'd for consul with full voice,
I am so dishonour'd that the very hour 60
You take it off again?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 't is true, I ought so.

Sic. We charge you, that you have con-triv'd to take

From Rome all season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;

For which you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How! traitor!

Men. Nay, temperately; your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold-in
the people!

Call me their traitor! Thou injurious tribune!

Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths, 70

In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say

'Thou liest' unto thee with a voice as free
As I pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?

Citizens. To the rock!—To the rock with
him!

Sic. Peace!

We need not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do, and heard him

speak,

Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying

Those whose great power must try him;
even this, 80

So criminal and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath

Serv'd well for Rome,—

Cor. What do you prate of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You?

Men. Is this the promise that you made your mother?

Com. Know, I pray you,—

Cor. I'll know no further:

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian
death,

Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy 90

Their mercy at the price of one fair word,
Nor check my courage for what they can give,

To have 't with saying 'Good morrow.'

Sic. For that he has,

As much as in him lies, from time to time
Envied against the people, seeking means

To pluck away their power, as now at last Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence

Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it; in the name o' the

people,

And in the power of us the tribunes, we, 100
Even from this instant, banish him our city,

In peril of precipitation

From off the rock Tarpeian, never more To enter our Rome gates: i' the people's
name,
I say it shall be so.
Citizens. It shall be so.—It shall be so.—
Let him away.—
He's banish'd, and it shall be so.
Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends,—
Sic. He's sentenc'd; no more hearing.
Com. Let me speak:
I have been consul, and can show for Rome
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love i'
My country's good with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own
life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
And treasure of my loins; then if I would Speak that—
Sic. We know your drift: speak what?
Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd,
As enemy to the people and his country:
It shall be so.
Citizens. It shall be so.—It shall be so.
Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath I hate 120
As reek o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till at length
Your ignorance, which finds not till it feels,
Making not reservation of yourselves, 130
Still your own foes, deliver you as most Abated captives to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.
Exeunt CORIOLANUS, COMINIUS, ME-NENIUS, Senators, and Patricians.
Æd. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!
Citizens. Our enemy is banish'd!—He is gone!—Hoo! hoo!
They all shout, and throw up their caps.
Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow
him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city. 141
Citizens. Come, come!—Let's see him out at gates! come!
The gods preserve our noble tribunes!
Come! Exeunt.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—Rome. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears: a brief farewell: the beast

With many heads butts me away. Nay,
mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were
us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could
bear;
That when the sea was calm all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's
blows,
When most struck home, being gentle,
wounded, craves
A noble cunning: you were us'd to load me
With precepts that would make invincible 10
The heart that conn'd them.
Vir. O heavens! O heavens!
Cor. Nay, I prithee, woman,—
Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish!
Cor. What, what, what!
I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay,
mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to
say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat. Cominius, Droop not; adieu. Farewell, my wife! my
mother! 20
I'll do well yet. Thou old and true Mene-
nius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. My sometime
general,
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft
beheld
Heart-hardening spectacles; tell these sad
women
'T is fond to wail inevitable strokes
As 't is to laugh at 'em. My mother, you wot well
My hazards still have been your solace; and Believe 't not lightly, though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen 30
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen,
your son
Will or exceed the common or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice.
Vol. My first son,
Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius With thee awhile: determine on some
course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' the way before thee.
Cor. O the gods!
Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise
with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us, 39
And we of thee: so if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man,
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needer.
Cor. Fare ye well:
Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too
full
Of the wars' surfeits, to go rove with one

That's yet unbruised: bring me but out at gate.

Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and

My friends of noble touch, when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.

While I remain above the ground you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily
As any ear can hear. Come; let's not weep.
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,

I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand.
Come. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street near the Gate.

Enter SICINIUS, BRUTUS, and an Ædile.

Sic. Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further.
The nobility are vex'd, whom we see have sided

In his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shown our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done
Than when it was a-doing.

Sic. Bid them home;
Say their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dismiss them home.
Exit Ædile.

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and MENE-NIUS.

Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.
Bru. Why?

Sic. They say she's mad.

Bru. They have taken note of us: keep on your way.

Vol. O! ye're well met. The hoarded plague o' the gods

Requite your love!

Men. Peace, peace! be not so loud.
Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear—

Nay, and you shall hear some. To BRUTUS.
Will you be gone?

Vir. To SICINIUS. You shall stay too. I would I had the power

To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind?

Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame? Note but this fool.

Was not a man my father? Hadst thou fox-
ship

To banish him that struck more blows for
Rome

Than thou hast spoken words?

Sic. O blessed heavens!
Vol. More noble blows than ever thou wise words;

And for Rome's good. I'll tell thee what;
yet go:

Nay, but thou shalt stay too: I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then?
Vir. What then!

He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards and all.
Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men. Come, come; peace!

Sic. I would he had continu'd to his country

As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made.

Bru. I would he had.
Vol. 'I would he had!' 'T was you
incens'd the rabble:

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth
As I can of those mysteries which heaven

Will not have earth to know.

Bru. Pray, let us go.
Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone:

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go,
hear this:

As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The meanest house in Rome, so far my
son,

This lady's husband here, this, do you see?
Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you
all.

Bru. Well, well; we'll leave you.

Sic. Why stay we to be baited
With one that wants her wits?

Vol. Take my prayers with you.
Exeunt Tribunes.

I would the gods had nothing else to do
But to confirm my curses! Could I meet
'em

But once a day, it would unclog my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

Men. You have told them home,
And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup with me?

Vol. Anger's my meat; I sup upon myself,

And so shall starve with feeding. Come,
let's go.

Leave this faint puling and lament as I do,
In anger, Juno-like. Come, come, come.

Men. Fie, fie, fie! Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Highway between Rome and Antium.

Enter a Roman and a Volscian, meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir, and you know me: your name I think is Adrian.

Vol. It is so, sir: truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against 'em. Know you me
yet?

Vol. Nicanor? No.

Rom. The same, sir.

Vol. You had more beard when I last saw you; but your favour is well approved by your tongue. What's the news in Rome?

I have a note from the Volscian state to find you out there: you have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrections: the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vols. Hath been! Is it ended then? Our state thinks not so; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. 19

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again. For the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out. 27

Vols. Coriolanus banished!

Rom. Banished, sir.

Vols. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor. 31

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vols. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. 42

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vols. A most royal one: the centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning. 50

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vols. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Antium. Before AUFIDIUS'S House.

Enter CORIOLANUS, in mean apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium. City, 'T is I that made thy widows: many an heir Of these fair edifices fore my wars Have I heard groan and drop: then know me not,

Lest that thy wives with spits and boys with stones In puny battle slay me.

Enter a Citizen.

Save you, sir.

Cit. And you. Cor. Direct me, if it be your will, Where great Aufidius lies. Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, beseech you?

Cit. This, here before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir. Farewell.

Exit Citizen.
O world! thy slippery turns. Friends now fast sworn, 12

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,

Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise,

Are still together, who twin, as 't were, in love

Unseparable, shall within this hour,

On a dissension of a doit, break out

To bitterest enmity: so, fellest foes,

Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep 19

To take the one the other, by some chance, Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends

And interjoin their issues. So with me: My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon

This enemy town. I'll enter: if he slay me,

He does fair justice; if he give me way,

I'll do his country service. Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. A hall in AUFIDIUS'S House.

Music within. Enter a Servingman.

First Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here! I think our fellows are asleep. Exit.

Enter a Second Servingman

Second Serv. Where's Cotus? my master calls for him. Cotus! Exit.

Enter CORIOLANUS.

Cor. A goodly house: the feast smells well; but I Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the First Servingman.

First Ser. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you; pray, go to the door. Exit.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment, In being Coriolanus. 11

Re-enter Second Servingman.

Second Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

Second Serv. Away! Get you away.

Cor. Now thou'rt troublesome.

Second Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talked with anon. Exit.

Enter a Third Servingman. Re-enter the First.

Third Serv. What fellow's this? 20

First Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o' the house: prithee, call my master to him.

Third Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your hearth.

Third Serv. What are you?

Cor. A gentleman.

Third Serv. A marvellous poor one. 30

Cor. True, so I am.

Third Serv. Pray, you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you; pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Pushes him away.

Third Serv. What! will you not? Prithee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

First Serv. And I shall.

Exit.

Third Serv. Where dwellest thou? 40

Cor. Under the canopy.

Third Serv. Under the canopy!

Cor. Ay.

Third Serv. Where's that?

Cor. 'P the city of kites and crows.

Third Serv. 'P the city of kites and crows! What an ass it is! Then thou dwellest with daws too?

Cor. No; I serve not thy master.

Third Serv. How, sir! Do you meddle with my master? 51

Cor. Ay; 't is an honest service than to meddle with thy mistress.

Thou prat'st, and prat'st: serve with thy trencher.

Hence! Beats him away.

Enter AUFIDIUS and the First Servingman.

Auf. Where is this fellow?

First Serv. Here, sir: I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auf. Whence comest thou? what would'st thou? thy name?

Why speak'st not? speak, man: what's thy name?

Cor. Unmuffling. If, Tullus, 60
Not yet thou know'st me, and, seeing me, dost not

Think me for the man I am, necessity
Commands me name myself.

Auf. What is thy name?
Servants retire.

Cor. A name unmusical to the Volscians' ears,
And harsh in sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?
Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn,

Thou show'st a noble vessel. What's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown. Know'st thou me yet?

Auf. I know thee not. Thy name? 70

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done
To thee particularly, and to all the Volscies, Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness
may

My surname, Coriolanus: the painful service,

The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood

Shed for my thankless country, are requited
But with that surname; a good memory,
And witness of the malice and displeasure
Which thou should'st bear me: only that name remains;

The cruelty and envy of the people, 80
Permitted by our dastard nobles, who Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest;
And suffer'd me by the voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Now this extremity

Hath brought me to thy hearth; not out of hope, Mistake me not, to save my life; for if I had fear'd death, of all the men i' the
world

I would have voided thee; but in mere spite,

To be full quit of those my banishers,
Stand I before thee here. Then if thou hast 90

A heart of wreak in thee, that will revenge Thine own particular wrongs and stop those mains

Of shame seen through thy country, speed thee straight,

And make my misery serve thy turn: so
use it,

That my revengeful services may prove
As benefits to thee, for I will fight Against my canker'd country with the spleen
Of all the under fiends. But if so be

Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more
fortunes

Thou'rt tir'd, then, in a word, I also am 100
Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee and to thy ancient malice;
Which not to cut would show thee but a fool.

Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate, Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast,

And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Auf. O Marcius, Marcius!
Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded
from my heart

A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter 109
Should from yond cloud speak divine things,
And say 'T is true,' I'd not believe them
more

Than thee, all noble Marcius. Let me twine

Mine arms about that body, where against My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,

And scarr'd the moon with splinters: here I clip

The anvil of my sword, and do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love

As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Know thou
first,

I lov'd the maid I married; never man 120
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee
here,

Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt
heart

Than when I first my wedded mistress saw
heart

Than when I first my wedded mistress saw

Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars!

I tell thee,

We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,

Or lose mine arm for it. Thou hast beat me out

Twelve several times, and I have nightly
since

Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me;
We have been down together in my sleep, 130
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,

And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy
Marcius,

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster
all

From twelve to seventy, and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-bear. O! come; go
in,

And take our friendly senators by the hands,
Who now are here, taking their leaves of
me,

Who am prepar'd against your territories, 140
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods!

Auf. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have

The leading of thine own revenges, take
The one half of my commission; and set
down,

As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st

Thy country's strength and weakness, thine own ways;

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,

Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fight them, ere destroy. But come in:

Let me commend thee first to those that shall

Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!

And more a friend than e'er an enemy; 152
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand:
most welcome!

Exeunt CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.

First Serv. Here's a strange alteration!
Second Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have stricken him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me his clothes made a false report of him.

First Serv. What an arm he has! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top. 161

Second Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: he had,
sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

First Serv. He had so; looking as it were,
—would I were hanged but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

Second Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn. He is simply the rarest man i' the world.

First Serv. I think he is; but a greater soldier than he you wot on. 171

Second Serv. Who? my master?

First Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

Second Serv. Worth six on him.

First Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.

Second Serv. Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the defence of a town our general is excellent.

First Serv. Ay, and for an assault too. 180

Re-enter Third Servingman.

Third Serv. O slaves! I can tell you news;
news, you rascals.

First and Second Serv. What, what,
what? let's partake.

Third Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations; I had as lieve be a condemned
man.

First and Second Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

Third Serv. Why, here's he that was wont to thwack our general, Caius Marcius.

First Serv. Why do you say 'thwack our
general'? 191

Third Serv. I do not say 'thwack our general'; but he was always good enough
for him.

Second Serv. Come, we are fellows and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

First Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth on't: before Corioli he scotched him and notched him like a carbonado.

Second Serv. An he had been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him
too. 201

First Serv. But, more of thy news?

Third Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars;
set at upper end o' the table; no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him. Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with 's hand, and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i'
the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday, for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table.
He'll go, he says, and sow the porter of Rome gates by the ears. He will mow down all before him, and leave his passage polled. 215

Second Serv. And he's as like to do 't as any man I can imagine.

Third Serv. Do 't! he will do 't; for, look you, sir, he has as many friends as enemies;
which friends, sir, as it were, durst not,
look you, sir, show themselves, as we term
it, his friends, whilst he's in directitude. 222

First Serv. 'Directitude'! what's that?

Third Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood,
they will out of their burrows, like conies
after rain, and revel all with him.

First Serv. But when goes this forward?

Third Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon: 't is, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips. 232

Second Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

First Serv. Let me have war, say I: it exceeds peace as far as day does night; it's spritely, waking, audible, and full of vent. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy; muffled, deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bastard children than war's a destroyer of men. 241

Second Serv. 'Tis so: and as war, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

First Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

Third Serv. Reason: because they then less need one another. The wars for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volscians. They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in! Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;

His remedies are tame i' the present peace And quietness o' the people, which before Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends

Blush that the world goes well, who rather had,

Though they themselves did suffer by 't, behold

Dissentious numbers pestering streets than see

Our tradesmen singing in their shops and going

About their functions friendly.

Bru. We stood to 't in good time.

Enter MENENIUS.

Is this Menenius? 10

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he. O! he is grown most kind

Of late. Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much miss'd But with his friends: the commonwealth doth stand,

And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much better, if

He could have temporiz'd.

Sic. Where is he, hear you?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing: his mother and his wife

Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Citizens. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good den, our neighbors.

Bru. Good den to you all, good den to you all. 21

First Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees,

Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live, and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours: we wish'd Coriolanus

Had lov'd you as we did.

Citizens. Now the gods keep you!

Sic., Bru. Farewell, farewell,

Exeunt Citizens.

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time

Than when these fellows ran about the streets

Crying confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was

A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent, 30

O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,

Self-loving,—

Sic. And affecting one sole throne, Without assistance.

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation,

If he had gone forth consul, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome

Sits safe and still without him.

Enter an Ædile.

Æd.

Worthy tribunes,

There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,

Reports, the Volscies with two several powers

Are enter'd in the Roman territories, 40

And with the deepest malice of the war Destroy what lies before 'em.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius, Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment, Thrusts forth his horns again into the world;

Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,

And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd. It cannot be

The Volscies dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!

We have record that very well it can, And three examples of the like have been 50

Within my age. But reason with the fellow, Before you punish him, where he heard this,

Lest you shall chance to whip your information,

And beat the messenger who bids beware Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me:

I know this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles in great earnestness are going

All to the senate-house: some news is come

That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'T is this slave.
Go whip him fore the people's eyes: his raising; 60
Nothing but his report.

Men. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?
Mess. It is spoke freely out of many
mouths,

How probable I do not know, that Marcius,
Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst
Rome,

And vows revenge as spacious as between
The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!
Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish
Good Marcius home again.

Sic. The very trick on 't.
Men. This is unlikely: 71

He and Aufidius can no more atone
Than violentest contrariety.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. You are sent for to the senate:
A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius,
Associated with Aufidius, rages
Upon our territories; and have already O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and took
What lay before them.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. O! you have made good work.
Men. What news? what news?
Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters, and 81
To melt the city leads upon your pates,
To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses,—

Men. What's the news? what's the news?
Com. Your temples burned in their cement, and

Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an auger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news?
You have made fair work, I fear me. Pray, your news?

If Marcius should be join'd with Volscians,—
Com. If!

He is their god: he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than Nature, 91
That shapes man better; and they follow
him,

Against us brats, with no less confidence
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work,
You, and your apron-men; you that stood
so much

Upon the voice of occupation and
The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake
Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules
Did shake down mellow fruit. You have made fair work! 100

Bru. But is this true, sir?

Com. Ay; and you 'll look pale
Before you find it other. All the regions
Do smilingly revolt; and who resist
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Who is 't can blame him?

Your enemies, and his, find something in
him.

Men. We are all undone unless
The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?
The tribunes cannot do 't for shame; the
people

Deserve such pity of him as the wolf 110
Does of the shepherds: for his best friends,
if they

Should say, 'Be good to Rome,' they charg'd him even

As those should do that had deserv'd his
hate,

And therein show'd like enemies. 'T is true.
Men.

If we were putting to my house the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say, 'Beseech you, cease.' You have made fair hands,

You and your crafts! you have crafted fair!
Com. You have brought
A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So incapable of help.

Sic., Bru. Say not we brought it.
Men. How! Was it we? We lov'd him;
but, like beasts 121

And cowardly nobles, gave way unto your clusters,

Who did hoot him out o' the city.
Com.

But I fear
They 'll roar him in again. Tullus Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeys his points
As if he were his officer: desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a troop of Citizens.

Men. Here come the clusters.
And is Aufidius with him? You are they
That made the air unwholesome, when you cast 130

Your stinking greasy caps in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
And not a hair upon a soldier's head
Which will not prove a whip: as many coxcombs

As you threw caps up will he tumble down,
And pay you for your voices. 'T is no matter;

If he could burn us all into one coal,
We have deserv'd it.

Citizens. Faith, we hear fearful news.
First Cit. For mine own part,

When I said banish him, I said 't was pity.
Second Cit. And so did I. 141

Third Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us. That we did we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. Ye 're goodly things, you voices!

Men. You have made Good work, you and your cry! Shall 's to the Capitol?

Com. O! ay; what else?

Exeunt COMINIUS and MENENIUS.

Sic. Go, masters, get you home; be not dismay'd: 150

These are a side that would be glad to have
This true which they seem to fear. Go
home,

And show no sign of fear.

First Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let 's home. I ever said we were i' the wrong when we banished him.

Second Cit. So did we all. But come, let 's home. Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I.

Bru. Let 's to the Capitol. Would half my wealth 160

Would buy this for a lie!

Sic. Pray let us go. Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—A Camp at a small distance from Rome.

Enter AUFIDIUS and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lieu. I do not know what witchcraft 's in him, but

Your soldiers use him as the grace fore
meat,

Their talk at table, and their thanks at end;
And you are darken'd in this action, sir,
Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now,
Unless, by using means, I lame the foot
Of our design. He bears himself more proudlie, 8

Even to my person, than I thought he would
When first I did embrace him; yet his nature
In that 's no changeling, and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wish, sir,
I mean for your particular, you had not
Join'd in commission with him; but either
Had borne the action of yourself, or else
To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou
sure,

When he shall come to his account, he knows not

What I can urge against him. Although it seems,

And so he thinks, and is no less apparent 20
To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,

And shows good husbandry for the Volscian
state,

Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone

That which shall break his neck or hazard
mine,

When'er we come to our account.

Lieu. Sir, I beseech you, think you he 'll carry Rome?

Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits
down;

And the nobility of Rome are his;

The senators and patricians love him too: 30
The tribunes are no soldiers; and their
people

Will be as rash in the repeal as hasty

To expel him thence. I think he 'll be to Rome

As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it

By sovereignty of nature. First he was

A noble servant to them, but he could not Carry his honours even; whether 't was

pride,

Which out of daily fortune ever taints

The happy man; whether defect of judgment,

To fail in the disposing of those chances 40

Which he was lord of; or whether nature,

Not to be other than one thing, not moving

From the casque to the cushion, but commanding peace

Even with the same austerity and garb

As he controll'd the war; but one of these,

As he hath spices of them all, not all,

For I dare so far free him, made him fear'd,

So hated, and so banish'd: but he has a merit

To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues
Lie in the interpretation of the time; 50

And power, unto itself most commendable,

Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair

To extol what it hath done.

One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;

Rights by rights falter, strengths by strengths
do fail.

Come, let 's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine,

Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art
thou mine. Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, COMINIUS, SICINIUS, BRUTUS, and Others.

Men. No, I 'll not go: you hear what he hath said

Which was sometime his general; who lov'd
him

In a most dear particular. He call'd me
father;

But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd
him;

A mile before his tent fall down, and knee
The way into his mercy. Nay, if he coy'd

To hear Cominius speak, I 'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my
name.

I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops 10
That we have bled together. Coriolanus

He would not answer to; forbade all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,

Till he had forg'd himself a name o' the fire
Of burning Rome.

Men. Why, so: you have made good
work!

A pair of tribunes that have rack'd for Rome,
To make coals cheap: a noble memory!

Com. I minded him how royal 't was to pardon
When it was less expected: he replied,
It was a bare petition of a state 20
To one whom they had punish'd.
Men. Very well:
Could he say less?

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard For's private friends: his answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome musty chaff: he said 't was folly
For one poor grain or two to leave unburnt,
And still to nose the offence.

Men. For one poor grain or two!
I am one of those; his mother, wife, his child, 29
And this brave fellow too, we are the grains:
You are the musty chaff, and you are smelt Above the moon. We must be burnt for
you.

Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: if you refuse your aid
In this so never-needed help, yet do not Upbraid's with our distress. But, sure, if
you

Would be your country's pleader, your good
tongue,
More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I'll not meddle.
Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?
Bru. Only make trial what your love can do 40

For Rome, towards Marcius.

Men. Well; and say that Marcius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unheard; what then?

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness? say 't be so?

Sic. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake it:
I think he'll hear me. Yet, to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts
me.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd: 50
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and
then

We pout upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd

These pipes and these conveyances of our
blood

With wine and feeding, we have suppler
souls

Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore, I'll watch him

Till he be dieted to my request,
And then I'll set upon him.

Bru. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him, Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge 61

Of my success. Exit.

Com. He'll never hear him.
Sic. Not?

Com. I tell you he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as 't would burn Rome, and his injury
The gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before
him;

'T was very faintly he said 'Rise'; dismiss'd
me

Thus, with his speechless hand: what he would do,

He sent in writing after me; what he would
not,

Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:
So that all hope is vain 70

Unless his noble mother and his wife,
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him

For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's
hence,

And with our fair entreaties haste them on.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Volscian Camp before Rome. The Guards at their stations.

Enter to them MENENIUS.

First Guard. Stay! Whence are you?

Second Guard. Stand! and go back.

Men. You guard like men; 't is well;
but, by your leave,

I am an officer of state, and come
To speak with Coriolanus.

First Guard. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

First Guard. You may not pass; you must return: our general
Will no more hear from thence.

Second Guard. You 'll see your Rome
embrac'd with fire before

You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of
Rome,

And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks,
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Me-
nenius. 11

First Guard. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name

Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read

His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified;
For I have ever verified my friends,
Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity

Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,

Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground, 20
I have tumbled past the throw, and in his praise

Have almost stamp'd the leasing. Therefore, fellow,

I must have leave to pass.

First Guard. Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here; no, though it were as virtuous to lie
as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.

Men. Prithee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general. 31

Second Guard. Howsoever you have been his liar, as you say you have, I am one that, telling true under him, must say you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

First Guard. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am, as thy general is. 39

First Guard. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy groans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decayed dotant as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemned, our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon. 54

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.

Second Guard. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean thy general.

First Guard. My general cares not for you. Back, I say: go, lest I let forth your half-pint of blood; back; that's the utmost of your having: back. 62

Men. Nay, but, fellow, fellow,—

Enter CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.

Cor. What's the matter?

Men. Now, you companion, I'll say an errand for you; you shall know now that I am in estimation; you shall perceive that a Jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou standest not i' the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueller in suffering; behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee. To CORIOLANUS. The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O my son! my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs, and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here; this, who, like a block, hath denied my access to thee. 85

Cor. Away!

Men. How! away!

Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not.

My affairs

Are servanted to others: though I owe My revenge properly, my remission lies 90

In Volscian breasts. That we have been familiar,

Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Therefore, be gone;

Mine ears against your suits are stronger than

Your gates against my force. Yet, for I lov'd thee,

Take this along; I writ it for thy sake, Gives a paper.

And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius,

I will not hear thee speak. This man, Aufidius,

Was my belov'd in Rome: yet thou behold'st!

Auf. You keep a constant temper. 100

Exeunt CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.

First Guard. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?

Second Guard. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power. You know the way home again.

First Guard. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back? 105

Second Guard. What cause, do you think, I have to swoon?

Men. I neither care for the world nor your general; for such things as you, I scarce think there's any, ye're so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are long; and your misery increase with your age! I say to you, as I was said to, Away! Exit.

First Guard. A noble fellow, I warrant him.

Second Guard. The worthy fellow is our general: he's the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Tent of CORIOLANUS.

Enter CORIOLANUS, AUFIDIUS, and Others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow

Set down our host. My partner in this action,

You must report to the Volscian lords, how plainly

I have borne this business.

Auf. Only their ends You have respected; stopp'd your ears against

The general suit of Rome; never admitted A private whisper, no, not with such friends That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man, Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,

Lov'd me above the measure of a father; 10 Nay, godded me indeed. Their latest refuge

Was to send him; for whose old love I have,

Though I show'd sourly to him, once more offer'd

The first conditions, which they did refuse, And cannot now accept, to grace him only

That thought he could do more. A very little
I have yielded to; fresh embassies, and suits,
Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
Will I lend ear to. Shout within.

Ha! what shout is this? 20
Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the same time 't is made? I will not.

Enter, in mourning habits, VIRGILIA, VOLUMNIA, leading young MARCIUS, VALERIA, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand

The grandchild to her blood. But out, affection!

All bond and privilege of nature, break!
Let it be virtuous to be obstinate.
What is that court'sy worth? or those doves' eyes,

Which can make gods forsworn? I melt, and am not

Of stronger earth than others. My mother bows;

As if Olympus to a molehill should 30
In supplication nod; and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession which Great nature cries, 'Deny not.' Let the Volsces

Plough Rome, and harrow Italy; I'll never be such a gosling to obey instinct, but stand,
As if a man were author of himself
And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband!
Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow that delivers us thus chang'd

Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out, 41
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say
For that 'Forgive our Romans.' O! a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge.
Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss

I carried from thee, dear, and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. You gods! I prate,

And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted. Sink, my knee, i' the earth; Kneels.

Of thy deep duty more impression show 51
Than that of common sons.

Vol. O! stand up bless'd;
Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint,
I kneel before thee, and unproperly Show duty, as mistaken all this while
Between the child and parent. Kneels.

Cor. What is this?
Your knees to me! to your corrected son!
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun,

Murd'ring impossibility, to make 61
What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior;
I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle
That's curd'd by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple: dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which by the interpretation of full time
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform 71
Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou may'st prove

To shame invulnerable, and stick i' the wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. Your knee, sirrah.
Cor. That's my brave boy!

Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself,

Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace;
Or, if you'd ask, remember this before:
The thing I have forsworn to grant may never 80

Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics: tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: desire not
To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasons.

Vol. O! no more, no more;
You have said you will not grant us any thing;

For we have nothing else to ask but that
Which you deny already: yet we will ask;
That, if you fail in our request, the blame 90
May hang upon your hardness. Therefore, hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volsces, mark;
for we'll

Hear nought from Rome in private. Your request?

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak,
our raiment

And state of bodies would bewray what life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself

How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which should

Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance
with comforts,

Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow; 100

Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
The son, the husband, and the father, tearing

His country's bowels out. And to poor we Thine enmity's most capital: thou barr'st us

Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
Alas! how can we for our country pray, Where'to we are bound, together with thy
victory,

Whereto we are bound! Alack! or we must lose
 The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person, 110
 Our comfort in the country. We must find An evident calamity, though we had
 Our wish, which side should win; for either thou Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
 With manacles through our streets, or else
 Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
 And bear the palm for having bravely shed
 Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
 I suppose not to wait on fortune till
 These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee 120
 Rather to show a noble grace to both parts
 Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
 March to assault thy country than to tread,
 Trust to 't thou shalt not, on thy mother's womb,
 That brought thee to this world.
Vir. Ay, and mine,
 That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name
 Living to time.
Boy. A' shall not tread on me:
 I'll run away till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.
Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
 Requires nor child nor woman's face to see. 130
 I have sat too long. Rising.
Vol. Nay, go not from us thus.
 If it were so, that our request did tend
 To save the Romans, thereby to destroy
 The Volscies whom you serve, you might condemn us,
 As poisonous of your honour: no; our suit
 Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volscies
 May say 'This mercy we have show'd'; the Romans,
 'This we receiv'd'; and each in either side
 Give the all-hail to thee, and cry 'Be bless'd
 For making up this peace!' Thou know'st, great son, 140
 The end of war's uncertain; but this certain,
 That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
 Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name,
 Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses;
 Whose chronicle thus writ: 'The man was noble,
 But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,
 Destroy'd his country, and his name remains
 To the ensuing age abhorr'd.' Speak to me, son!
 Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
 To imitate the graces of the gods; 150
 To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air,
 And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
 That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak?
 Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man

Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, speak you:
 He cares not for your weeping. Speak thou, boy:
 Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons. There's no man in the world
 More bound to 's mother; yet here he lets me prate
 Like one i' the stocks. Thou hast never in thy life 160
 Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy;
 When she, poor hen! fond of no second brood,
 Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home,
 Loaden with honour. Say my request's unjust,
 And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
 Thou art not honest and the gods will plague thee,
 That thou restrain'st from me the duty which
 To a mother's part belongs. He turns away:
 Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees. 139
 To his surname Coriolanus longs more pride
 Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end;
 This is the last: so we will home to Rome,
 And die among our neighbours. Nay, behold's.
 This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
 But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship,
 Does reason our petition with more strength
 Than thou hast to deny 't. Come, let us go.
 This fellow had a Volscian to his mother;
 His wife is in Corioli, and his child
 Like him by chance. Yet give us our dispatch: 180
 I am hush'd until our city be a-fire,
 And then I'll speak a little.
He holds VOLUMNIA by the hand, silent.
Cor. O mother, mother!
 What have you done? Behold! the heavens do ope,
 The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
 They laugh at. O my mother! mother! O!
 You have won a happy victory to Rome;
 But, for your son, believe it, O! believe it,
 Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
 If not most mortal to him. But let it come.
 Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars,
 I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius, 191
 Were you in my stead, would you have heard
 A mother less, or granted less, Aufidius?
Auf. I was mov'd withal.
Cor. I dare be sworn you were:
 And, sir, it is no little thing to make
 Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir,
 What peace you'll make, advise me: for my part,

I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray you,
Stand to me in this cause. O mother!
wife!

Auf. Aside. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour
At difference in thee: out of that I'll work
Myself a former fortune.

The Ladies make signs to CORIOLANUS.
Cor. To VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, etc. Ay, by and by;

But we will drink together; and you shall
bear

A better witness back than words, which we,
On like conditions, will have counter-seal'd.
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve
To have a temple built you: all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS and SICINIUS.

Men. See you yond coign o' the Capitol,
yond corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace
it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say there is no hope in 't. Our throats are sentenced and stay upon execution.

Sic. Is 't possible that so short a time can alter the condition of a man? 10

Men. There is difference between a grub and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcius is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly. 15

Men. So did he me; and he no more remembers his mother now than an eight-year-old horse. The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes: when he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading: he is able to pierce a corslet with his eye; talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done is finished with his bidding.
He wants nothing of a god but eternity and a heaven to throne in. 26

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: there is no more mercy in him than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is long of you. 32

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him, we respected not them; and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house:
The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune, 39

And hale him up and down; all swearing, if
The Roman ladies bring not comfort home.
They'll give him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sic. What's the news?

Mess. Good news, good news! the ladies have prevail'd,
The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcius
gone.

A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,
No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend,
Art thou certain this is true? is it most certain?

Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire:
Where have you lurk'd that you make doubt
of it?

Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown
tide, 50
As the recomforted through the gates. Why, hark you!

*Trumpets and hautboys sounded,
and drums beaten, all together.
Shouting also within.*

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,
Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,

Make the sun dance. Hark you!

A shout within.

Men. This is good news:
I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia is worth of consuls, senators, patricians,
A city full; of tribunes, such as you,
A sea and land full. You have pray'd well
to-day:

This morning for ten thousand of your
throats

I'd not have given a doit. Hark! how they
joy. Music still, with shouts.

Sic. First, the gods bless you for your tidings; next, 61
Accept my thankfulness.

Mess. Sir, we have all Great cause to give great thanks.

Sic. They are near the city?

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sic. We will meet them,
And help the joy. Going.

Enter the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and People. They pass over the stage.

First Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome!

Call all your tribes together, praise the gods,
And make triumphant fires; strew flowers
before them:

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius; 69
Repeat him with the welcome of his mother;
Cry 'Welcome, ladies, welcome!'

All. Welcome, ladies,
Welcome!

*A flourish with drums and trumpets.
Exeunt.*

SCENE V.—Antium. A public Place.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords o' the city I am
here:

Deliver them this paper: having read it,
 Bid them repair to the market-place; where I,
 Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,
 Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse
 The city ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping
 To purge himself with words: dispatch.

Exeunt Attendants.

Enter three or four Conspirators of AUFIDIUS'S faction.

Most welcome!

First Con. How is it with our general?

Auf. Even so

As with a man by his own alms empow-son'd, 11

And with his charity slain.

Second Con. Most noble sir,

If you do hold the same intent wherein
 You wish'd us parties, we 'll deliver you
 Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell:

We must proceed as we do find the people.

Third Con. The people will remain uncertain whilst

'Twixt you there's difference; but the fall of either

Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it;

And my pretext to strike at him admits 20
 A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd

Mine honour for his truth: who being so heighten'd,

He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery,

Seducing so my friends; and, to this end,
 He bow'd his nature, never known before

But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

Third Con. Sir, his stoutness

When he did stand for consul, which he lost
 By lack of stooping,—

Auf. That I would have spoken of:

Being banish'd for 't, he came unto my hearth;

Presented to my knife his throat: I took
 him;

Made him joint-servant with me; gave him
 way 32

In all his own desires; nay, let him choose
 Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,

My best and freshest men; serv'd his designments

In mine own person; help to reap the fame
 Which he did end all his; and took some
 pride

To do myself this wrong: till at the last,
 I seem'd his follower, not partner, and

He wag'd me with his countenance, as if 40
 I had been mercenary.

First Con. So he did, my lord:

The army marvell'd at it; and, in the last,
 When he had carried Rome, and that we

look'd

For no less spoil than glory,—

Auf. There was it;

For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon
 him.

At a few drops of women's rheum, which are

As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour

Of our great action: therefore shall he die,
 And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the People.

First Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post, 50

And had no welcome home; but he returns,
 Splitting the air with noise.

Second Con. And patient fools,

Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear

With giving him glory.

Third Con. Therefore, at your vantage,

Ere he express himself, or move the people
 With what he would say, let him feel your
 sword,

Which we will second. When he lies along,
 After your way his tale pronounc'd shall

bury

His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more:

Here come the lords. 60

Enter the Lords of the city.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it.

But, worthy lords, have you with heed
 perus'd

What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

First Lord. And grieve to hear 't.

What faults he made before the last, I think Might have found easy fines; but there to

end

Where he was to begin, and give away
 The benefit of our levies, answering us

With our own charge, making a treaty where
 There was a yielding, this admits no excuse.

Auf. He approaches: you shall hear him.

*Enter CORIOLANUS, with drum and colours;
 a crowd of Citizens with him.*

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier; 71

No more infected with my country's love
 Than when I parted hence, but still subsist-
 ing

Under your great command. You are to
 know

That prosperously I have attempted and
 With bloody passage led your wars even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home

Do more than counterpoise a full third part
 The charges of the action. We have made
 peace,

With no less honour to the Antiates 80
 Than shame to the Romans; and we here deliver,

Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
 Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords;

But tell the traitor in the highest degree
 He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor! How now!

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius.
Cor. Marcius!

Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius. Dost thou think

I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name

Coriolanus in Corioli? 90

You lords and heads o' the state, perfidiously

He has betray'd your business, and given up,

For certain drops of salt, your city Rome, I say 'your city,' to his wife and mother;

Breaking his oath and resolution like

A twist of rotten silk, never admitting

Counsel o' the war, but at his nurse's tears

He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,

That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart

Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars?

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears.

Cor. Ha!

Auf. No more. 102

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made

my heart

Too great for what contains it. Boy! O slave!

Pardon me, lords, 't is the first time that ever

I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave lords,

Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion,

Who wears my stripes impress'd upon him;

that

Must bear my beating to his grave, shall join

To thrust the lie unto him. 110

First Lord. Peace, both, and hear me

speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volscies; men and lads.

Stain all your edges on me. Boy! False hound!

If you have writ your annals true, 't is there,

That, like an eagle in a dove-cote, I

Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli:

Alone I did it. Boy!

Auf. Why, noble lords,

Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,

Which was your shame, by this unholy brag-

gart, 119

Fore your own eyes and ears?

All Con. Let him die for 't.

All the People. Tear him to pieces.—Do it presently.—He killed my son.—My daughter.—He killed my cousin Marcus.—

He killed my father.

Second Lord. Peace, ho! no outrage: peace!

The man is noble and his fame folds in

This orb o' the earth. His last offences to us

Shall have judicious hearing. Stand, Aufidius,

And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O! that I had him,

With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe, 130

To use my lawful sword.

Auf. Insolent villain!

All Con. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him!

AUFIDIUS and the Conspirators draw,

and kill CORIOLANUS, who falls:

AUFIDIUS stands on his body.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold!

Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

First Lord. O Tullus!

Second Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep.

Third Lord. Tread not upon him. Masters all, be quiet.

Put up your swords.

Auf. My lords, when you shall know, as in this rage,

Provok'd by him, you cannot, the great danger

Which this man's life did owe you, you 'll rejoice

That he is thus cut off. Please it your

honours 140

To call me to your senate, I 'll deliver

Myself your loyal servant, or endure

Your heaviest censure.

First Lord. Bear from hence his body;

And mourn you for him. Let him be regarded

As the most noble corse that ever herald

Did follow to his urn.

Second Lord. His own impatience

Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.

Let's make the best of it.

Auf. My rage is gone,

And I am struck with sorrow. Take him up:

Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers; I 'll be

one. 150

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully;

Trail your steel pikes. Though in this city hath widow'd and unchild'd many a one,

Which to this hour bewail the injury,

Yet he shall have a noble memory.

Assist.

Exeunt, bearing the body of CORIO-

LANUS. A dead march sounded.

TITUS ANDRONICUS

JUST what part, if any, Shakespeare had in writing Titus Andronicus will perhaps never be satisfactorily determined. Many scholars insist that the play shows nowhere Shakespeare's hand, others that some portions of it are certainly his, and still others that the play as we have it is entirely by him. Authorship has been variously assigned to Marlowe, Kyd, Peele, and Greene, all of whom had achieved distinction as dramatists as early as 1590, or about the year of Shakespeare's arrival in London. It is certain that at that time and for some years later tragedies of blood and revenge were in great vogue with the theatre-going public. The most plausible assumption seems to be that in some exigency, or acting under some commission from his company, Shakespeare took the material from one or two of these old plays and refashioned it into the present play.

It seems incredible, however, that personally Shakespeare could ever have regarded this play with approval, or that it should be regarded to-day as in any sense representing his view of life, his poetic sense, or his general craftsmanship. It reeks with revolting and unmotivated horrors. What must surely impress the general reader is the futility of the play as a whole. It admits of no moral inference, affords no edification. Its defects cannot be analyzed and culled out; the play is vitiated in its entirety, in its very conception. It seems almost designedly bad. Observe, for instance, that first speech of Lucius in the opening scene:

"Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,
That we may hew his limbs, and on a pile
Ad manes fratrum sacrifice his flesh."

Now that speech is wholly unmotivated. It comes not as a surprise, but as a shock. The killing of Alarbus releases, of course, the general motive for the succeeding action, that of revenge; but the handling of that motive at once breaks down, and for it is substituted the fiendish nature of the Moor, Aaron. He interposes when the two brothers of Alarbus at the beginning of the second Act enter braving each other for the love of Lucius' sister Lavinia. To be sure their passion is a guilty one, but it is not accompanied by any thought of revenge, nor does Aaron suggest that motive to them. He himself is characterized only by fiendishness, and henceforth in a general way he directs the action. What will follow we are unable to predict. The horrors are unleashed. We are at sea in a world guided by no moral force, but subject to fortuitous powers that make for evil. Now this sense of being lost in such a world is one utterly foreign to Shakespeare. Our resentment at the play is all the more keen because, in this lost and helpless state, we are compelled to witness such gruesome and abhorrent sights. If we could only do something; if we could leave the play and go out into the world and start justice in motion. Or does the play fail to stir us to so great a degree? In the world which it portrays there is no justice, because human beings are undefined, uncharacterized. Rome, here, is indeed "but a wilderness of tigers." We can predict, however, that tigers will after their nature; but what can we predict about such human beings? Not knowing them we can make no prediction. In other words the tragedy does not spring from character. What we are witnessing is not really tragedy; it is merely a succession of horrifying incidents: a youth slain as a sacrifice; a son stabbed by his father; Bassianus stabbed; Titus' hand given to save his sons; the hand returned with the sons' heads; Titus with one head in his remaining hand, Lucius with the other, and Lavinia with the amputated hand thrust between her teeth; the two sons of Tamora bound, their throats cut by Titus, while Lavinia holds between her stumps the basin to catch the blood; the bodies made into a pie and served at a feast and partaken of by their mother. . . . But one need go no farther. One offends merely to enumerate these incidents. But it is necessary. These are the outstanding features of this play and they should not be lost sight of by any one who would form an opinion about Shakespeare's part in writing it.

And yet, offensive as this play is to us, it was popular at the time it was written. Can it be that Shakespeare satisfied his own taste in writing it? We must not forget that his Venus and Adonis was published during the same year to which this play is usually assigned. He was just about to write or already had written

"Not marble, nor the gilded monuments

Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rime."

Shall it be assumed that for once at least he sacrificed his own literary conscience for the success of an hour?

It is entirely possible that the popularity of this and similar plays during Shakespeare's early years in London has been greatly exaggerated. In 1614, at the close of Shakespeare's career, Ben Jonson, in his Induction to Bartholomew Fair, says: "He that will swear Jeronimo or Andronicus are the best plays yet, shall pass unexcepted at here, as a man whose judgment shows it is constant, and hath stood still these five and twenty or thirty years. Though it be an ignorance it is a virtuous and staid ignorance; and next to truth, a confirmed error does well." Jonson here clearly implies that there has been a change in public taste within the period named; that the two plays mentioned were among the worst offenders against such standards as now obtain, and hence were among the first to succumb among all except the confirmedly ignorant. Is it not probable that among the more intelligent theatre-goers, at least, Titus Andronicus was the last word to be said for the tragedy of blood, and that if Shakespeare wrote it, he wrote it to that end? His method appears to have been, as we have suggested in our remarks on Love's Labour's Lost, to adopt the manner of his contemporaries and carry it to a preposterous conclusion. It is of course possible that Shakespeare had no part whatever in this play, but if he did we may rest assured he had some purpose in it other than that of gratifying the taste of a public that could by any possibility commend it.

In passing judgment on all these early plays we cannot be too strongly on guard against overestimating the influence of his contemporaries or his public upon such a genius as Shakespeare. It is always gratifying to be able to account for such a man and there is much to be said in explanation of his work; but we should remember that Shakespeare, while he made the most of conditions as he found them, could never have accomplished the seeming miracle of his plays without first seeking to assure himself of conditions that made that miracle possible.

ACT I

SCENE I.—Rome.

The Tomb of the Andronici appearing. The Tribunes and Senators aloft; and then enter SATURNINUS and his Followers at one door, and BASSIANUS and his Followers at the other, with drum and colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms;
And, countrymen, my loving followers,
Plead my successive title with your swords:
I am his first-born son, that was the last
That wore the imperial diadem of Rome;
Then let my father's honours live in me,
Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bass. Romans, friends, followers, favourers of my right,

If ever Bassianus, Cæsar's son,
Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome,
Keep then this passage to the Capitol,
And suffer not dishonour to approach
The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate,
To justice, continence, and nobility;
But let desert in pure election shine,
And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, aloft, with the crown.

Marc. Princes, that strive by factions and by friends

Ambitiously for rule and empery,
Know that the people of Rome, for whom we stand

A special party, have by common voice,
In election for the Roman empery,

Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius,
For many good and great deserts to Rome:
A nobler man, a braver warrior,
Lives not this day within the city walls:
He by the senate is accited home
From weary wars against the barbarous
Goths;

That, with his sons, a terror to our foes,
Hath yok'd a nation strong, train'd up in
arms.

Ten years are spent since first he undertook This cause of Rome, and chastised with
arms

Our enemies' pride: five times he hath re-
turn'd

Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
In coffins from the field;

And now at last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms.

Let us entreat, by honour of his name,
Whom worthily you would have now succeed,

And in the Capitol and senate's right,
Whom you pretend to honour and adore,
That you withdraw you and abate your
strength;

Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors
should,

Plead your deserts in peace and humble-
ness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!

Bass. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
In thy uprightness and integrity,
And so I love and honour thee and thine,
Thy noble brother Titus and his sons,

And her to whom my thoughts are humbled
all,

Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends,
And to my fortunes and the people's favour
Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

Exeunt the Followers of BASSIANUS.

Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward
in my right,

I thank you all and here dismiss you all;
And to the love and favour of my country
Commit myself, my person, and the cause.

Exeunt the Followers of SATURNINUS.
Rome, be as just and gracious unto me 60
As I am confident and kind to thee.

Open the gates, and let me in.

Bass. Tribunes, and me, a poor competitor.
Flourish. They go up into the Senate-house.

Enter a Captain.

Cap. Romans, make way! the good Andronicus,

Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honour and with fortune is return'd
From where he circumscribed with his
sword,

And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

Sound drums and trumpets, and then enter MARTIUS and MUTIUS; after them two Men bearing a coffin covered with black; then LUCIUS and QUINTUS. After them TITUS ANDRONICUS; and then TAMORA, with ALARBUS, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, AARON, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and People following. They set down the coffin, and TITUS speaks.

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds! 70

Lo! as the bark, that hath discharg'd her fraught,

Returns with precious lading to the bay
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,

Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,

To re-salute this country with his tears,
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.

Thou great defender of this Capitol,
Stand gracious to the rites that we intend!
Romans, of five-and-twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that King Priam had, 80
Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead!
These that survive let Rome reward with
love;

These that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors:

Here Goths have given me leave to sheathe
my sword.

Titus, unkind and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

The tomb is opened.
There greet in silence, as the dead are wont, 90

And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!

O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more!

Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,

That we may hew his limbs, and on a pile
Ad manes fratrum sacrifice his flesh,
Before this earthy prison of their bones;
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd, 100
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.

Tit. I give him you, the noblest that survives,

The eldest son of this distressed queen.

Tam. Stay, Roman brethren! Gracious
conqueror,

Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion for her son:

And if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O! think my son to be as dear to me,

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome
To beautify thy triumphs and return, 110

Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets

For valiant doings in their country's cause?
O! if to fight for king and commonweal

Were piety in thine, it is in these.
Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood;

Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods?
Draw near them then in being merciful;

Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge: 119
Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born
son.

Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon
me.

These are their brethren, whom you Goths
beheld

Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain
Religiously they ask a sacrifice:

To this your son is mark'd, and die he
must,

To appease their groaning shadows that are
gone.

Luc. Away with him! and make a fire
straight;

And with our swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbs till they be clean consum'd.

Exeunt LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS, with ALARBUS.

Tam. O cruel, irreligious piety! 130

Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?

Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious
Rome.

Alarbus goes to rest, and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening look.

Then, madam, stand resolv'd; but hope
withal

The self-same gods that arm'd the Queen of Troy

With opportunity of sharp revenge
Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,

May favour Tamora, the Queen of Goths, When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was
queen, 140

To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS, with their swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd

Our Roman rites. Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd,
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky.

Remaineth nought but to inter our brethren,
And with loud 'larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so; and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their souls.

Trumpets sounded, and the coffin laid in the tomb.

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons;
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in rest, 151

Secure from worldly chances and mishaps!
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned drugs, here are no storms,

No noise, but silence and eternal sleep.
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons!

Enter LAVINIA.

Lav. In peace and honour live Lord Titus long;

My noble lord and father, live in fame!
Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears
I render for my brethren's obsequies; 160
And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy
Shed on the earth for thy return to Rome.
O! bless me here with thy victorious hand,
Whose fortune Rome's best citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly reserv'd

The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!
Lavinia, live; outlive thy father's days,
And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS and Tribunes; re-enter SATURNINUS, BASSIANUS, and Others.

Marc. Long live Lord Titus, my beloved brother,

Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome! 170
Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus.

Marc. And welcome, nephews, from successful wars,

You that survive, and you that sleep in fame!
Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,
That in your country's service drew your swords;

But safer triumph in this funeral pomp,
That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness,
And triumphs over chance in honour's bed.
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome, 179
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune and their trust,

This palliament of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire,
With these our late-deceased emperor's sons:

Be candidatus then, and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness.
What should I don this robe, and trouble you?

Be chosen with proclamations to-day, 190
To-morrow yield up rule, resign my life,
And set abroad new business for you all?
Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And led my country's strength successfully,
And buried one-and-twenty valiant sons,
Knighted in field, slain manfully in arms,
In right and service of their noble country.
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world:
Upright he held it, lords, that held it last. 200

Marc. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the empery.

Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?

Tit. Patience, Prince Saturninus.

Sat. Romans, do me right:
Patricians, draw your swords, and sheathe them not

Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor.
Andronicus, would thou wert shipp'd to hell,
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts!

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good

That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

Tit. Content thee, prince; I will restore to thee 210

The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves.

Bass. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,
But honour thee, and will do till I die:
My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,

I will most thankful be; and thanks to men
Of noble minds is honourable meed.

Tit. People of Rome, and noble tribunes here,

I ask your voices and your suffrages:
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Tribunes. To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome, 221
The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you; and this suit I make,

That you create your emperor's eldest son,
Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope,
Reflect on Rome as Titan's rays on earth,
And ripen justice in this commonweal:
Then, if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say 'Long live our emperor!'

Marc. With voices and applause of every sort, 226

Patricians and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus Rome's great emperor,
And say 'Long live our Emperor Saturnine!'

A long flourish.
Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done

To us in our election this day,
I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness:
And for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empress, 240

Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,

And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse.
Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and in this match

I hold me highly honour'd of your grace:
And here in sight of Rome to Saturnine,
King and commander of our commonweal.
The wide world's emperor, do I consecrate
My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners;
Presents well worthy Rome's imperious lord: 250

Receive them then, the tribute that I owe,
Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!

How proud I am of thee and of thy gifts
Rome shall record, and when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. To TAMORA. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor;

To him that, for your honour and your state,
Will use you nobly and your followers. 261

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew.

Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance;

Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer,

Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome:

Princely shall be thy usage every way.
Rest on my word, and let not discontent

Daunt all your hopes: madam, he comforts you

Can make you greater than the queen of Goths. 269

Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?

Lav. Not I, my lord; sith true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia. Romans, let us go:

Ransomless here we set our prisoners free:
Proclaim our honours, lords, with trumpet and drum.

Bass. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine. Seizing LAVINIA.

Tit. How, sir! Are you in earnest then, my lord?

Bass. Ay, noble Titus; and resolv'd without

To do myself this reason and this right.
Marc. Suum cuique is our Roman justice: 280

This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Traitors, avaunt! Where is the emperor's guard?

Treason, my lord! Lavinia is surpris'd.

Sat. Surpris'd! by whom?

Bass. By him that justly may Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.

Exeunt MARCUS and BASSIANUS,

with LAVINIA.

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,

And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

Exeunt LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back. 289

Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What! villain boy; Barr'st me my way in Rome?

Stabs MUTIUS.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust, and more than so;

In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine;

My sons would never so dishonour me.
Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife

That is another's lawful promis'd love. Exit.

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,

Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock: 300
I'll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once;

Thee never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,
Confederates all thus to dishonour me.

Was there none else in Rome to make a stale

But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,
Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,

That said'st I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these?

Sat. But go thy ways; go, give that changing piece

To him that flourish'd for her with his sword. 310

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,

To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, Queen of Goths,

That like the stately Phœbe 'mongst her nymphs

Dost overshadow the gallant'st dames of Rome,

If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,

Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And I will create thee Empress of Rome. 320

Speak, Queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?

And here I swear by all the Roman gods,
Sith priest and holy water are so near,

And tapers burn so bright, and every thing
In readiness for Hymenæus stand,

I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place

I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I swear,

If Saturnine advance the Queen of Goths, 330
She will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon. Lords, accompany

Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,
Sent by the heavens for Prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered.
There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride.
Titus, when wert thou wont to walk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Marc. O! Titus, see; O! see what thou
hast done; 341

In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of
mine,

Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed

That hath dishonour'd all our family:
Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial, as becomes;

Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb.

This monument five hundred years hath
stood, 350

Which I have sumptuously re-edified:

Here none but soldiers and Rome's servi-
tors

Repose in fame; none basely slain in brawls.

Bury him where you can; he comes not
here.

Marc. My lord, this is impiety in you.
My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for
him;

He must be buried with his brethren.

Quint., Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. 'And shall!' What villain was it spake that word?

Quint. He that would vouch it in any place but here. 360

Tit. What! would you bury him in my
despite?

Marc. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,

And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast wounded:

My foes I do repute you every one;

So, trouble me no more, but get you gone.
Mart. He is not with himself; let us
withdraw.

Quint. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.
MARCUS and the Sons of TITUS kneel.

Marc. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead,— 370

Quint. Father, and in that name doth nature speak,—

Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

Marc. Renowned Titus, more than half
my soul,—

Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us all,—

Marc. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter
His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,
That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.
Thou art a Roman; be not barbarous:
The Greeks upon advice did bury Ajax
That slew himself; and wise Laertes'
son 380

Did graciously plead for his funerals.
Let not young Mutius then, that was thy joy,
Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise.
The dismal'st day is this that e'er I saw,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

MUTIUS is put into the tomb.
Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends.

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb.
All. Kneeling. No man shed tears for noble Mutius;

He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.
Marc. My lord, to step out of these dreary dumps, 391

How comes it that the subtle Queen of
Goths

Is of a sudden thus advanc'd in Rome?

Tit. I know not, Marcus; but I know it is:
Whether by device or no, the heavens can
tell.

Is she not then beholding to the man
That brought her for this high good turn so far?

Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

Flourish. Re-enter, from one side, SA-TURNINUS, attended; TAMORA, DEME-TRIUS, CHIRON, and AARON; from the other, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, and others.

Sat. So, Bassianus, you have play'd your
prize:

God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride!
Bass. And you of yours, my lord! I say no
more, 401

Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.
Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law or we have
power,

Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.
Bass. Rape call you it, my lord, to seize my own,

My true-betrothed love and now my wife?
But let the laws of Rome determine all;

Meanwhile I am possess'd of that is mine.
Sat. 'T is good, sir: you are very short with us;

But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.
Bass. My lord, what I have done, as best
I may, 411

Answer I must and shall do with my life.
Only this much I give your grace to know:

By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This noble gentleman, Lord Titus here,

Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd;
That, in the rescue of Lavinia,

With his own hand did slay his youngest son,
In zeal to you and highly mov'd to wrath

To be controll'd in that he frankly gave: 420
Receive him then to favour, Saturnine,
That hath express'd himself in all his deeds
A father and a friend to thee and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my
deeds:

'T is thou and those that have dishonour'd
me.

Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,

How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine!

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora
Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,

Then hear me speak indifferently for all; 430
And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What, madam! be dishonour'd openly,

And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so, my lord; the gods of Rome
forfend

I should be author to dishonour you!
But on mine honour dare I undertake
For good Lord Titus' innocence in all, Whose fury not dissembled speaks his
griefs. 438

Then, at my suit, look graciously on him;
Lose not so noble a friend on vain suppose,
Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.
Aside to SATURNINUS. My lord, be rul'd
by me, be won at last;

Dissemble all your griefs and discontents:
You are but newly planted in your throne;
Lest then the people, and patricians too,
Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so supplant you for ingratitude,
Which Rome reputes to be a heinous sin,
Yield at entreats, and then let me alone.

I'll find a day to massacre them all, 440
And raze their faction and their family,
The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sued for my dear son's life;
And make them know what 't is to let a
queen

Kneel in the streets and beg for grace in vain.

Aloud. Come, come, sweet emperor; come,
Andronicus;

Take up this good old man, and cheer the
heart

That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empress hath prevail'd.

Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my
lord. 463

These words, these looks, infuse new life in
me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus;
And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
That I have reconcil'd your friends and you.
For you, Prince Bassianus, I have pass'd
My word and promise to the emperor,
That you will be more mild and tractable.
And fear not, lords, and you, Lavinia; 471
By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.

Luc. We do; and vow to heaven and to his highness,

That what we did was mildly, as we might,
Tendering our sister's honour and our own.

Marc. That on mine honour here I do protest.

Sat. Away, and talk not; trouble us no
more.

Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends:

The tribune and his nephews kneel for
grace; 483

I will not be denied: sweet heart, look back.

Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's here,

And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults:
Stand up.

Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend, and sure as death I swore
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come; if the emperor's court can feast two brides,

You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends.
This day shall be a love-day, Tamora. 491

Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and hound we'll give your grace
bon jour.

Sat. Be it so, Titus, and gramercy too.
Trumpets. Exeunt.

ACT II

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the Palace.

Enter AARON.

Aar. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Safe out of fortune's shot; and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack or lightning flash,
Advanc'd above pale envy's threat'ning reach.

As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glistering coach,
And overlooks the highest-peering hills;
So Tamora.

Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait, 10
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Then, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy
thoughts

To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph
long

Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains,

And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes
Than is Prometheus tied to Caucasus.

Away with slavish weeds and servile
thoughts!

I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made empress. 20

To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis, this nymph,
This siren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine,

And see his shipwreck and his common-weal's.

Holla! what storm is this?

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, braving.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge,
And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd,
And may, for aught thou know'st, affected be.

Chi. Demetrius, thou dost overween in all,
And so in this, to bear me down with braves.
'T is not the difference of a year or two 31
Makes me less gracious or thee more fortunate.

I am as able and as fit as thou
To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace;
And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.

Aar. Clubs, clubs! these lovers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvis'd,
Gave you a dancing-rapier by your side,
Are you so desperate grown, to threat your friends? 40

Go to; have your lath glued within your sheath

Till you know better how to handle it.

Chi. Meanwhile, sir, with the little skill I have,

Full well shalt thou perceive how much I dare.

Dem. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave?

They draw.

Aar. Why, how now, lords!
So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
And maintain such a quarrel openly?

Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge:
I would not for a million of gold

The cause were known to them it most concerns; 50

Nor would your noble mother for much more

Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.

For shame, put up.

Dem. Not I, till I have sheath'd
My rapier in his bosom, and withal
Thrust those reproachful speeches down his throat

That he hath breath'd in my dishonour here.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd and full resolv'd,

Foul-spoken coward, that thunder'st with thy tongue,

And with thy weapon nothing dar'st perform!

Aar. Away, I say! 60

Now, by the gods that war-like Goths adore,
This petty brabble will undo us all.

Why, lords, and think you not how dangerous

It is to jet upon a prince's right?

What! is Lavinia then become so loose,

Or Bassianus so degenerate,

That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd

Without controlment, justice, or revenge?

Young lords, beware! an should the empress know

This discord's ground, the music would not please. 70

Chi. I care not, I, knew she and all the world:

I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:

Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not in Rome

How furious and impatient they be,

And cannot brook competitors in love?

I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths
Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love.

Aar. To achieve her! how?

Dem. Why mak'st thou it so strange?

She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd; 82

She is a woman, therefore may be won;

She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd.

What, man! more water glideth by the mill

Than wots the miller of; and easy it is

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know:

Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother,

Better than he have worn Vulcan's badge.

Aar. Aside. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may. 90

Dem. Then why should he despair that knows to court it

With words, fair looks, and liberality?

What! hast thou not full often struck a doe,

And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Aar. Why, then, it seems, some certain snatch or so

Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd.

Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aar. Would you had hit it too!

Then should not we be tir'd with this ado.

Why, hark ye, hark ye! and are you such fools

To square for this? would it offend you then
That both should speed?

Chi. Faith, not me.

Dem. Nor me, so I were one. 102

Aar. For shame, be friends, and join for that you jar:

'T is policy and stratagem must do

That you affect; and so must you resolve,

That what you cannot as you would achieve,

You must perforce accomplish as you may.

Take this of me: Lucrece was not more chaste

Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.
A speedier course than lingering languishment 110

Must we pursue, and I have found the path.

My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;

There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:

The forest walks are wide and spacious,

And many unfrequented plots there are

Fitted by kind for rape and villany:

Single you thither then this dainty doe,

And strike her home by force, if not by words:

This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.

Come, come; our empress, with her sacred wit 120

To villany and vengeance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend;

And she shall file our engines with advice,
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of Fame,

The palace full of tongues, of eyes, of ears;
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and
dull;

There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns;

There serve your lusts, shadow'd from heaven's eye, 130

And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no
cowardice.

Dem. Sit fas aut nefas, till I find the stream

To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,
Per Styga, per manes vehor. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Forest.

Horns and cry of hounds heard.

Enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with Hunters, etc., MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and grey,

The fields are fragrant and the woods are
green.

Uncouple here and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And rouse the prince and ring a hunter's
peal,

That all the court may echo with the noise.
Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To attend the emperor's person carefully:
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

A cry of hounds, and horns winded in a peal.

Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, DEMETRIUS, CHIRON, and Attendants.

Many good morrows to your majesty; 11
Madam, to you as many and as good;

I promised your grace a hunter's peal.

Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my
lords;

Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.
Bass. Lavinia, how say you?

Lav. I say, no;
I have been broad awake two hours and
more.

Sat. Come on then; horse and chariots
let us have,

And to our sport. To TAMORA. Madam, now shall ye see 19

Our Roman hunting.

Marc. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory top.

Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game

Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound,
But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground.

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A lonely Part of the Forest.

Enter AARON, with a bag of gold.

Aar. He that had wit would think that I had none,

To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it.

Let him that thinks of me so abjectly
Know that this gold must coin a stratagem,
Which, cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent piece of villany:

And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest
Hides the gold.

That have their alms out of the empress' chest.

Enter TAMORA.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad 10

When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

The birds chant melody on every bush,
The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling
wind,

And make a chequer'd shadow on the
ground.

Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,
And, whilst the babbling echo mocks the
hounds,

Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,
Let us sit down and mark their yelping
noise; 20

And after conflict, such as was suppos'd
The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storm they were sur-
pris'd,

And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,
We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;

While hounds and horns and sweet melodious birds

Be unto us as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby to bring her babe asleep.

Aar. Madam, though Venus govern your desires, 30

Saturn is dominator over mine:
What signifies my deadly-standing eye,

My silence and my cloudy melancholy,
My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls
Even as an adder when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution?

No, madam, these are no veneral signs:
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my
head.

Hark, Tamora, the empress of my soul, 40
Which never hopes more heaven than rests

in thee,
This is the day of doom for Bassianus;

His Philomel must lose her tongue to-day,
Thy sons make pillage of her chastity,

And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.
Seest thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll.
Now question me no more; we are espied;
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah! my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life.

Aar. No more, great empress; Bassianus comes:

Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons
To back thy quarrels, whatsoe'er they be.

Exit.

Enter BASSIANUS and LAVINIA.

Bass. Whom have we here? Rome's royal empress,

Unfurnish'd of her well-beseeming troop?

Or is it Dian, habited like her,

Who hath abandoned her holy groves,

To see the general hunting in this forest?

Tam. Saucy controller of our private steps!

Had I the power that some say Dian had,
Thy temples should be planted presently

With horns, as was Actæon's; and the hounds

Should drive upon thy new-transformed limbs,

Unmannerly intruder as thou art!

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,
'T is thought you have a goodly gift in horn-
ing;

And to be doubted that your Moor and you
Are singled forth to try experiments,

Jove shield your husband from his hounds
to-day!

'T is pity they should take him for a stag.

Bass. Believe me, queen, your swarth
Cimmerian

Doth make your honour of his body's hue,
Spotted, detested, and abominable.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train,
Dismounted from your snow-white goodly steed,

And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,

Accompanied but with a barbarous Moor,

If foul desire had not conducted you?

Lav. And, being intercepted in your sport,

Great reason that my noble lord be rated

For sauciness. I pray you, let us hence,

And let her joy her raven-colour'd love;

This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Bass. The king my brother shall have note of this.

Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long;

Good king, to be so mightily abus'd!

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all
this?

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother!

Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?

These two have tic'd me hither to this place:
A barren detested vale, you see, it is;

The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,

O'ercome with moss and baleful mistletoe:
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,

Unless the nightly owl or fatal raven:

And when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,

A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing
snakes,

Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,

Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body hearing it

Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.

No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me they would bind

me here

Unto the body of a dismal yew,

And leave me to this miserable death:

And then they call'd me foul adulteress,

Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms

That ever ear did hear to such effect;

And, had you not by wondrous fortune come,

This vengeance on me had they executed.

Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,

Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

Stabs BASSIANUS.

Chi And this for me, struck home to show my strength.

Also stabs BASSIANUS, who dies.

Lav. Ay, come, Semiramis, nay, barbarous Tamora;

For no name fits thy nature but thy own.

Tam. Give me thy poniard; you shall know, my boys,

Your mother's hand shall right your mother's
wrong.

Dem. Stay, madam; here is more belongs to her:

First thrash the corn, then after burn the straw.

This minion stood upon her chastity,
Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty,

And with that painted hope she braves your mightiness:

And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch.

Drag hence her husband to some secret
hole,

And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when ye have the honey ye desire,

Let not this wasp outlive, us both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam, we will make that sure.

Come, mistress, now perforce we will enjoy
That nice-preserved honesty of yours.

Lav. O Tamora! thou bear'st a woman's
face,—

Tam. I will not hear her speak; away
with her!

Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me
but a word.

Dem. Listen, fair madam; let it be your glory
 To see her tears; but be your heart to them
 As unrelenting flint to drops of rain. 141
Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach the dam?
O! I do not learn her wrath; she taught it
 thee;
 The milk thou suck'dst from her did turn to marble;
 Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny.
 Yet every mother breeds not sons alike:
To CHIRON. Do thou entreat her show a woman pity.
Chi. What! would'st thou have me prove myself a bastard?
Lav. 'T is true the raven doth not hatch a lark;
 Yet have I heard, O! I could I find it now, 150
 The lion mov'd with pity did endure
 To have his princely paws par'd all away.
 Some say that ravens foster forlorn children,
 The whilst their own birds famish in their nests:
O! be to me, though thy hard heart say no,
 Nothing so kind, but something pitiful.
Tam. I know not what it means; away
 with her!
Lav. O! let me teach thee: for my father's sake,
 That gave thee life when well he might have slain thee,
 Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. 160
Tam. Hadst thou in person ne'er offended me,
 Even for his sake am I pitiless.
 Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain
 To save your brother from the sacrifice;
 But fierce Andronicus would not relent:
 Therefore, away with her, and use her as you will:
 The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.
Lav. O Tamora! be call'd a gentle queen.
 And with thine own hands kill me in this
 place;
 For 't is not life that I have begg'd so long;
 Poor I was slain when Bassianus died. 171
Tam. What begg'st thou then? fond woman, let me go.
Lav. 'T is present death I beg; and one thing more
 That womanhood denies my tongue to tell.
O! keep me from their worse than killing
 lust,
 And tumble me into some loathsome pit,
 Where never man's eye may behold my
 body:
 Do this, and be a charitable murderer.
Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee:
 No, let them satisfy their lust on thee. 180
Dem. Away! for thou hast stay'd us here
 too long.
Lav. No grace! no womanhood! Ah!
 beastly creature,
 The blot and enemy to our general name.
 Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth.
 Bring thou her husband:
 This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide
 him.
*DEMETRIUS throws the body of BASSI-
 ANUS into the pit; then exeunt
 DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, drag-
Tam. Farewell, my sons: see that you make her sure.
 Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed
 Till all the Andronici be made away. 189
 Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor.
 And let my spleenful sons this trull deflower.
Exit.

Re-enter AARON, with QUINTUS and MARTIUS.

Aar. Come on, my lords, the better foot
 before:
 Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit
 Where I espied the panther fast asleep.
Quint. My sight is very dull, whate'er it bodes.
Mart. And mine, I promise you: were 't
 not for shame,
 Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.
Falls into the pit.
Quint. What! art thou fall'n? What sub-tile hole is this,
 Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing
 briars,
 Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed
 blood 200
 As fresh as morning dew distill'd on flowers?
 A very fatal place it seems to me.
 Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?
Mart. O brother! with the dismall'st object hurt
 That ever eye with sight made heart lament.
Aar. Aside. Now will I fetch the king to find them here,
 That he thereby may give a likely guess
 How these were they that made away his brother. Exit.
Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help
 me out
 From this unhallow'd and blood-stained
 hole? 210
Quint. I am surprised with an uncouth
 fear;
 A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling
 joints:
 My heart suspects more than mine eye can
 see.
Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining
 heart,
 Aaron and thou look down into this den,
 And see a fearful sight of blood and death.
Quint. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart
 Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
 The thing whereat it trembles by surmise.
O! tell me how it is; for ne'er till now 220
 Was I a child, to fear I know not what.
Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed here,
 All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,
 In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.

Quint. If it be dark, how dost thou know 't is he?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear

A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,
Which, like a taper in some monument,
Doth shine upon the dead man's earthy cheeks,

And shows the ragged entrails of this pit: 230
So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus
When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.

O brother! help me with thy fainting hand,
If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,
Out of this fell devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Cocytus' misty mouth.

Quint. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee out;

Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave. 240
I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.

Quint. Thy hand once more; I will not loose again,

Till thou art here aloft, or I below.
Thou canst not come to me: I come to thee.

Falls in.

Re-enter AARON, with SATURNINUS.

Sat. Along with me: I'll see what hole is here,

And what he is that now is leap'd into it.
Say, who art thou that lately didst descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus:
Brought hither in a most unlucky hour, 251
To find thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead! I know thou dost but jest:

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;
'T is not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive;

But, out, alas! here have we found him dead.

Re-enter TAMORA, with Attendants; TITUS ANDRONICUS, and LUCIUS.

Tam. Where is my lord the king?

Sat. Here, Tamora; though griev'd with killing grief, 260

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound:

Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ, Giving a letter.

The plot of this timeless tragedy;
And wonder greatly that man's face can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. An if we miss to meet him hand-somely,

Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 't is we mean,
Do thou so much as dig the grave for him: 270

Thou know'st our meaning. Look for thy reward

*Among the nettles at the elder-tree
Which overshadows the mouth of that same pit*

*Where we decreed to bury Bassianus:
Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends.*

O Tamora! was ever heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the elder-tree.

Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out
That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold. 280

Sat. To TITUS. Two of thy whelps, fell curs of bloody kind,

Have here bereft my brother of his life.
Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison:

There let them bide until we have devis'd
Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What! are they in this pit? O wondrous thing!

How easily murder is discovered!
Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee

I beg this boon with tears not lightly shed;
That this fell fault of my accursed sons, 290

Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them,—

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see it is apparent.
Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.

Tit. I did, my lord: yet let me be their bail;

For, by my fathers' reverend tomb, I vow
They shall be ready at your highness' will

To answer their suspicion with their lives.
Sat. Thou shalt not bail them: see thou follow me.

Some bring the murder'd body, some the murderers: 300

Let them not speak a word; the guilt is plain;

For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,

That end upon them should be executed.
Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king:

Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.
Tit. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, with LAVINIA, ravished; her hands cut off, and her tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak,

Who 't was that cut thy tongue and ravish'd thee.

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so;

An if thy stumps will let thee play the scribe.
Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can scrawl.

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands.

Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash;

And so let 's leave her to her silent walks.
Chi. An 't were my case, I should go hang myself.

Dem. If thou hadst hands to help thee
knit the cord. 10

Exeunt DEMETRIUS and CHIRON.

Enter MARCUS.

Marc. Who's this? my niece, that flies away so fast!

Cousin, a word; where is your husband?
If I do dream, would all my wealth would wake me!

If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!

Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungentle
hands

Have lopp'd and hew'd and made thy body bare

Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in,

And might not gain so great a happiness 20
As have thy love? Why dost not speak to me?

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with
wind,

Doth rise and fall between thy rosed lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath.

But, sure, some Tereus hath deflower'd
thee,

And, lest thou should'st detect him, cut thy
tongue.

Ah! now thou turn'st away thy face for
shame;

And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,

Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan's face 31
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.

Shall I speak for thee? shall I say 't is so?
O! that I knew thy heart; and knew the beast,

That I might rail at him to ease my mind.
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,

Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.
Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,

And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind:
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;

A craftier Tereus hast thou met withal, 41
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,

That could have better sew'd than Philomel.
O! had the monster seen those lily hands

Tremble, like aspen-leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss
them,

He would not then have touch'd them for his life;

Or had he heard the heavenly harmony
Which that sweet tongue hath made,

He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell
asleep 50

As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.
Come, let us go, and make thy father blind;

For such a sight will blind a father's eye:
One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;

What will whole months of tears thy father's
eyes:

Do not draw back, for we will mourn with
thee:

O! could our mourning ease thy misery.

Exeunt.

ACT III

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of Justice, with MARTIUS and QUINTUS, bound, passing on to the place of execution; TITUS going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!

For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel
shed;

For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd;
And for these bitter tears, which now you
see

Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,

Whose souls are not corrupted as 't is thought.

For two-and-twenty sons I never wept, 10
Because they died in honour's lofty bed:

For these, these, tribunes, in the dust I write

Throwing himself on the ground.
My heart's deep languor and my soul's sad
tears.

Let my tears stanch the earth's dry appetite;
My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

Exeunt Senators, Tribunes, etc., with the Prisoners.

O earth! I will befriend thee more with rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient urns,
Than youthful April shall with all his showers;

In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still;
In winter with warm tears I'll melt the snow,

And keep eternal spring-time on thy face, 21
So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter LUCIUS, with his sword drawn.

O reverend tribunes! gentle aged men!
Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;

And let me say, that never wept before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O noble father, you lament in vain:
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by;

And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah! Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead. 30

Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you,—
Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 't is no matter, man: if they did hear,

They would not mark me, or if they did
mark,

They would not pity me, yet plead I must,
And bootless unto them.

Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones,
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,

Yet in some sort they are better than the
tribunes,

For that they will not intercept my tale. 40
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet

Receive my tears, and seem to weep with
me;

And were they but attired in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.
A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard
than stones;

A stone is silent, and offendeth not,
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death. Rises.

But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn?

Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death;

For which attempt the judges have pro-nounc'd

My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O happy man! they have befriended
thee.

Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?

Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey

But me and mine; how happy art thou then,
From these devourers to be banished!

But who comes with our brother Marcus
here?

Enter MARCUS and LAVINIA.

Marc. Titus, prepare thy aged eyes to weep;

Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break: 60
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it
then.

Marc. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ay me! this object kills me.

Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her.

Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight?

What fool hath added water to the sea,
Or brought a faggot to bright-burning Troy?

My grief was at the height before thou cam'st.

And now, like Nilus, it disdaineth bounds.

Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too;
For they have fought for Rome, and all in
vain;

And they have nurs'd this woe, in feeding
life;

In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use:

Now all the service I require of them

Is that the one will help to cut the other.

'T is well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands,

For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath mar-tyr'd thee?

Marc. O! that delightful engine of her
thoughts,

That blabb'd them with such pleasing elo-
quence,

Is torn forth from that pretty hollow cage.
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear.

Luc. O! say thou for her, who hath done
this deed?

Marc. O! thus I found her, straying in the park,

Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer
That hath receiv'd some unrecuring wound.

Tit. It was my dear; and he that wounded her

Hath hurt me more than had he kill'd me
dead:

For now I stand as one upon a rock
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,

Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,

Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.

This way to death my wretched sons are
gone;

Here stands my other son, a banish'd man,
And here my brother, weeping at my woes:

But that which gives my soul the greatest spurn,

Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.

Had I but seen thy picture in this plight
It would have maddened me: what shall I do

Now I behold thy lively body so?

Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy tears,
Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyr'd

thee:
Thy husband he is dead, and for his death

Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by
this.

Look! Marcus; ah! son Lucius, look on her:
When I did name her brothers, then fresh

tears

Stood on her cheeks, as doth the honey-dew
Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.

Marc. Perchance she weeps because they kill'd her husband;

Perchance because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,

Because the law hath ta'en revenge on them:
No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;

Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.
Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips;

Or make some sign how I may do thee ease.
Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,

And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain,

Looking all downwards, to behold our
cheeks

How they are stain'd, as meadows yet not
dry,

With miry slime left on them by a flood?
And in the fountain shall we gaze so long

Till the fresh taste be taken from that clear-
ness,

And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears?
Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine?

Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows

Pass the remainder of our hateful days?
What shall we do? let us, that have our

tongues,
Plot some device of further misery.

To make us wonder'd at in time to come.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for at your grief

See how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Marc. Patience, dear niece. Good Titus, dry thine eyes.

Tit. Ah! Marcus, Marcus; brother, well I wot.
Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine, 140
For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.

Luc. Ah! my Lavinia, I will wipe thy cheeks.

Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs:

Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say

That to her brother which I said to thee:
His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
O! what a sympathy of woe is this;
As far from help as limbo is from bliss.

Enter AARON.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor
Sends thee this word: that, if thou love thy sons, 150

Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the king: he for the same
Will send thee hither both thy sons alive;
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O gracious emperor! O gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?
With all my heart I'll send the emperor my hand. 161

Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Luc. Stay, father! for that noble hand of thine,

That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent; my hand will serve the turn:

My youth can better spare my blood than you;

And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.

Marc. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,

And rear'd aloft the bloody battle-axe,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle?

O! none of both but are of high desert: 171
My hand hath been but idle; let it serve

To ransom my two nephews from their death;

Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come, agree whose hand shall go alone,

For fear they die before their pardon come.

Marc. My hand shall go.

Luc. By heaven, it shall not go!
Sirs, strive no more: such wither'd herbs as these

Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son, 180

Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Marc. And for our father's sake, and mother's care

Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you; I will spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Marc. But I will use the axe.

Exeunt LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both:

Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. Aside. If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,

And never, whilst I live, deceive men so: 190
But I'll deceive you in another sort,

And that you'll say ere half an hour pass.

Cuts off TITUS'S hand.

Re-enter LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Tit. Now stay your strife; what shall be is dispatch'd.

Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand:
Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers; bid him bury it;
More hath it merited; that let it have.
As for my sons, say I account of them
As jewels purchas'd at an easy price;
And yet dear too, because I bought mine own. 200

Aar. I go, Andronicus; and for thy hand
Look by and by to have thy sons with thee.
Aside. Their heads, I mean. O! how this villany

Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it.
Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,
Aaron will have his soul black like his face. 210

Exit.
Tit. O! here I lift this one hand up to heaven,

And bow this feeble ruin to the earth:
If any power pities wretched tears,

To that I call. To LAVINIA. What! wilt thou kneel with me? 210

Do then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear our prayers,

Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,

And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds

When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Marc. O! brother, speak with possibilities,

And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?

Then be my passions bottomless with them.

Marc. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries, 220

Then into limits could I bind my woes.
When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth o'erflow?

If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad,
Threat'ning the welkin with his big-swoln face?

And wilt thou have a reason for this coil?
I am the sea; hark! how her sighs do blow;

She is the weeping welkin, I the earth;
Then must my sea be moved with her sighs;

Then must my earth with her continual tears

Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd;

For why my bowels cannot hide her woes, 231
But like a drunkard must I vomit them.
Then give me leave, for losers will have
leave
To ease their stomachs with their bitter
tongues.

*Enter a Messenger, with two heads and a
hand.*

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid
For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor.
Here are the heads of thy two noble sons,
And here's thy hand, in scorn to thee sent
back:

Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution
mock'd;

That woe is me to think upon thy woes, 240
More than remembrance of my father's death. Exit.

Marc. Now let hot Ætna cool in Sicily,
And be my heart an ever-burning hell!
These miseries are more than may be borne.
To weep with them that weep doth ease
some deal,
But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah! that this sight should make so deep a wound,

And yet detested life not shrink thereat;
That ever death should let life bear his
name,

Where life hath no more interest but to breathe. LAVINIA kisses TITUS.

Marc. Alas! poor heart; that kiss is comfortless 251

As frozen water to a starved snake.
Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an end?

Marc. Now, farewell, flattery: die, An-dronicus;

Thou dost not slumber: see thy two sons'
heads,

Thy war-like hand, thy mangled daughter
here;

Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight
Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother,
I,

Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
Ah! now no more will I control thy griefs.

Rend off thy silver hair, thy other hand 261
Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal
sight

The closing up of our most wretched eyes!
Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha!

Marc. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed:
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,

And would usurp upon my watery eyes, 269
And make them blind with tributary tears:

Then which way shall I find Revenge's cave?

For these two heads do seem to speak to me,
And threaten me I shall never come to bliss

Till all these mischiefs be return'd again
Even in their throats that have committed
them.

Come, let me see what task I have to do.

You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may turn me to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.
The vow is made. Come, brother, take a
head; 280

And in this hand the other will I bear.
Lavinia, thou shalt be employed in these
things:

Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.

As for thee, boy, go get thee from my sight;
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay:

Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there;
And if you love me, as I think you do,

Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.
Exeunt TITUS, MARCUS, and LAVINIA.

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble
father;

The woefullest man that ever liv'd in Rome.
Farewell, proud Rome; till Lucius come
again, 291

He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;

O! would thou wert as thou tofore hast
been;

But now nor Lucius nor Lavinia lives
But in oblivion and hateful griefs.

If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs,
And make proud Saturnine and his empress

Beg at the gates like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,

To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine. Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in Titus's House. A Banquet set out.

Enter TITUS, MARCUS, LAVINIA, and young LUCIUS, a Boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit; and look you eat
no more

Than will preserve just so much strength in
us

As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus, unknot that sorrow-wreathen knot:

Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our
hands,

And cannot passionate our ten-fold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine

Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,

Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh, 10
Then thus I thump it down.

To LAVINIA. Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs,

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating

Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with
groans;

Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole;

That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall
May run into that sink, and soaking in,

Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears. 20
Marc. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay

Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already?

Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I. What violent hands can she lay on her life? Ah! wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands;

To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er, How Troy was burnt and he made miserable?

O! handle not the theme, to talk of hands, Lest we remember still that we have none. 30 Fie, fie! how frantically I square my talk, As if we should forget we had no hands, If Marcus did not name the word of hands. Come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this: Here is no drink. Hark, Marcus, what she says;

I can interpret all her martyr'd signs: She says she drinks no other drink but tears, Brew'd with her sorrow, mash'd upon her cheeks.

Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;

In thy dumb action will I be as perfect 40 As begging hermits in their holy prayers: Thou shalt not sigh, nor hold thy stumps to heaven,

Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign.

But I of these will wrest an alphabet, And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:

Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.

Marc. Alas! the tender boy, in passion mov'd,

Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness. Tit. Peace, tender sapling; thou art made of tears, 50

And tears will quickly melt thy life away. MARCUS strikes the dish with a knife.

What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?

Marc. At that that I have kill'd, my lord; a fly.

Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart;

Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny: A deed of death, done on the innocent, Becomes not Titus' brother. Get thee gone;

I see thou art not for my company. Marc. Alas! my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Tit. But how if that fly had a father and mother? 60

How would he hang his slender gilded wings,

And buzz lamenting doings in the air! Poor harmless fly,

That, with his pretty buzzing melody, Came here to make us merry! and thou hast kill'd him.

Marc. Pardon me, sir; it was a black ill-favour'd fly,

Like to the empress' Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O, O!

Then pardon me for reprehending thee, For thou hast done a charitable deed. 70

Give me thy knife, I will insult on him; Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor

Come hither purposely to poison me. There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.

Ah! sirrah: Yet I think we are not brought so low,

But that between us we can kill a fly, That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Marc. Alas! poor man; grief has so wrought on him,

He takes false shadows for true substances. Tit. Come, take away. Lavinia, go with me: 81

I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee Sad stories chanced in the times of old.

Come, boy, and go with me: thy sight is young,

And thou shalt read when mine begins to dazzle. Exeunt.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—Rome. TITUS'S Garden.

Enter TITUS and MARCUS. Then enter young LUCIUS, LAVINIA running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia

Follows me every where, I know not why: Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes:

Alas! sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Marc. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thine aunt.

Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.

Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome she did.

Marc. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius: somewhat doth she mean.

See, Lucius, see how much she makes of thee; 10

Somewhither would she have thee go with her.

Ah! boy; Cornelia never with more care Read to her sons than she hath read to thee

Sweet poetry and Tully's Orator. Marc. Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess,

Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her; For I have heard my grandsire say full oft,

Extremity of griefs would make men mad; And I have read that Hecuba of Troy 20

Ran mad through sorrow; that made me to fear,

Although, my lord, I know my noble aunt Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did;

And would not, but in fury, fright my youth; Which made me down to throw my books and fly, Causeless, perhaps. But pardon me, sweet aunt;

And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go,
I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Marc. Lucius, I will.

LAVINIA turns over the books which LUCIUS had let fall.

Tit. How now, Lavinia! Marcus, what means this? 30

Some book there is that she desires to see.
Which is it, girl, of these? Open them, boy.
But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd;
Come, and take choice of all my library,
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.
Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?

Marc. I think she means that there was more than one

Confederate in the fact: ay, more there was;

Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge. 40

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she tosseth so?

Boy. Grandsire, 't is Ovid's Metamorphoses;

My mother gave it me.

Marc. For love of her that's gone,
Perhaps, she cull'd it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see how busily she turns the leaves!

What would she find? Lavinia, shall I read?

This is the tragic tale of Philomel,
And treats of Tereus' treason and his rape;
And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.

Marc. See, brother, see! note how she quotes the leaves. 50

Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet girl,

Ravish'd and wrong'd, as Philomela was,
Forc'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?

See, see!

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt,

O! had we never, never hunted there,
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes,

By nature made for murders and for rapes.

Marc. O! why should nature build so foul a den,

Unless the gods delight in tragedies? 60

Tit. Give signs, sweet girl, for here are none but friends,

What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:
Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,

That left the camp to sin in Lucrece' bed?

Marc. Sit down, sweet niece: brother, sit down by me.

Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,
Inspire me, that I may this treason find!

My lord, look here; look here, Lavinia:
This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst,

This after me.

He writes his name with his staff, and guides it with feet and mouth.

I have writ my name 70

Without the help of any hand at all.

Curs'd be that heart that forc'd us to this shift!

Write thou, good niece, and here display at last

What God will have discover'd for revenge.
Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain,

That we may know the traitors and the truth!

She takes the staff in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps, and writes.

Tit. O! do ye read, my lord, what she hath writ?

Stuprum. Chiron. Demetrius.

Marc. What, what! the lustful sons of Tamora

Performers of this heinous, bloody deed? 80

Tit. Magne dominator poli,
Tam lentus audis scelera? tam lentus vides?

Marc. O! calm thee, gentle lord; although I know

There is enough written upon this earth
To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts

And arm the minds of infants to exclaims.
My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia,

kneel;

And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope;

And swear with me, as with the woeful fere
And father of that chaste dishonour'd dame,

Lord Junius Brutus sware for Lucrece' rape,
That we will prosecute by good advice 92

Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

Tit. 'T is sure enough, an you knew how;

But if you hunt these bear-whelps, then beware:

The dam will wake, an if she wind you once:
She's with the lion deeply still in league,

And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back,
And when he sleeps will she do what she list.

You're a young huntsman, Marcus, let alone;
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass, 102

And with a gad of steel will write these words,

And lay it by: the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands like Sibyl's leaves

abroad,
And where's your lesson then? Boy, what say you?

Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bedchamber should not be safe

For these bad bondmen to the yoke of Rome.

Marc. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath full oft 110

For his ungrateful country done the like.

Boy. And, uncle, so will I an if I live.

Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury:

Lucius, I'll fit thee; and withal my boy
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons

Presents that I intend to send them both:
Come, come; thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?

Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grandsire.

Tit. No, boy, not so; I'll teach thee another course.

Lavinia, come. Marcus, look to my house; Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court: 121
Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we'll be waited on. Exeunt TITUS, LAVINIA, and Boy.
Marc. O heavens! can you hear a good man groan.

And not relent or not compassion him?
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy,
 That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart
 Than foemen's marks upon his batter'd shield;

But yet so just that he will not revenge.
 Revenge, ye heavens, for old Andronicus!
Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter from one side AARON, DEMETRIUS, and CHIRON; from the other side, young LUCIUS and an Attendant, with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here 's the son of Lucius; He hath some message to deliver us.

Aar. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandfather.

Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,

I greet your honours from Andronicus;
Aside. And pray the Roman gods confound you both.

Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius: what 's the news?

Boy. Aside. That you are both decipher'd, that 's the news,

For villains mark'd with rape. Aloud. May it please you,

My grandsire, well advis'd, hath sent by me 10

The goodliest weapons of his armoury,
 To gratify your honorable youth,

The hope of Rome, for so he bade me say;
 And so I do, and with his gifts present

Your lordships, that, whenever you have need,

You may be armed and appointed well.
 And so I leave you both, Aside like bloody villains. Exeunt Boy and Attendant.

Dem. What 's here? A scroll; and written round about?

Let 's see:

Integer vitæ, scelerisque purus, 20
Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arcu.

Chi. O! 't is a verse in Horace; I know it well:

I read it in the grammar long ago.

Aar. Ay, just a verse in Horace; right, you have it.

Aside. Now, what a thing it is to be an ass! Here 's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt,

 And sends them weapons wrapp'd about

with lines,
 That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick;

 But were our witty empress well afoot,

She would applaud Andronicus' conceit: 30

But let her rest in her unrest awhile.

And now, young lords, was 't not a happy star

Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,

Captives, to be advanced to this height?

It did me good before the palace gate
 To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord

Basely insinuate and send us gifts.

Aar. Had he not reason, Lord Demetrius? Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would we had a thousand Roman dames 41

At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.

Chi. A charitable wish and full of love.

Aar. Here lacks but your mother for to say amen.

Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let us go, and pray to all the gods

For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aar. Aside. Pray to the devils; the gods have given us over. Trumpets sound.

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish thus?

Chi. Belike, for joy the emperor hath a son. 50

Dem. Soft! who comes here?

Enter a Nurse, with a blackamoor Child.

Nurse. Good morrow, lords. O! tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor?

Aar. Well, more or less, or ne'er a whit at all,

Here Aaron is; and what with Aaron now?

Nurse. O gentle Aaron! we are all undone.

Now help, or woe betide thee evermore!

Aar. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep!

What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine arms?

Nurse. O! that which I would hide from heaven's eye,

Our empress' shame, and stately Rome's disgrace. 60

She is deliver'd, lords, she is deliver'd.

Aar. To whom?

Nurse. I mean she 's brought a-bed.

Aar. Well, God give her good rest! What hath he sent her?

Nurse. A devil.

Aar. Why, then she is the devil's dam: A joyful issue.

Nurse. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue.

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad
 Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime.

The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
 And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point. 70

Aar. 'Zounds, ye whore! is black so base a hue?

Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom,
sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?

Aar. That which thou canst not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aar. Villian, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.

Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choice!

Accurs'd the offspring of so foul a fiend!

Chi. It shall not live. 80

Aar. It shall not die.

Nurse. Aaron, it must; the mother wills it so.

Aar. What! must it, nurse? then let no man but I

Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point:

Nurse. give it me; my sword shall soon dispatch it.

Aar. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels up.

Takes the Child from the Nurse, and draws.

Stay, murderous villains! will you kill your brother?

Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,
That shone so brightly when this boy was
got, 90

He dies upon my scimitar's sharp point
That touches this my first-born son and heir.

I tell you, younglings, not Enceladus,
With all his threatening band of Typhon's brood,

Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,
Shall seize this prey out of his father's
hands.

What, what, ye sanguine, shallow-hearted
boys!

Ye white-lim'd walls! ye alehouse painted signs!

Coal-black is better than another hue,
In that it scorns to bear another hue; 100

For all the water in the ocean
Can never turn the swan's black legs to white,

Although she lave them hourly in the flood.
Tell the empress from me, I am of age

To keep mine own, excuse it how she can.

Dem. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistress thus?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress; this
myself;

The vigour and the picture of my youth:
This before all the world do I prefer; 109

This maugre all the world will I keep safe,
Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for ever sham'd.

Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape.

Nurse. The emperor in his rage will doom
her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy.

Aar. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears.

Fie, treacherous hue! that will betray with blushing

The close enacts and counsels of the heart:
Here's a young lad fram'd of another leer:
Look how the black slave smiles upon the
father, 120

As who should say, 'Old lad, I am thine
own.'

He is your brother, lords, sensibly fed
Of that self blood that first gave life to you;

And from that womb where you imprison'd
were

He is enfranchised and come to light:
Nay, he's your brother by the surer side,

Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nurse. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be
done,

And we will all subscribe to thy advice: 130
Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.

My son and I will have the wind of you:
Keep there; now talk at pleasure of your safety. 135

Dem. How many women saw this child
of his? 140

Aar. Why, so, brave lords! when we join in league,

I am a lamb; but if you brave the Moor,
The chafed boar, the mountain lioness,

The ocean swells not so as Aaron storms.
But say again, how many saw the child? 140

Nurse. Cornelia the midwife, and myself,
And no one else but the deliver'd empress.

Aar. The empress, the midwife, and yourself:

Two may keep counsel when the third's
away.

Go to the empress; tell her this I said:
Stabbing her.

'Weke, weke!'
So cries a pig prepared to the spit.

Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron? wherefore didst thou this?

Aar. O Lord, sir, 't is a deed of policy:
Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours,

A long-tongu'd babbling gossip? no, lords,
no. 150

And now be it known to you my full intent.
Not far, one Muli lives, my countryman;

His wife but yesternight was brought to bed.
His child is like to her, fair as you are:

Go pack with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all,

And how by this their child shall be ad-
vanc'd,

And be received for the emperor's heir,
And substituted in the place of mine, 159

To calm this tempest whirling in the court;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Hark ye, lords; you see I have given her
physic, 160

And you must needs bestow her funeral;
The fields are near, and you are gallant grooms.

This done, see that you take no longer days,
But send the midwife presently to me.

The midwife and the nurse well made away,
Then let the ladies tattle what they please. 170
Chi. Aaron, I see thou wilt not trust the air

With secrets.

Dem. For this care of Tamora,
Herself and hers are highly bound to thee. 171
Exeunt DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, bearing off the Nurse's body.

Aar. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow flies;
There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,
And secretly to greet the empress' friends.
Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear
you hence;

For it is you that puts us to our shifts;
I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,

And cabin in a cave, and bring you up
To be a warrior, and command a camp. 180
Exit, with the Child.

SCENE III.—The Same. A public Place.

Enter TITUS, bearing arrows with letters on the ends of them; with him MARCUS, young LUCIUS, PUBLIUS, SEMPRONIUS, CAIUS, and other Gentlemen, with bows.

Tit. Come, Marcus, come; kinsmen, this is the way.

Sir boy, now let me see your archery:
Look ye draw home enough, and 't is there
straight.

Terras Astraea reliquit:

Be you remember'd, Marcus, she 's gone,
she 's fled.

Sirs, take you to your tools. You, cousins,
shall

Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets;

Happily you may find her in the sea;

Yet there 's as little justice as at land.

No; Publius and Sempronius, you must do it; 10

'T is you must dig with mattock and with spade,

And pierce the inmost centre of the earth:

Then, when you come to Pluto's region,

I pray you, deliver him this petition;

Tell him, it is for justice and for aid,

And that it comes from old Andronicus,

Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.
Ah! Rome. Well, well; I made thee miserable

What time I threw the people's suffrages

On him that thus doth tyrannize o'er me. 20

Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all,

And leave you not a man-of-war unsearch'd:

This wicked emperor may have shipp'd
her hence;

And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.

Marc. O Publius! is not this a heavy case,
To see thy noble uncle thus distract?

Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns

By day and night to attend him carefully,

And feed his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some careful remedy. 30

Marc. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy.

Join with the Goths, and with revengeful
war

Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius, how now! how now, my masters!

What! have you met with her!

Pub. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you word,

If you will have Revenge from hell, you
shall:

Marry, for Justice, she is so employ'd,
He thinks with Jove in heaven, or somewhere else, 40

So that perforce you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delays.

I'll dive into the burning lake below,

And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.

Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars
we;

No big-bon'd men fram'd of the Cyclops'
size;

But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back,
Yet wrung with wrongs more than our backs
can bear:

And sith there 's no justice in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven and move the gods 50

To send down Justice for to wreak our wrongs.

Come, to this gear. You 're a good archer, Marcus. He gives them the arrows.

Ad Jovem, that 's for you: here, Ad Apol-linem:

Ad Martem, that 's for myself:

Here, boy, to Pallas: here, to Mercury:

To Saturn, Caius, not to Saturnine;

You were as good to shoot against the wind.

To it, boy! Marcus, loose when I bid.

Of my word, I have written to effect;

There 's not a god left unsolicited. 60

Marc. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts
into the court:

We will afflict the emperor in his pride.

Tit. Now, masters, draw. They shoot.
O! well said, Lucius.

Good boy, in Virgo's lap: give it Pallas.

Marc. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon;

Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?

See, see! thou hast shot off one of Taurus'
horns.

Marc. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot, 70

The Bull, being gall'd, gave Aries such a knock

That down fell both the Ram's horns in the court;

And who should find them but the empress'
villain?

She laugh'd, and told the Moor he should not choose

But give them to his master for a present.

Tit. Why, there it goes: God give his lordship joy!

Enter a Clown, with a basket, and two pigeons in it.

News! news from heaven! Marcus, the post is come.

Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters? Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?

Clo. O! the gibbet-maker. He says that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee? 83

Clo. Alas! sir, I know not Jupiter; I never drank with him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?

Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, sir; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven?

Clo. From heaven! alas! sir, I never came there. God forbid I should be so bold to press to heaven in my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal plebs, to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the imperial's men. 94

Marc. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace? 99

Clo. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither: make no more ado,

But give your pigeons to the emperor: By me thou shalt have justice at his hands. Hold, hold; meanwhile here 's money for thy charges.

Give me pen and ink.

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication?

Clo. Ay, sir.

Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneel; then kiss his foot; then deliver up your pigeons; and then look for your reward. I'll be at hand, sir; see you do it bravely.

Clo. I warrant you, sir; let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me see it.

Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration;

For thou hast made it like an humble suppliant:

And when thou hast given it to the emperor, Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Clo. God be with you, sir; I will. 120

Tit. Come, Marcus, let us go. Publius, follow me. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, DEMETRIUS, CHIRON, Lords and Others: SATURNINUS with the arrows in his hand that TITUS shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these! Was ever seen

An emperor in Rome thus overborne, Troubled, confronted thus; and, for the extent

Of egal justice, us'd in such contempt? My lords, you know, as do the mighty gods,

However these disturbers of our peace Buzz in the people's ears, there nought hath pass'd,

But even with law, against the wilful sons Of old Andronicus. And what an if

His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits, 10 Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,

His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?

And now he writes to heaven for his redress:

See here 's to Jove, and this to Mercury;

This to Apollo; this to the god of war;

Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome!

What 's this but libelling against the senate, And blazoning our injustice every where?

A goodly humour, is it not, my lords?

As who would say, in Rome no justice were.

But if I live, his feigned ecstasies 21

Shall be no shelter to these outrages;

But he and his shall know that justice lives

In Saturninus' health; whom, if she sleep,

He 'll so awake, as she in fury shall

Cut off the proud'st conspirator that lives.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine,

Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts,

Calm thee, and bear the faults of Titus' age,

The effects of sorrow for his valiant sons, 30

Whose loss hath pierc'd him deep and

scarr'd his heart;

And rather comfort his distressed plight

Than prosecute the meanest or the best

For these contempts. Aside. Why, thus it shall become

High-witted Tamora to gloze with all:

But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick,

Thy life-blood out: if Aaron now be wise,

Then is all safe, the anchor 's in the port.

Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow! would'st thou speak with us?

Clo. Yea, forsooth, an your mistership be imperial. 40

Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.

Clo. 'Tis he. God and Saint Stephen give you good den. I have brought you a letter and a couple of pigeons here.

SATURNINUS reads the letter.

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clo. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hanged.

Clo. Hanged! By'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end.

Exit, guarded.

Sat. Despiteful and intolerable wrongs! 50 Shall I endure this monstrous villany?

I know from whence this same device proceeds.

May this be borne? As if his traitorous sons,

That died by law for murder of our brother,

Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully!

Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;
Nor age nor honour shall shape privilege.
For this proud mock I'll be thy slaughter-
man;
Sly frantic wretch, that holp'st to make me
great,
In hope thyself should govern Rome and
me. 60

Enter ÆMILIUS.

What news with thee, Æmilius?

Æmil. Arm, my lords! Rome never had more cause.

The Goths have gather'd head, and with a
power

Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil,
They hither march amain, under conduct
Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus;

Who threats, in course of this revenge, to do
As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is war-like Lucius general of the Goths?

These tidings nip me, and I hang the head 70
As flowers with frost or grass beat down with storms.

Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach:

'T is he the common people love so much;
Myself hath often heard them say,

When I have walked like a private man,
That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully,

And they have wish'd that Lucius were their
emperor.

Tam. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?

Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius,
And will revolt from me to succour him. 80

Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious, like thy name.

Is the sun dimm'd, that gnats do fly in it?
The eagle suffers little birds to sing,

And is not careful what they mean thereby,
Knowing that with the shadow of his wings

He can at pleasure stint their melody;
Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome.

Then cheer thy spirit; for know, thou
emperor,

I will enchant the old Andronicus
With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous, 90

Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep,
Whenas the one is wounded with the bait,

The other rotted with delicious feed.
Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he
will:

For I can smooth and fill his aged ear
With golden promises, that, were his heart

Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,
Yet should both ear and heart obey my

tongue.

To ÆMILIUS. Go thou before, be our ambassador: 100

Say that the emperor requests a parley
Of war-like Lucius, and appoint the meet-
ing

Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.

Sat. Æmilius, do this message honourably:

And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please
him best.

Æmil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.
Exit.

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have,

To pluck proud Lucius from the war-like
Goths. 110

And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,
And bury all thy fear in my devices.

Sat. Then go successfully, and plead to him. Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

Enter LUCIUS and an army of Goths, with drum and colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful
friends,

I have received letters from great Rome,
Which signify what hate they bear their
emperor,

And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles

witness,
Imperious and impatient of your wrongs;

And wherein Rome hath done you any scath,

Let him make treble satisfaction.
First Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus, Whose name was once our terror, now our

comfort; 10
Whose high exploits and honourable deeds

Ingrateful Rome requites with foul contempt,

Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou
lead'st,

Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day
Led by their master to the flower'd fields,

And be aveng'd on cursed Tamora.
Goths. And, as he saith, so say we all

with him.

Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank
you all.

But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading AARON, with his Child in his arms.

Second Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd 20

To gaze upon a ruinous monastery;
And as I earnestly did fix mine eye

Upon the wasted building, suddenly
I heard a child cry underneath a wall.

I made unto the noise; when soon I heard
The crying babe controll'd with this discourse:

'Peace, tawny slave, half me and half thy dam!

Did not thy hue bewray whose brat thou
art,

Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look,
Villain, thou might'st have been an emperor:

But where the bull and cow are both milk-
white, 31

They never do beget a coal-black calf.

Peace, villain, peace!' even thus he rates
the babe,

'For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth;
Who, when he knows thou art the empress'
babe,

Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake.'
With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon
him,

Surpris'd him suddenly, and brought him
hither,

To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O worthy Goth, this is the incarnate devil <sup>40</sup>

That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the pearl that pleas'd your empress'
eye,

And here's the base fruit of his burning
lust.

Say, wall-eyed slave, whither would'st thou convey

This growing image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speak? What! deaf? not a word?

A halter, soldiers! hang him on this tree,
And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Aar. Touch not the boy; he is of royal
blood.

Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good. <sup>50</sup>

First hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;

A sight to vex the father's soul withal.

Get me a ladder!

A ladder brought, which AARON is made to ascend.

Aar. Lucius, save the child;
And bear it from me to the empress.

If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous
things

That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall.

I'll speak no more but 'Vengeance rot you
all!'

Luc. Say on; an if it please me which thou speak'st,

Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd. <sup>60</sup>

Aar. An if it please thee! why, assure thee, Lucius,

'T will vex thy soul to hear what I shall
speak;

For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,

Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason, villainies

Ruthful to hear, yet piteously perform'd:
And this shall all be buried in my death,

Unless thou swear to me my child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy mind; I say thy child shall live.

Aar. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin. <sup>70</sup>

Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believ'st no god:

That granted, how canst thou believe an
oath?

Aar. What if I do not? as, indeed, I do
not;

Yet, for I know thou art religious,

And hast a thing within thee called con-
science,

With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,

Therefore I urge thy oath; for that I
know

An idiot holds his bauble for a god,
And keeps the oath which by that god he swears, <sup>80</sup>

To that I'll urge him: therefore thou shalt
vow

By that same god, what god soe'er it be,
That thou ador'st and hast in reverence,

To save my boy, to nourish and bring him
up;

Or else I will discover nought to thee.

Luc. Even by my god I swear to thee I
will.

Aar. First know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O most insatiate and luxurious
woman!

Aar. Tut! Lucius, this was but a deed of charity.

To that which thou shalt hear of me anon. <sup>90</sup>
'T was her two sons that murder'd Bassianus;

They cut thy sister's tongue and ravish'd
her,

And cut her hands and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.

Luc. O detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?

Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd, and 't was

Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O barbarous, beastly villains, like thyselves!

Aar. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them.

That coddling spirit had they from their
mother,

As sure a card as ever won the set; <sup>100</sup>
That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of
me,

As true a dog as ever fought at head.

Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.

I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole
Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay;

I wrote the letter that thy father found,
And hid the gold within the letter men-
tion'd,

Confederate with the queen and her two
sons:

And what not done, that thou hast cause
to rue,

Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it? <sup>110</sup>
I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand.

And, when I had it, drew myself apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.

I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall
When, for his hand, he had his two sons'
heads;

Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his:

And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swoon'd almost at my pleasing tale,

And for my tidings gave me twenty kisses.

First Goth. What! canst thou say all this, and never blush? 121
Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.
Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?
Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.
 Even now I curse the day, and yet, I think,
 Few come within the compass of my curse,
 Wherein I did not some notorious ill:
 As kill a man, or else devise his death;
 Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;
 Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself;
 Set deadly enmity between two friends; 131
 Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
 Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night,
 And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
 Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
 And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
 Even when their sorrows almost were forgot;
 And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
 Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
 'Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead.'
 Tut! I have done a thousand dreadful things 141
 As willingly as one would kill a fly,
 And nothing grieves me heartily indeed
 But that I cannot do ten thousand more.
Luc. Bring down the devil, for he must not die
 So sweet a death as hanging presently.
Aar. If there be devils, would I were a devil.
 To live and burn in everlasting fire,
 So I might have your company in hell,
 But to torment you with my bitter tongue!
Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no more. 151

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome
 Desires to be admitted to your presence.
Luc. Let him come near.

Enter ÆMILIUS.

Welcome, Æmilium! what's the news from Rome?

Æmil. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths,

The Roman emperor greets you all by me;
 And, for he understands you are in arms,
 He craves a parley at your father's house,
 Willing you to demand your hostages, 160
 And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

First Goth. What says our general?

Luc. Æmilium, let the emperor give his pledges

Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
 And we will come. March away. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Rome. Before TITUS'S House.

Enter TAMORA, DEMETRIUS, and CHIRON, disguised.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habili-
 ment,
 I will encounter with Andronicus,
 And say I am Revenge, sent from below
 To join with him and right his heinous
 wrongs.
 Knock at his study, where they say he keeps,
 To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge;
 Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him,
 And work confusion on his enemies.

They knock.

Enter TITUS, above.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation?
 Is it your trick to make me ope the door, 10
 That so my sad decrees may fly away,
 And all my study be to no effect?
 You are deceiv'd; for what I mean to do,
 See here, in bloody lines I have set down;
 And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talk with thee.

Tit. No, not a word; how can I grace my talk,

Wanting a hand to give it action?

Thou hast the odds of me; therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou would'st talk with me. 20

Tit. I am not mad; I know thee well enough:

Witness this wretched stump, witness these crimson lines;

Witness those trenches made by grief and care;

Witness the tiring day and heavy night;
 Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well

For our proud empress, mighty Tamora.
 Is not thy coming for my other hand?

Tam. Know, thou sad man, I am not Tamora;

She is thy enemy, and I thy friend:
 I am Revenge, sent from the infernal kingdom, 30

To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,
 By working wreakful vengeance on thy foes.
 Come down and welcome me to this world's
 light;

Confer with me of murder and of death.
 There's not a hollow cave or lurking-place,
 No vast obscurity or misty vale,

Where bloody murder or detested rape
 Can couch for fear, but I will find them out;

And in their ears tell them my dreadful
 name,

Revenge, which makes the foul offender
 quake. 40

Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to me,

To be a torment to mine enemies?

Tam. I am; therefore come down, and welcome me.

Tit. Do me some service ere I come to
 thee.

Lo, by thy side where Rape and Murder stands;

Now give some surance that thou art Revenge:

Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot-wheels,

And then I'll come and be thy waggoner,
And whirl along with thee about the globe.
Provide two proper palfreys, black as jet, 50
To hale thy vengeful waggon swift away,
And find out murderers in their guilty caves:

And when thy car is loaden with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the waggon-wheel
Trot like a servile footman all day long,
Even from Hyperion's rising in the east
Until his very downfall in the sea:

And day by day I'll do this heavy task,
So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me. 60

Tit. Are these thy ministers? what are they call'd?

Tam. Rapine and Murder; therefore called so.

'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good Lord, how like the empress' sons they are,

And you the empress! but we worldly men
Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.

O sweet Revenge! now do I come to thee;
And, if one arm's embracement will content thee,

I will embrace thee in it by and by.

Exit above.

Tam. This closing with him fits his lunacy. 70

Whate'er I forge to feed his brain-sick fits,

Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches,

For now he firmly takes me for Revenge;

And, being credulous in this mad thought,
I'll make him send for Lucius his son;

And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
I'll find some cunning practice out of hand

To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,
Or, at the least, make them his enemies.

See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme. 80

Enter TITUS.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee:

Welcome, dread Fury, to my woeful house:
Rapine and Murder, you are welcome too.

How like the empress and her sons you are!

Well are you fitted had you but a Moor:
Could not all hell afford you such a devil?

For well I wot the empress never wags
But in her company there is a Moor;

And would you represent our queen aright,
It were convenient you had such a devil. 90

But welcome as you are. What shall we do?

Tam. What would'st thou have us do, Andronicus?

Dem. Show me a murderer, I'll deal with him.

Chi. Show me a villain that hath done a rape,

And I am sent to be reveng'd on him.

Tam. Show me a thousand that have done thee wrong,

And I will be revenged on them all.

Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome,

And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself,

Good Murder, stab him; he's a murderer. 100

Go thou with him; and when it is thy hap
To find another that is like to thee,

Good Rapine, stab him; he's a ravisher.
Go thou with them; and in the emperor's court

There is a queen attended by a Moor;
Well may'st thou know her by thine own proportion,

For up and down she doth resemble thee:

I pray thee, do on them some violent death;
They have been violent to me and mine.

Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd us; this shall we do. 110

But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius, thy thrice-valiant son,

Who leads towards Rome a band of war-like Goths,

And bid him come and banquet at thy house:

When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
I will bring in the empress and her sons,

The emperor himself, and all thy foes,
And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,

And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart.

What says Andronicus to this device? 120

Tit. Marcus, my brother! 'tis sad Titus calls.

Enter MARCUS.

Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius;
Thou shalt inquire him out among the

Goths:

Bid him repair to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths;

Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are:

Tell him, the emperor and the empress too
Feast at my house, and he shall feast with them.

This do thou for my love; and so let him,
As he regards his aged father's life. 130

Marc. This will I do, and soon return again. Exit.

Tam. Now will I hence about thy business,

And take my ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me;

Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tam. Aside to her sons. What say you, boys? will you abide with him,

Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor
How I have govern'd our determin'd jest?

Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him
fair, 140

And tarry with him till I turn again.

Tit. Aside. I know them all, though they suppose me mad,
And will o'erreach them in their own devices;

A pair of cursed hell-hounds and their dam.
Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure; leave
us here.

Tam. Farewell, Andronicus: Revenge
now goes

To lay a complot to betray thy foes.

Tit. I know thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell. Exit TAMORA.

Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?

Tit. Tut! I have work enough for you to do. 150

Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine!

Enter PUBLIUS and Others.

Pub. What is your will?

Tit. Know you these two?

Pub. The empress' sons
I take them, Chiron and Demetrius.

Tit. Fie, Publius, fie! thou art too much deceiv'd;

The one is Murder, Rape is the other's
name;

And therefore bind them, gentle Publius;

Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them.

Oft have you heard me wish for such an
hour, 160

And now I find it: therefore bind them sure,
And stop their mouths if they begin to cry.

Exit.
PUBLIUS, etc., lay hold on CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Chi. Villains, forbear! we are the empress' sons.

Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.

Stop close their mouths, let them not speak
a word.

Is he sure bound? look that you bind them
fast.

Re-enter TITUS, with LAVINIA; she bearing a basin, and he a knife.

Tit. Come, come, Lavina; look, thy foes are bound.

Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak
to me,

But let them hear what fearful words I utter.

O villains, Chiron and Demetrius! 170

Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud.

This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile
fault

Two of her brothers were condemn'd to
death,

My hand cut off and made a merry jest:
Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more dear

Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity.

Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd.

What would you say if I should let you
speak?

Villains, for shame you could not beg for
grace. 180

Hark! wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats,

Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth
hold

The basin that receives your guilty blood.
You know your mother means to feast with
me,

And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad.

Hark! villains, I will grind your bones to
dust,

And with your blood and it I'll make a paste;

And of the paste a coffin I will rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful
heads; 190

And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd
dam,

Like to the earth swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to.

And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you us'd my
daughter,

And worse than Procne I will be reveng'd.
And now prepare your throats. Lavinia, come. He cuts their throats.

Receive the blood: and when that they are
dead,

Let me go grind their bones to powder
small,

And with this hateful liquor temper it; 200

And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd.

Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet, which I wish may prove

More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast.

So, now bring them in, for I'll play the cook,

And see them ready 'gainst their mother
comes.

Exeunt, bearing the dead bodies.

SCENE III.—*The Same. Court of TI-
TUS'S House. A banquet set out.*

Enter LUCIUS, MARCUS, and Goths; with AARON, prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 't is my father's mind

That I repair to Rome, I am content.
First Goth. And ours with thine, befall what fortune will.

Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor,

This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil;
Let him receive no sustenance, fether him,

Till he be brought unto the empress' face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings:

And see the ambush of our friends be
strong;

I fear the emperor means no good to us. 10

Aar. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!
Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unhallow'd slave!

Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.

Trumpets sound.
The trumpets show the emperor is at hand.

Enter SATURNINUS and TAMORA, with ÆMILIUS, Senators, Tribunes, and Others.

Sat. What! hath the firmament more suns than one?

Luc. What boots it thee to call thyself a sun?

Marc. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the parole;

These quarrels must be quietly debated. 20
The feast is ready which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honourable end,
For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome:

Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your places.

Sat. Marcus, we will. Hautboys sound.

Enter TITUS, dressed like a cook, LAVINIA, veiled, young LUCIUS, and Others.
TITUS places the dishes on the table.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dread queen;

Welcome, ye war-like Goths; welcome, Lucius;

And welcome, all. Although the cheer be poor,

'T will fill your stomachs; please you eat of it.

Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd, Andronicus? 33

Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,

To entertain your highness, and your empress.

Tam. We are beholding to you, good Andronicus.

Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were.

My lord the emperor, resolve me this:

Was it well done of rash Virginius

To slay his daughter with his own right hand,

Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deflower'd?

Sat. It was, Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, mighty lord? 40

Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame,

And by her presence still renew his sorrows.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant,

For me, most wretched, to perform the like.

Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;
And with thy shame thy father's sorrow die!

Kills LAVINIA.

Sat. What hast thou done, unnatural and unkind?

Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me blind.

I am as woeful as Virginius was, 50
And have a thousand times more cause than he

To do this outrage: and it now is done.

Sat. What! was she ravish'd? tell who did the deed.

Tit. Will 't please you eat? will 't please your highness feed?

Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus?

Tit. Not I; 't was Chiron and Demetrius:
They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue;
And they, 't was they, that did her all this wrong.

Sat. Go fetch them hither to us presently.

Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie; 60

Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.

'T is true, 't is true; witness my knife's sharp point. Kills TAMORA.

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed! Kills TITUS.

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?

There's need for meed, death for a deadly deed!

Kills SATURNINUS. A great tumult.

The people in confusion disperse.

MARCUS, LUCIUS, and their partisans, go up into the balcony.

Marc. You sad-fac'd men, people and sons of Rome,

By uproar sever'd, like a flight of fowl
Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,

O! let me teach you how to knit again 70
This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,

These broken limbs again into one body;
Lest Rome herself be bane unto herself,

And she whom mighty kingdoms court'sy to,
Like a forlorn and desperate castaway,

Do shameful execution on herself.

But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,
Grave witnesses of true experience,

Cannot induce you to attend my words,
To LUCIUS. Speak, Rome's dear friend, as erst our ancestor, 80

When with his solemn tongue he did discourse

To love-sick Dido's sad attending ear
The story of that baleful burning night

When subtle Greeks surpris'd King Priam's Troy;

Tell us what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,
Or who hath brought the fatal engine in

That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.

My heart is not compact of flint nor steel,
Nor can I utter all our bitter grief,

But floods of tears will drown my oratory, 90
And break my utterance, even in the time

When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commiseration.

Here is a captain, let him tell the tale;
Your hearts must throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,

That cursed Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdered our emperor's brother:

And they it was that ravished our sister.
For their fell faults our brothers were be-headed,

Our father's tears despis'd, and basely cozen'd

Of that true hand that fought Rome's quarrel out

And sent her enemies unto the grave:
Lastly, myself unkindly banished,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,

To beg relief among Rome's enemies;
Who drown'd their enmity in my true tears,
And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend:

I am the turn'd forth, be it known to you, 109
That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood,
And from her bosom took the enemy's point,

Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body.
Alas! you know I am no vaunter, I;

My scars can witness, dumb although they are,

That my report is just and full of truth.
But soft! methinks I do digress too much,
Citing my worthless praise: O! pardon me;
For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Marc. Now is my turn to speak. Behold this child:

Of this was Tamora delivered, 120

The issue of an irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes.

The villain is alive in Titus' house,
Damn'd as he is, to witness this is true.

Now judge what cause had Titus to revenge
These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,

Or more than any living man could bear.
Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Romans?

Have we done aught amiss, show us wherein,
And, from the place where you behold us now, 130

The poor remainder of Andronici
Will hand in hand all headlong cast us down,

And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,

And make a mutual closure of our house.
Speak, Romans, speak! and if you say we shall,

Lo! hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Æmil. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,

Bring our emperor gently in thy hand,
Lucius our emperor; for well I know

The common voice do cry it shall be so. 140

Marc. Lucius, all hail! Rome's royal emperor!

To Attendants. Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house,

And hither hale that misbelieving Moor,

To be adjudg'd some direful slaughtering death,

As punishment for his most wicked life.

Exeunt Attendants.

LUCIUS, MARCUS, and the Others descend.

All. Lucius, all hail! Rome's gracious governor!

Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans: may I govern so,

To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe!

But, gentle people, give me aim awhile,
For nature puts me to a heavy task. 150

Stand all aloof; but, uncle, draw you near,
To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk.

O! take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,

The last true duties of thy noble son.

Marc. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,

Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O! were the sum of these that I should pay

Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Luc. Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn of us 160

To melt in showers: thy grandsire lov'd thee well:

Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee,
Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;

Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meet and agreeing with thine infancy;

In that respect, then, like a loving child,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,

Because kind nature doth require it so:
Friends should associate friends in grief and woe.

Bid him farewell; commit him to the grave;
Do him that kindness, and take leave of him. 171

Boy. O grandsire, grandsire! even with all my heart

Would I were dead, so you did live again.

O Lord! I cannot speak to him for weeping;
My tears will choke me if I ope my mouth.

Re-enter Attendants, with AARON.

First Rom. You sad Andronici, have done with woes:

Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish him;

There let him stand, and rave, and cry for food: 180

If any one relieves or pities him,
For the offence he dies. This is our doom:

Some stay to see him fasten'd in the earth.

Aar. O! why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb?

I am no baby, I, that with base prayers
I should repent the evils I have done.

Ten thousand worse than ever yet I did
Would I perform, if I might have my will:

If one good deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very soul. 190

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence,
And give him burial in his father's grave.
My father and Lavinia shall forthwith
Be closed in our household's monument.
As for that heinous tiger, Tamora,
No funeral rite, nor man in mourning weeds,
No mournful bell shall ring her burial;

But throw her forth to beasts and birds of prey.

Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity;
And, being so, shall have like want of pity. 200
See justice done on Aaron, that damn'd Moor,
By whom our heavy haps had their beginning:

Then, afterwards, to order well the state,
That like events may ne'er it ruinate.

Exeunt.

ROMEO AND JULIET

IT is customary to regard Romeo and Juliet as a tragedy of youthful love. To me it appears to be something rather more than that. It is a tragedy of the revolt to which love drives youth against a type of authority that is at variance with the fundamental facts of life. That this revolt results in the death of these young lovers is due not primarily to defects in their own natures—defects which in the judgment of maturity and age commonly characterize youth, but rather to a condition into which they are born and for which they are not responsible—the ancient enmity of their respective houses. To charge Romeo and Juliet with responsibility for their own catastrophe because of imprudence, passion, and impetuosity is practically equivalent to demanding that they shall exchange their youth for age; or to insisting that Nature shall adapt herself to man-made laws and the customs of society. The play itself warrants no such charge. Shakespeare here, as elsewhere, reveals his adherence to the principle which underlies the great utterance—“The Sabbath was made for man; not man for the Sabbath.”

As we view this play, Romeo and Juliet had the right to love, to live, and to taste even supream joy than that which came to them for one brief moment. Neither God, nor Fate, nor Destiny decreed their death. Their love was divine; in full conformity with a law of necessity imposed by Nature and universally recognized by man. Such love is of youth; it knows nothing of prudence. Prudence belongs to age, and in its name age has always been distrustful of the love of youth, always has sought to subject it to its own authority. The resulting clash, no matter which side has prevailed, has been the source of endless tragedies. Romeo and Juliet as a tragedy of youthful love in revolt against the authority of prudent age has universal application and affords to an unusual degree opportunity for moral inference.

Rarely has Shakespeare pointed his moral so clearly as in this play. It is found in those lines which follow the catastrophe—lines which in a modern stage presentation are almost invariably omitted. Standing within the tomb of the Capulets, the Prince summons the parents of these dead children:

“Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague!
See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love.”

Neither Montague nor Capulet demurs to this charge of full responsibility. They do not plead contributing causes, the part played by chance and accident, the imprudence of the lovers. Rather they acknowledge the justice of the charge by clasping hands in reconciliation over the dead bodies of these “Poor sacrifices of our enmity!” In the light of such acknowledgment, what can be said in justification of a prudence that failed to foresee the heritage of death that ancient enmities bequeath to youth?

To make our thought clearer, let us turn to the first meeting of these lovers. It is of the utmost importance to observe that their love comes to birth before either knows the other's name. In such ignorance how could they know that parental authority had decreed their enmity? When Romeo first learns from the Nurse who Juliet really is, he cries,

“Is she a Capulet?
O dear account! my life is my foe's debt.”

That is, he recognizes that his very life, which depends upon his having Juliet, is at the mercy of an enemy, her father, to whose authority she is subject. It does not occur to him to question that authority; rather he appears ready to submit to it even at the cost of life itself. Consciousness of the enmity of their houses carries with it to Romeo, now in love with Juliet, first of all the thought of death.

Likewise with Juliet on first learning Romeo's name:

"My only love sprung from my only hate!
Too early seen unknown, and known too late!
Prodigious birth of love it is to me,
That I must love a loathed enemy."

Had she only known his name before she saw him, before their hands and lips touched, she might have fortified herself, nay, she would have been already fortified by that very knowledge, against him. Such is the power of parental authority in teaching prudence to children. But her knowledge comes too late. Love is already born in her. "I must love," she cries; and yet, with this new birth springs the thought that to love one whose very name she has been taught to loathe, is portentous. To Juliet in love, then, as to Romeo, the thought of the enmity of their houses raises the spectre of death. Instinctively they both acknowledge the imprudence of a love which runs counter to parental authority, submission to which has been with them hitherto a law of their being.

But strange is the power of love. It is not easily thwarted. It summons the powers of earth and heaven in its own behalf. When next we see Juliet she reveals to us the struggle through which she has passed and the decision she has reached:

"O Romeo, Romeo! wherefore art thou Romeo?
Deny thy father and refuse thy name;
Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
And I'll no longer be a Capulet."

Here is the revolt sounded. It results from no mere wilfulness or perversity. Love has quickened her whole being. Her intellect responds; and her passion serves as a white light to guide her reason to the truth. For the first time in her life she has been questioning authority, and she has found its claims false:

"'T is but thy name that is my enemy;
Thou art thyself, though not a Montague.
. . . . Romeo, doff thy name;
And for thy name, which is no part of thee,
Take all myself.
Romeo. I take thee at thy word.
Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd;
Henceforth I never will be Romeo."

The revolt is complete. Through love they have made the astonishing discovery that the name which they have been taught to loathe "is no part of" the object which it designates. They have pierced the sham by which Authority, through a false conception of prudence, seeks to conceal from youth the fundamental facts of life and transmit to posterity its ancient enmities. The discovery is really Shakespeare's. No wonder that Authority blinks at him and drops the curtain at the catastrophe of Romeo and Juliet.

All the unlucky accidents that follow their revolt spring from their attempt to be true to themselves under the conditions imposed upon them by the enmity of their houses. But for that, Juliet, who had been already assured by her mother that she was of marriageable age, could have gone straight to her and announced her love for Romeo; but for that, the wise Friar Laurence would have refused to perform the secret marriage ceremony through which he hoped to bring about a reconciliation of their houses; but for that, Tybalt would not have fought with Mercutio. Mercutio would not have been killed "under Romeo's arm," and Romeo would not have suffered banishment for killing Tybalt; but for that, Juliet would not have drunk the potion and Romeo would not have ridden with such fatal speed to her tomb. It is easy enough for Age to point out the defects of Youth, but it would be a brave critic who would alter in any particular the characters of these lovers, lest he rob them of youth itself. It is the glory of youth that in being true to itself it laughs at death. It is for authority and age to make it possible for youth, to whom love is a necessity, to escape the forfeit of its life as a sacrifice to "ancient enmities."

PROLOGUE.

Enter CHORUS.

*Two households, both alike in dignity
 In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
 From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
 Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
 From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
 A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
 Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
 Do with their death bury their parents'
 strife.
 The fearful passage of their death-mark'd
 love,
 And the continuance of their parents' rage,
 Which, but their children's end, nought could remove,
 Is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;
 The which if you with patient ears attend,
 What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.* Exit.

ACT I

SCENE I.—Verona. A public Place.

Enter SAMPSON and GREGORY, armed with swords and bucklers.

Samp. Gregory, o' my word, we'll not carry coals.

Gre. No, for then we should be colliers.

Samp. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.

Gre. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out o' the collar.

Samp. I strike quickly, being moved.

Gre. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.

Samp. A dog of the house of Montague moves me. 10

Gre. To move is to stir, and to be valiant is to stand; therefore, if thou art moved, thou runnest away.

Samp. A dog of that house shall move me to stand: I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.

Gre. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.

Samp. 'T is true; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall: therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall. 22

Gre. The quarrel is between our masters and us their men.

Samp. 'T is all one, I will show myself a tyrant: when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads. 23

Gre. The heads of the maids?

Samp. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads; take it in what sense thou wilt.

Gre. They must take it in sense that feel it.

Samp. Me they shall feel while I am able to stand; and 't is known I am a pretty piece of flesh.

Gre. 'T is well thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John. Draw thy tool; here comes two of the house of the Montagues.

Enter ABRAHAM and BALTHASAR.

Samp. My naked weapon is out: quarrel;
I will back thee. 40

Gre. How! turn thy back and run?

Samp. Fear me not.

Gre. No, marry; I fear thee!

Samp. Let us take the law of our sides;
let them begin.

Gre. I will frown as I pass by, and let them take it as they list.

Samp. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them,
if they bear it. 50

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

Samp. I do bite my thumb, sir.

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

Samp. Aside to GREGORY. Is the law of our side if I say ay?

Gre. No.

Samp. No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, sir; but I bite my thumb, sir.

Gre. Do you quarrel, sir?

Abr. Quarrel, sir! no, sir. 60

Samp. If you do, sir, I am for you: I serve as good a man as you.

Abr. No better.

Samp. Well, sir.

Enter BENVOLIO.

Gre. Aside to SAMPSON. Say 'better';
here come one of my master's kinsmen.

Samp. Yes, better, sir.

Abr. You lie.

Samp. Draw, if you be men. Gregory, remember thy swashing blow. They fight.

Ben. Part, fools! 71

Put up your swords; you know not what you do. Beats down their swords.

Enter TYBALT.

Tyb. What! art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?

Turn thee, Benvolio, look upon thy death.

Ben. I do but keep the peace: put up thy
sword,

Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What! drawn, and talk of peace; I hate the word,

As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee.

Have at thee, coward! They fight.

Enter several of both houses, who join the fray; then enter Citizens, with clubs.

First Cit. Clubs, bills, and partisans!
strike! beat them down! 80

Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!

Enter CAPULET in his gown; and Lady CAPULET.

Cap. What noise is this? Give me my long sword, ho!

Lady Cap. A crutch, a crutch! Why call you for a sword?

Cap. My sword, I say! Old Montague is
come,

And flourishes his blade in spite of me.

Enter MONTAGUE and Lady MONTAGUE.

Mon. Thou villain Capulet! Hold me not; let me go.

Lady Mon. Thou shalt not stir one foot to seek a foe.

Enter PRINCE, with his Train.

Prince. Rebellious subjects, enemies to
peace,

Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel,—
Will they not hear? What ho! you men, you beasts, 90

That quench the fire of your pernicious rage
With purple fountains issuing from your
veins,

On pain of torture, from those bloody hands Throw your mistemper'd weapons to the
ground,

And hear the sentence of your moved prince.
Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word,

By thee, old Capulet, and Montague, Have thrice disturb'd the quiet of our
streets,

And made Verona's ancient citizens
Cast by their grave beseeeming ornaments, 100

To wield old partisans, in hands as old,
Canker'd with peace, to part your canker'd
hate.

If ever you disturb our streets again
Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace.

For this time, all the rest depart away:
You, Capulet, shall go along with me;

And, Montague, come you this afternoon
To know our further pleasure in this case,

To old Free-town, our common judgment-
place. 109

Once more, on pain of death, all men depart.

*Exeunt all but MONTAGUE, Lady
MONTAGUE, and BENVOLIO.*

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroach?

Speak, nephew, were you by when it began?

Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary

And yours close fighting ere I did approach:
I drew to part them; in the instant came

The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd,
Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears,

He swung about his head, and cut the winds,
Who nothing hurt withal hiss'd him in scorn.

While we were interchanging thrusts and
blows, 120

Came more and more, and fought on part and part,

Till the prince came, who parted either part.

Lady Mon. O! where is Romeo? saw you him to-day?

Right glad I am he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an hour before the worshipp'd sun

Peer'd forth the golden window of the east,
A troubled mind drave me to walk abroad;

Where, underneath the grove of sycamore
That westward rooteth from the city's side,

So early walking did I see your son: 130 Towards him I made; but he was ware of
me,

And stole into the covert of the wood:

I, measuring his affections by my own,
That most are busied when they're most
alone,

Pursu'd my humour not pursuing his,
And gladly shunn'd who gladly fled from me.

Mon. Many a morning hath he there been seen,

With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew,

Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep
sighs:

But all so soon as the all-cheering sun <sup>140</sup>
Should in the furthest east begin to draw

The shady curtains from Aurora's bed,
Away from light steals home my heavy son,

And private in his chamber pens himself,
Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight

out,
And makes himself an artificial night.

Black and portentous must this humour
prove

Unless good counsel may the cause remove.

Ben. My noble uncle, do you know the cause?

Mon. I neither know it nor can learn of him. <sup>150</sup>

Ben. Have you importun'd him by any means?

Mon. Both by myself and many other
friends:

But he, his own affections' counsellor,
Is to himself, I will not say how true,

But to himself so secret and so close,
So far from sounding and discovery,

As is the bud bit with an envious worm,
Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air,

Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.

Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow, <sup>160</sup>

We would as willingly give cure as know.

Enter ROMEO.

Ben. See where he comes: so please you,
step aside;

I'll know his grievance, or be much denied.

Mon. I would thou wert so happy by thy
stay,

To hear true shrift. Come, madam, let's away. Exeunt MONTAGUE and Lady.

Ben. Good Morrow, cousin.

Rom. Is the day so young?

Ben. But new struck nine.

Rom. Ay me! sad hours seem long.

Was that my father that went hence so fast?

Ben. It was. What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours?

Rom. Not having that, which, having,
makes them short. <sup>170</sup>

Ben. In love?

Rom. Out—

Ben. Of love?

Rom. Out of her favour, where I am in
love.

Ben. Alas! that love, so gentle in his
view,

Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof.

Rom. Alas! that love, whose view is muffled still,

Should, without eyes, see pathways to his
will.

Where shall we dine? O me! What fray was here?

Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all. <sup>180</sup>

Here's much to do with hate, but more with
love:

Why then, O brawling love! O loving hate!
O any thing! of nothing first created.

O heavy lightness! serious vanity!
Misshapen chaos of well-seeming forms!

Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire,
sick health!

Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is!
This love feel I, that feel no love in this.

Dost thou not laugh?

Ben. No, coz, I rather weep.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good heart's oppression.

Rom. Why, such is love's transgression. <sup>191</sup>

Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate to have it press'd

With more of thine: this love that thou hast shown

Doth add more grief to too much of mine
own.

Love is a smoke made with the fume of
sighs;

Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;
Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers'

tears:
What is it else? a madness most discreet,

A choking gall, and a preserving sweet. <sup>200</sup>

Farewell, my coz.

Ben. Soft, I will go along;
An if you leave me so, you do me wrong.

Rom. Tut! I have lost myself; I am not
here;

This is not Romeo, he's some other where.

Ben. Tell me in sadness, who is that you
love.

Rom. What! shall I groan and tell thee?

Ben. Groan! why, no;
But sadly tell me who.

Rom. Bid a sick man in sadness make his will;

Ah! word ill urg'd to one that is so ill.

In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman. <sup>210</sup>

Ben. I aim'd so near when I suppos'd you lov'd.

Rom. A right good mark-man! And she's fair I love.

Ben. A right fair mark, fair coz, is soonest hit.

Rom. Well, in that hit you miss: she'll not be hit

With Cupid's arrow; she hath Dian's wit;
And, in strong proof of chastity well arm'd,

From love's weak childish bow she lives
unharm'd.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor bide the encounter of assailing eyes,

Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold: <sup>220</sup>

O! she is rich in beauty; only poor
That, when she dies, with beauty dies her store.

Ben. Then she hath sworn that she will still live chaste?

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge waste;
For beauty starv'd with her severity
Cuts beauty off from all posterity.
She is too fair, too wise, wisely too fair,
To merit bliss by making me despair:
She hath forsworn to love, and in that vow
Do I live dead that live to tell it now. 230
Ben. Be rul'd by me; forget to think of her.

Rom. O! teach me how I should forget to think.
Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eyes:
Examine other beauties.

Rom. 'T is the way
To call hers exquisite, in question more.
These happy masks that kiss fair ladies' brows
Being black put us in mind they hide the fair;
He that is stricken blind cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost:
Show me a mistress that is passing fair, 240
What doth her beauty serve but as a note
Where I may read who pass'd that passing fair?
Farewell: thou canst not teach me to forget.

Ben. I 'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street.

Enter CAPULET, PARIS, and Servant.

Cap. But Montague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike; and 't is not hard, I think,
For men so old as we to keep the peace.

Par. Of honourable reckoning are you both;
And pity 't is you liv'd at odds so long.
But now, my lord, what say you to my suit?

Cap. But saying o'er what I have said before:
My child is yet a stranger in the world,
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years;

Let two more summers wither in their pride
Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride. 11

Par. Younger than she are happy mothers made.

Cap. And too soon marr'd are those so early made.

The earth hath swallow'd all my hopes but she,

She is the hopeful lady of my earth:
But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart,

My will to her consent is but a part;
An she agree, within her scope of choice
Lies my consent and fair according voice.

This night I hold an old accustom'd feast, 20
Whereto I have invited many a guest
Such as I love; and you, among the store,
One more, most welcome, makes my number more.

At my poor house look to behold this night
Earth-treading stars that make dark heaven
light:

Such comfort as do lusty young men feel
When well-apparell'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads, even such delight

Among fresh female buds shall you this night
Inherit at my house; hear all, all see, 30
And like her most whose merit most shall be:
Which one more view, of many mine being one
May stand in number, though in reckoning none.
Come, go with me.

To Servant, giving a paper.
Go, sirrah, trudge about
Through fair Verona; find those persons out
Whose names are written there, and to them say,
My house and welcome on their pleasure stay. Exeunt CAPULET and PARIS. 37

Serv. Find them out whose names are written here! It is written that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard, and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his pencil, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find those persons whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned. In good time. 45

Enter BENVOLIO and ROMEO.
Ben. Tut! man, one fire burns out another's burning,
One pain is lessen'd by another's anguish;
Turn giddy, and be holp by backward turning;
One desperate grief cures with another's languish:
Take thou some new infection to thy eye, 50
And the rank poison of the old will die.
Rom. Your plantain leaf is excellent for that.
Ben. For what, I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken shin.
Ben. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?
Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a madman is;
Shut up in prison, kept without my food,
Whipp'd and tormented, and—Good den, good fellow.
Serv. God gi' good den. I pray, sir, can you read?
Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery. 60
Serv. Perhaps you have learned it without book: but, I pray, can you read any thing you see?
Rom. Ay, if I know the letters and the language.
Serv. Ye say honestly; rest you merry!
Rom. Stay, fellow; I can read.

Signior Martino and his wife and daughters; County Anselme and his beauteous sisters; the lady widow of Vitruvio; Signior Placentio and his lovely nieces; Mercutio and his brother Valentine; mine uncle Capulet, his wife and daughters; my fair niece Rosaline; Livia; Signior Valentio and his cousin Tybalt; Lucio and the lively Helena. 74

A fair assembly; whither should they come?

Serv. Up.Rom. Whither?Serv. To supper; to our house.Rom. Whose house?Serv. My master's.Rom. Indeed, I should have asked you that before.Serv. Now I'll tell you without asking. My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray, come and crush a cup of wine. Rest you merry!

80

Exit.Ben. At this same ancient feast of Capulet's

Supps the fair Rosaline, whom thou so lov'st, With all the admired beauties of Verona:

Go thither; and with unattainted eye 90 Compare her face with some that I shall show,

And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Rom. When the devout religion of mine eye

Maintains such falsehood, then turn tears to fires!

And these, who often drown'd could never die,

Transparent heretics, be burnt for liars! One fairer than my love! the all-seeing sun Ne'er saw her match since first the world begun.

Ben. Tut! you saw her fair, none else being by,

Herself pois'd with herself in either eye; 100 But in that crystal scales let there be weigh'd Your lady's love against some other maid That I will show you shining at this feast, And she shall scant show well that now shows best.

Rom. I'll go along, no such sight to be shown,

But to rejoice in splendor of mine own.

*Exeunt.*SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in CAPULET'S House.Enter Lady CAPULET and Nurse.Lady Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter? call her forth to me.Nurse. Now, by my maidenhead, at twelve years old,

I bade her come. What, lamb! what, ladybird!

God forbid! Where's this girl? What, Juliet!

Enter JULIET.Jul. How now! who calls?Nurse. Your mother.Jul. Madam, I am here. What is your will?Lady Cap. This is the matter. Nurse, give leave awhile,

We must talk in secret: nurse, come back again;

I have remember'd me, thou's hear our counsel.

Thou know'st my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.Lady Cap. She's not fourteen.Nurse. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth, And, yet to my teen be it spoken, I have but four,

She is not fourteen. How long is it now To Lammas-tide?

Lady Cap. A fortnight and odd days.Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year,

Come Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen.

Susan and she—God rest all Christian souls!—

Were of an age. Well, Susan is with God; She was too good for me. But, as I said, 20 On Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen;

That shall she, marry; I remember it well. 'T is since the earthquake now eleven years; And she was wean'd, I never shall forget it;

Of all the days of the year, upon that day; For I had then laid wormwood to my dug, Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall;

My lord and you were then at Mantua.

Nay, I do bear a brain:—but, as I said, When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple 30

Of my dug and felt it bitter, pretty fool!

To see it tetchy and fall out with the dug.

'Shake,' quoth the dove-house: 't was no need, I trow,

To bid me trudge:

And since that time it is eleven years;

For then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,

She could have run and waddled all about;

For even the day before she broke her brow:

And then my husband, God be with his soul!

A' was a merry man, took up the child: 40

'Yea,' quoth he, 'dost thou fall upon thy face?

Thou wilt fall backward when thou hast more wit;

Wilt thou not, Jule?' and, by my halidom,

The pretty wretch left crying, and said 'Ay.'

To see now how a jest shall come about!

I warrant, an I should live a thousand years,

I never should forget it: 'Wilt thou not,

Jule?' quoth he;

And, pretty fool, it stinted and said 'Ay.'

Lady Cap. Enough of this; I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam. Yet I cannot choose but laugh, 50

To think it should leave crying, and say

'Ay':

And yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow

A bump as big as a young cockerel's stone;

A perilous knock; and it cried bitterly:

'Yea,' quoth my husband, 'fall'st upon thy

face?

Thou wilt fall backward when thou com'st

to age;

Wilt thou not, Jule?' it stinted and said 'Ay.'

Jul. And stint thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace, I have done. God mark thee to his grace!
Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nurs'd:
An I might live to see thee married once,
I have my wish.

Lady Cap. Marry, that 'marry' is the very theme

I come to talk of. Tell me, daughter Juliet,
How stands your disposition to be married?

Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honour! were not I thine only nurse,

I would say thou had suck'd wisdom from thy teat.

Lady Cap. Well, think of marriage now; younger than you,

Here in Verona, ladies of esteem,

Are made already mothers: by my count, I was your mother much upon these years That you are now a maid. Thus then in brief,

The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man

As all the world—why, he's a man of wax.

Lady Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.

Lady Cap. What say you? can you love the gentleman?

This night you shall behold him at our feast; Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face And find delight writ there with beauty's pen;

Examine every several lineament, And see how one another lends content;

And what obscur'd in this fair volume lies Find written in the margin of his eyes.

This precious book of love, this unbound lover,

To beautify him, only lacks a cover: The fish lives in the sea, and 'tis much pride

For fair without the fair within to hide: That book in many's eyes doth share the glory,

That in gold clasps locks in the golden story: So shall you share all that he doth possess,

By having him making yourself no less.

Nurse. No less! nay, bigger; women grow by men.

Lady Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love?

Jul. I'll look to like, if looking liking move;

But no more deep will I endart mine eye Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the nurse cursed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity. I must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow straight.

Lady Cap. We follow thee. Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days.

Exeunt. 108

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Street.

Enter ROMEO, MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, with five or six Maskers, Torch-bearers, and Others.

Rom. What! shall this speech be spoke for our excuse,

Or shall we on without apology?

Ben. The date is out of such prolixity: We'll have no Cupid hoodwink'd with a scarf,

Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath, Scaring the ladies like a crow-keeper;

Nor no without-book prologue, faintly spoke After the prompter, for our entrance:

But let them measure us by what they will, We'll measure them a measure, and be gone.

Rom. Give me a torch: I am not for this ambling;

Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

Mer. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Rom. Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes

With nimble soles; I have a soul of lead So stakes me to the ground I cannot move.

Mer. You are a lover; borrow Cupid's wings,

And soar with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too sore enpierced with his shaft

To soar with his light feathers; and so bound

I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe: Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Mer. And, to sink in it, should you burden love;

Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough,

Too rude, too boisterous; and it pricks like thorn.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with love;

Prick love for pricking, and you beat love down.

Give me a case to put my visage in: Putting on a mask.

A visor for a visor! what care I What curious eye doth quote deformities?

Here are the beetle brows shall blush for me.

Ben. Come, knock and enter; and no sooner in

But every man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A torch for me: let wantons, light of heart,

Tickle the senseless rushes with their heels, For I am proverb'd with a grandsire phrase: I'll be a candle-holder, and look on.

The game was ne'er so fair, and I am done.

Mer. Tut! dun's the mouse, the constable's own word:

If thou art Dun, we'll draw thee from the mire,

Or—save your reverence—love, wherein thou stick'st
Up to the ears. Come, we burn daylight,
ho!

Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mer. I mean, sir, in delay
We waste our lights in vain, like lamps by
day.

Take our good meaning, for our judgment sits

Five times in that ere once in our five wits.

Rom. And we mean well in going to this mask;

But 't is no wit to go.

Mer. Why, may one ask?

Rom. I dream'd a dream to-night.

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well, what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.

Rom. In bed asleep, while they do dream things true. 52

Mer. O! then I see Queen Mab hath been with you.

She is the fairies' midwife, and she comes
In shape no bigger than an agate-stone

On the forefinger of an alderman,

Drawn with a team of little atomies

Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep:

Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners'
legs;

The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers; 60

The traces, of the smallest spider's web;

The collars, of the moonshine's watery
beams;

Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film;

Her wagoner, a small grey-coated gnat,

Not half so big as a round little worm

Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid;

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,

Made by the joiner squirrel or old grub,

Time out o' mind the fairies' coach-makers.

And in this state she gallops night by night

Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love; 71

O'er courtiers' knees, that dream on court-
sies straight;

O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream
on fees;

O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream;

Which oft the angry Mab with blisters
plagues,

Because their breaths with sweetmeats
tainted are.

Sometime she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit;

And sometime comes she with a tithe-pig's tail,

Tickling a parson's nose as a' lies asleep, 70

Then dreams he of another benefice;

Sometime she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then dreams he of cutting foreign

throats,
Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep; and then

Drums in his ear, at which he starts and wakes;

And, being thus frightened, swears a prayer
or two,

And sleeps again. This is that very Mab

That plats the manes of horses in the night;
And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish

hairs, 80
Which once entangled much misfortune
bodes;

This is the hag, when maids lie on their backs,

That presses them and learns them first to
bear,

Making them women of good carriage;
This is she—

Rom. Peace, peace! Mercutio, peace!
Thou talk'st of nothing.

Mer. True, I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,

Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substances as the air,

And more inconstant than the wind, who woos 100

Even now the frozen bosom of the north,
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,

Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.

Ben. This wind you talk of blows us
from ourselves;

Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

Rom. I fear, too early; for my mind
misgives

Some consequence yet hanging in the stars
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date

With this night's revels, and expire the term

Of a despised life clos'd in my breast 110
By some vile forfeit of untimely death.

But he, that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my sail! On, lusty gentlemen.

Ben. Strike, drum. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—*The Same. A hall in CAPULET'S
House.*

Musicians waiting. Enter Servingmen.

First Serv. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away? He shift a trencher!

he scrape a trencher!

Second Serv. When good manners shal lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too, 't is a foul thing.

First Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate. Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane; and, as thou lovest me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone and Nell.

Antony! and Potpan! 11

Second Serv. Ay, boy; ready.

First Serv. You are looked for and called for, asked for and sought for, in the great chamber.

Third Serv. We cannot be here and there too. Cheerly, boys; be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all. They retire behind.

Enter CAPULET, with JULIET and others of his house, meeting the Guests and Masks.

Cap. Welcome, gentlemen! ladies that have their toes

Unplagu'd with corns will have a bout with you.

Ah ha! my mistresses, which of you all 20
Will now deny to dance? she that makes dainty, she,

I'll swear, hath corns; am I come near ye now?

Welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day
That I have worn a visor, and could tell
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear
Such as would please; 't is gone, 't is gone, 't is gone.

You are welcome, gentlemen! Come, musicians, play.

A hall! a hall! give room, and foot it, girls.
Music plays, and they dance.

More light, you knaves! and turn the tables up,

And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot. 30

Ah! sirrah, this unlook'd for sport comes well.

Nay, sit, nay, sit, good cousin Capulet,
For you and I are past our dancing days;
How long is 't now since last yourself and I
Were in a mask?

Second Cap. By 'r Lady, thirty years.

Cap. What! man; 't is not so much, 't is not so much:

'T is since the nuptial of Lucentio,
Come Pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five-and-twenty years; and then we mask'd.

Second Cap. 'T is more, 't is more: his son is elder, sir; 40

His son is thirty.

Cap. Will you tell me that?

His son was but a ward two years ago.

Rom. What lady's that which doth enrich the hand
Of yonder knight?

Serv. I know not, sir.

Rom. O! she doth teach the torches to burn bright.

It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night
Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear;

Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows,

As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. 51
The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand,

And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand.

Did my heart love till now! forswear it, sight!

For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague.

Fetch me my rapier, boy. What! dares the slave

Come hither, cover'd with an antick face,
To fleer and scorn at our solemnity?

Now, by the stock and honour of my kin, 60
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

Cap. Why, how now, kinsman! wherefore storm you so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe;
A villain that is hither come in spite,

To scorn at our solemnity this night.

Cap. Young Romeo is it?

Tyb. 'T is he, that villain Romeo.

Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone:

He bears him like a portly gentleman;
And, to say truth, Verona brags of him

To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth. 70
I would not for the wealth of all the town

Here in my house do him disparagement;
Therefore be patient, take no note of him:

It is my will; the which if thou respect,
Show a fair presence and put off these frowns,

An ill-beseeming semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest:

I'll not endure him.

Cap. He shall be endur'd:

What! Goodman boy; I say he shall, go to;

Am I the master here, or you? go to. 80
You'll not endure him! God shall mend my soul!

You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock-a-hoop! you'll be the man!

Tyb. Why, uncle, 't is a shame.

Cap. Go to, go to;

You are a saucy boy.—Is 't so, indeed?—
This trick may chance to scathe you—I know what.

You must contrary me! marry, 't is time.

Well said, my hearts! You are a princ Cox; 90

Be quiet, or—More light, more light!—For shame!

I'll make you quiet. What! cheerly, my hearts! 90

Tyb. Patience perforce with wilful choler meeting Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.

I will withdraw: but this intrusion shall
Now seeming sweet convert to bitter gall. Exit.

Rom. To JULIET. If I profane with my unwortheist hand

This holy shrine, the gentle fine is this;
My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand

To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.

Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much,

Which mannerly devotion shows in this;
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands

do touch. 101
And palm to palm is holy palmers' kiss.

Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmers too?

Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.

Rom. O! then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do;

They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to despair.

Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prayers' sake.

Rom. Then move not, while my prayer's effect I take.

Thus from my lips, by thine, my sin is purg'd. Kissing her.

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took. 110

Rom. Sin from my lips? O trespass sweetly urg'd!

Give me my sin again.

Jul. You kiss by the book.

Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word with you.

Rom. What is her mother?

Nurse. Marry, bachelor,

Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous;

I nurs'd her daughter that you talk'd withal;
I tell you he that can lay hold of her
Shall have the chinks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?
O dear account! my life is my foe's debt. 120

Ben. Away, be gone; the sport is at the best.

Rom. Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;

We have a trifling foolish banquet towards.
Is it e'en so? Why then, I thank you all;
I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night.
More torches here! Come on then, let's to bed.

Ah! sirrah, by my fay, it waxes late;
I'll to my rest.

Exeunt all but JULIET and Nurse.

Jul. Come hither, nurse. What is yond gentleman? 150

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.
Jul. What's he that now is going out of door?

Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petruchio.

Jul. What's he that follows there, that would not dance?

Nurse. I know not,

Jul. Go, ask his name.—If he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding bed.

Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague;

The only son of your great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate! 140

Too early seen unknown, and known too late!

Prodigious birth of love it is to me,

That I must love a loathed enemy.

Nurse. What's this? what's this?

Jul. A rime I learn'd even now
Of one I danc'd withal.

Nurse. One calls within, 'JULIET.'
Anon, anon!

Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone.
Exeunt.

PROLOGUE.

Enter CHORUS.

*Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affection gapes to be his heir;
That fair for which love groan'd for and would die,*

With tender Juliet match'd, is now no fair.

*Now Romeo is belov'd and loves again,
Alike bewitched by the charm of looks,
But to his foe suppos'd he must complain,
And she steal love's sweet bait from fearful hooks:*

*Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear; 10*

And she as much in love, her means much less

*To meet her new-beloved any where:
But passion lends them power, time means, to meet,*

Tempering extremities with extreme sweet.
Exit.

ACT II

SCENE I.—Verona. A Lane by the wall of CAPULET'S Orchard.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Can I go forward when my heart is here?
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.

He climbs the wall, and leaps down within it.

Enter BENVOLIO and MERCUTIO.

Ben. Romeo! my cousin Romeo!

Mer. He is wise; And, on my life, hath stol'n him home to bed.

Ben. He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard wall:

Call, good Mercutio.

Mer. Nay, I'll conjure too.
Romeo! humours! madman! passion! lover!

Appear thou in the likeness of a sigh;
Speak but one rime and I am satisfied;

Cry but 'Ay me!' pronounce but 'love' and 'dove';

Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nickname for her purblind son and heir,

Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim
When King Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid.

He heareth not, he stirreth not, he moveth not;

The ape is dead, and I must conjure him.
I conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,

By her high forehead, and her scarlet lip,
By her fine foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh,

And the demesnes that there adjacent lie, 20
That in thy likeness thou appear to us.

Ben. An if he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him: 't would anger him

To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle
Of some strange nature, letting it there stand

Till she had laid it, and conjur'd it down;
That were some spite: my invocation

Is fair and honest, and in his mistress' name

I conjure only but to raise up him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himself among these trees,
To be consorted with the humorous night:
Blind is his love and best befits the dark.

Mer. If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.

Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit

As maids call medlars, when they laugh alone.

O Romeo! that she were, O! that she were
An open et cetera, thou a poperin pear.
Romeo, good night: I'll to my truckie-bed;
This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep; 40
Come, shall we go?

Ben. Go, then; for 't is in vain
To seek him here that means not to be found.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. CAPULET'S Orchard.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. He jests at scars that never felt a wound.

JULIET appears above at a window.
But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks?

It is the east, and Juliet is the sun!
Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,
Who is already sick and pale with grief,
That thou her maid art far more fair than she:

Be not her maid, since she is envious;
Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it; cast it off.
It is my lady; O! it is my love: 10
O! that she knew she were.

She speaks, yet she says nothing: what of that?

Her eye discourses; I will answer it.
I am too bold, 't is not to me she speaks:
Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,
Having some business, do entreat her eyes
To twinkle in their spheres till they return.
What if her eyes were there, they in her head?

The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars

As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven
Would through the airy region stream so bright

That birds would sing and think it were not night.

See! how she leans her cheek upon her hand:

O! that I were a glove upon that hand
That I might touch that cheek.

Jul. Ay me!
Rom. She speaks;

O! speak again, bright angel; for thou art
As glorious to this night, being o'er my head,

As is a winged messenger of heaven
Unto the white-upturned wond'ring eyes
Of mortals, that fall back to gaze on him 30
When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air.

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo! wherefore art thou Romeo?

Deny thy father, and refuse thy name;
Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Aside. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?

Jul. 'T is but thy name that is my enemy;
Thou art thyself, though not a Montague.

What's Montague? it is nor hand, nor foot,
Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part, 41
Belonging to a man. O! be some other name:

What's in a name? that which we call a rose
By any other name would smell as sweet;

So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,
Retain that dear perfection which he owes Without that title. Romeo, doff thy name;

And for thy name, which is no part of thee,
Take all myself.

Rom. I take thee at thy word.
Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd; 50
Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that thus bescreen'd in night

So stumblest on my counsel?

Rom. By a name
I know not how to tell thee who I am:

My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,
Because it is an enemy to thee:

Had I it written, I would tear the word.

Jul. My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words

Of that tongue's utterance, yet I know the sound:

Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague? 60

Rom. Neither, fair maid, if either thee dislike.

Jul. How cam'st thou hither, tell me, and wherefore?

The orchard walls are high and hard to climb;

And the place death, considering who thou art,

If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

Rom. With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold love out,
And what love can do that dares love attempt;

Therefore thy kinsmen are no stop to me.

Jul. If they do see thee they will murder thee.

Rom. Alack! there lies more peril in thine eye

Than twenty of their swords: look thou but sweet,

And I am proof against their enmity.

Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee here.

Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from their eyes;

And but thou love me, let them find me here:

My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love.

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

Rom. By love, that first did prompt me to inquire;
He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.
I am no pilot; yet, wert thou as far
As that vast shore wash'd with the furthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandise.

Jul. Thou know'st the mask of night is on my face,
Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek
For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.

Fain would I dwell on form, fain, fain deny
What I have spoke: but farewell compliment!

Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say
'Ay,'

And I will take thy word; yet, if thou swear'st,
Thou may'st prove false; at lovers' perjuries,

They say, Jove laughs. O gentle Romeo!
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverse and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo; but else, not for the world.
In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond,
And therefore thou may'st think my haviour light:

But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange.

I should have been more strange, I must confess,
But that thou overheard'st, ere I was ware,
My true love's passion: therefore pardon me,

And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops—

Jul. O! swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,

That monthly changes in her circled orb, 110
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by?

Jul. Do not swear at all;
Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love—

Jul. Well, do not swear. Although I joy in thee,

I have no joy of this contract to-night:
It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say it lightens. Sweet, good night! 120

This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,

May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.

Good night! good night! as sweet repose and rest

Come to thy heart as that within my breast!

Rom. O! wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?

Rom. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine.

Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst request it;

And yet I would it were to give again.

Rom. Would'st thou withdraw it? for what purpose, love? 130

Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again.

And yet I wish but for the thing I have:

My bounty is as boundless as the sea,

My love as deep; the more I give to thee,

The more I have, for both are infinite.

Nurse calls within.

I hear some noise within; dear love, adieu!

Anon, good nurse! Sweet Montague, be true.

Stay but a little, I will come again.

Exit above.

Rom. O blessed, blessed night! I am afeard,

Being in night, all this is but a dream, 140

Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter JULIET, above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night indeed.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,

Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,

By one that I'll procure to come to thee,

Where, and what time, thou wilt perform the rite;

And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,

And follow thee my lord throughout the world.

Nurse. Within. Madam!

Jul. I come, anon.—But if thou mean'st not well, 150

I do beseech thee—

Nurse. Within. Madam!

Jul. By and by; I come:—

To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief:

To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soul,—

Jul. A thousand times good night!

Exit above.

Rom. A thousand times the worse, to want thy light.

Love goes toward love as school-boys from their books;

But love from love toward school with heavy looks. Retiring.

Re-enter JULIET, above.

Jul. Hist! Romeo, hist! O! for a falconer's voice,

To lure this tassel-gentle back again. 160

Bondage is hoarse, and may not speak aloud,

Else would I tear the cave where Echo lies,

And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine,

With repetition of my Romeo's name.

Rom. It is my soul that calls upon my name:

How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,

Like softest music to attending ears!

Jul. Romeo!

Rom. My dear!

Jul. At what o'clock to-morrow Shall I send to thee?

Rom. At the hour of nine.

Jul. I will not fail; 't is twenty years till then. 170

I have forgot why I did call thee back.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.

Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,

Remembering how I love thy company.

Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,

Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'T is almost morning; I would have thee gone;

And yet no further than a wanton's bird, Who lets it hop a little from her hand,

Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyves, 180

And with a silk thread plucks it back again, So loving-jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet, so would I:

Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing. Good night, good night! parting is such sweet sorrow

That I shall say good night till it be morrow. Exit.

Rom. Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!

Would I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest!

Hence will I to my ghostly father's cell, His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. 190

Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. Friar LAURENCE'S Cell.

Enter Friar LAURENCE, with a basket.

Fri. The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night,

Chequering the eastern clouds with streaks of light,

And flecked darkness like a drunkard reels From forth day's path and Titan's fiery wheels:

Now, ere the sun advance his burning eye The day to cheer and night's dank dew to dry,

I must up-fill this osier cage of ours With baleful weeds and precious-juiced flowers.

The earth that's nature's mother is her tomb;

What is her burying grave that is her womb, 200

And from her womb children of divers kind We sucking on her natural bosom find,

Many for many virtues excellent, None but for some, and yet all different.

O! mickle is the powerful grace that lies

In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities:

For nought so vile that on the earth doth live But to the earth some special good doth give,

Nor aught so good but strain'd from that fair use

Revolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse; 20

Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied, And vice sometime's by action dignified.

Within the infant rind of this weak flower Poison hath residence and medicine power:

For this, being smelt, with that part cheers each part;

Being tasted, slays all senses with the heart. Two such opposed kings encamp them still

In man as well as herbs, grace and rude will; And where the worser is predominant,

Full soon the canker death eats up that plant. 30

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Good morrow, father!

Fri. Benedicite!

What early tongue so sweet saluteth me? Young son, it argues a distemper'd head

So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed: Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,

And where care lodges, sleep will never lie; But where unbruised youth with unstuff'd brain

Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign:

Therefore thy earliness doth me assure Thou art up-rous'd by some distempera- 40

ture;

Or if not so, then here I hit it right, Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

Rom. That last is true; the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. God pardon sin! wast thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father? no;

I have forgot that name, and that name's woe.

Fri. That's my good son; but where hast thou been, then?

Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.

I have been feasting with mine enemy, Where on a sudden one hath wounded me, 50

That's by me wounded: both our remedies Within thy help and holy physic lies:

I bear no hatred, blessed man; for, lo! My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;

Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift. Rom. Then plainly know my heart's dear love is set

On the fair daughter of rich Capulet; As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine;

And all combin'd, save what thou must combine 60

By holy marriage: when and where and how

We met, we woo'd and made exchange of vow.

I'll tell thee as we pass; but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us to-day.

Fri. Holy Saint Francis! what a change is
here;

Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken? young men's love then
lies

Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Jesu Maria! what a deal of brine <sup>69</sup>

Hath wash'd thy fallow cheeks for Rosaline;
How much salt water thrown away in waste,
To season love, that of it doth not taste!

The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears;
Lo! here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet.

If e'er thou wast thyself and these woes
thine,

Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline;
And art thou chang'd? pronounce this sentence then:

Women may fall, when there's no strength in men. <sup>80</sup>

Rom. Thou chidd'st me oft for loving Rosaline.

Fri. For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.

Rom. And bad'st me bury love.

Fri. Not in a grave,
To lay one in, another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee, chide not; she whom I love now

Doth grace for grace and love for love allow;
The other did not so.

Fri. O! she knew well
Thy love did read by rote and could not spell.

But come, young waverer, come, go with me,
In one respect I'll thy assistant be; <sup>80</sup>

For this alliance may so happy prove,
To turn your households' rancour to pure
love.

Rom. O! let us hence; I stand on sudden haste.

Fri. Wisely and slow; they stumble that run fast. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Street.

Enter BENVOLIO and MERCUTIO.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo
be?

Came he not home to-night?

Ben. Not to his father's; I spoke with his man.

Mer. Why, that same pale hard-hearted
wench, that Rosaline,

Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman to old Capulet,
Hath sent a letter to his father's house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life,

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man that can write may answer
a letter. <sup>10</sup>

Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter's master, how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas! poor Romeo, he is already dead; stabbed with a white wench's black eye; shot through the ear with a love-song;
the very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft; and is he a man to encounter Tybalt? <sup>17</sup>

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?

Mer. More than prince of cats, I can tell you. O! he is the courageous captain of compliments. He fights as you sing pricksong, keeps time, distance, and proportion;
rests me his minim rest, one, two, and the third in your bosom; the very butcher of a silk button, a duellist, a duellist; a gentleman of the very first house, of the first and second cause. Ah! the immortal passado!
the punto reverso! the hay!

Ben. The what? <sup>28</sup>

Mer. The pox of such antick, lisping, affecting fantasticsoes, these new tuners of accents! 'By Jesu, a very good blade! a very tall man! a very good whore!' Why, is not this a lamentable thing, grandsire, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashion-mongers, these pardonnez-mois, who stand so much on the new form that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench? O! their bons, their bons. <sup>37</sup>

Enter ROMEO.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes
Romeo.

Mer. Without his roe, like a dried herring. O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified!
Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in; Laura to his lady was a kitchen-wench; marry, she had a better love to be-rime her; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gypsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots; Thisbe a grey eye or so, but not to the purpose. Signior Romeo, bon jour!
there's a French salutation to your French slop. You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night.

Rom. Good morrow to you both. What counterfeit did I give you? <sup>50</sup>

Mer. The slip, sir, the slip; can you not conceive?

Rom. Pardon, good Mercutio, my business was great; and in such a case as mine
a man may strain courtesy.

Mer. That's as much as to say, such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams. <sup>60</sup>

Rom. Meaning, to court'sy.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pink of courtesy.

Rom. Pink for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why, then is my pump well flowered.

Mer. Well said; follow me this jest now till thou hast worn out thy pump, that when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain after the wearing sole singular.

Rom. O single-soled jest! solely singular for the singleness. <sup>70</sup>

Mer. Come between us, good Benvolio;
my wit faints.

Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I'll cry a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the wild-geese chase, I am done, for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits than, I am sure, I have in my whole five. Was I with you there for the goose? 80

Rom. Thou wast never with me for any thing when thou wast not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting; it is a most sharp sauce.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose?

Mer. O! here's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word 'broad'; which added to the goose proves thee far and wide a broad goose. 91

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature: for this drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole. 97

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me to stop in my tale against the hair.

Ben. Thou would'st else have made thy tale large.

Mer. O! thou art deceived; I would have made it short; for I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant indeed to occupy the argument no longer. 106

Rom. Here's goodly gear!

Enter Nurse and PETER.

Mer. A sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two; a shirt and a smock.

Nurse. Peter! 110

Peter. Anon!

Nurse. My fan, Peter.

Mer. Good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer of the two.

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good den, fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Mer. 'Tis no less, I tell you; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you! 120

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made for himself to mar.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said; 'for himself to mar,' quoth a? Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him than he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well. 130

Mer. Yea! is the worst well? very well took, i' faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence with you.

Ben. She will indite him to some supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So ho!

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hare, sir; unless a hare, sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent. 140

An old hare hoar, and an old hare hoar.

Is very good meat in Lent:

But a hare that is hoar, is too much for a score,

When it hoars ere it be spent.

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell, ancient lady; farewell. 150

Lady, lady, lady.

Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO.

Nurse. Marry, farewell! I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropery?

Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk, and will speak more in a minute than he will stand to in a month. 157

Nurse. An a' speak any thing against me, I'll take him down, an a' were lustier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirt-gills; I am none of his skeins-mates. To PETER. And thou must stand by too, and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure? 164

Peter. I saw no man use you at his pleasure; if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you. I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side. 169

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. Scurvy knave! Pray you, sir, a word; and as I told you, my young lady bade me inquire you out; what she bid me say I will keep to myself; but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her into a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say: for the gentlewoman is younger; and therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very weak dealing. 181

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress. I protest unto thee,—

Nurse. Good heart! and, i' faith, I will tell her as much. Lord, Lord! she will be a joyful woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, sir, that you do protest; which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Bid her devise 191
Some means to come to shrift this afternoon;

And there she shall at Friar Laurence' cell
Be shriv'd and married. Here is for thy pains.

Nurse. No, truly, sir; not a penny.

Rom. Go to; I say you shall.

Nurse. This afternoon, sir? well, she shall be there.

Rom. And stay, good nurse; behind the abbey-wall

Within this hour my man shall be with thee,
And bring thee cords made like a tackled stair;

Which to the high top-gallant of my joy
Must be my convoy in the secret night.
Farewell! Be trusty, and I'll quit thy pains.
Farewell! Commend me to thy mistress.

Nurse. Now God in heaven bless thee!
Hark you, sir.

Rom. What say'st thou, my dear nurse?

Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you ne'er hear say,

Two may keep counsel, putting one away?

Rom. I warrant thee my man's as true as steel.

Nurse. Well, sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady—Lord, Lord! when 't was a little prating thing,—O! there's a nobleman in town, one Paris, that would fain lay knife aboard; but she, good soul, had as lief see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes and tell her that Paris is the properer man; but, I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any clout in the versal world. Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. Ay, nurse; what of that? both with an R.

Nurse. Ah! mocker; that's the dog's name. R is for the—No; I know it begins with some other letter; and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.

Rom. Commend me to thy lady.

Nurse. Ay, a thousand times. Exit

ROMEO. Peter!

Peter. Anon!

Nurse. Before, and apace. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. CAPULET'S Orchard.

Enter JULIET.

Jul. The clock struck nine when I did send the nurse;

In half an hour she promis'd to return.
Perchance she cannot meet him: that's not so.

O! she is lame: love's heralds should be thoughts,

Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams

Driving back shadows over lowering hills:
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw Love,

And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Now is the sun upon the highmost hill
Of this day's journey, and from nine till twelve

Is three long hours, yet she is not come.
Had she affections, and warm youthful blood,

She'd be as swift in motion as a ball;

My words would bandy her to my sweet love,

And his to me:

But old folks many feign as they were dead;
Unwieldy, slow, heavy and pale as lead.

Enter Nurse and PETER.

O God! she comes. O honey nurse! what news?

Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away.

Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate.

Exit PETER.

Jul. Now, good sweet nurse; O Lord! why look'st thou sad?

Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily;
If good, thou sham'st the music of sweet news

By playing it to me with so sour a face.

Nurse. I am aweary, give me leave awhile:

Fie, how my bones ache! What a jaunt have I had!

Jul. I would thou hadst my bones, and I thy news.

Nay, come, I pray thee, speak; good, good nurse, speak.

Nurse. Jesu! what haste; can you not stay awhile?

Do you not see that I am out of breath?

Jul. How art thou out of breath when thou hast breath

To say to me that thou art out of breath?
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay

Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy news good, or bad? answer to that;

Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance:
Let me be satisfied, is 't good or bad?

Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man:

Romeo! no, not he; though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg excels all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body, though they be not to be talked on, yet they are past compare. He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Go thy ways, wench; serve God. What! have you dined at home?

Jul. No, no: but all this did I know before. What says he of our marriage? what of that?

Nurse. Lord! how my head aches; what a head have I!

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces.

My back o' t' other side; O! my back, my back.

Beshrew your heart for sending me about,
To catch my death with jaunting up and down.

Jul. I faith, I am sorry that thou art not well.

Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?

Nurse. Your love says, like an honest gentleman, and a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome, and, I warrant, a virtuous,—

Where is your mother?

Jul. Where is my mother? why, she is within;
Where should she be? How oddly thou reli-piest:

'Your love says, like an honest gentleman,
Where is your mother?'
Nurse. O! God's lady dear.

Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow;
Is this the poultrice for my aching bones?
Henceforward do your messages yourself.

Jul. Here's such a coil! come, what says Romeo?

Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shrift
to-day?

Jul. I have.
Nurse. Then hie you hence to Friar Laurence' cell; 70

There stays a husband to make you a wife;
Now comes the wanton blood up in your
cheeks,

They'll be in scarlet straight at any news.
Hie you to church; I must another way,
To fetch a ladder, by the which your love Must climb a bird's nest soon when it is dark;

I am the drudge and toil in your delight,
But you shall bear the burden soon at night.
Go; I'll to dinner: hie you to the cell.

Jul. Hie to high fortune! Honest nurse,
farewell. Exeunt. 80

SCENE VI.—The Same. Friar LAURENCE'S
Cell.

Enter Friar LAURENCE and Romeo.

Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act,

That after hours with sorrow chide us not!
Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can,

It cannot countervail the exchange of joy
That one short minute gives me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then love-devouring death do what he dare;
It is enough I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights have violent
ends,

And in their triumph die, like fire and powder, 13

Which as they kiss consume: the sweetest honey

Is loathsome in his own deliciousness
And in the taste confounds the appetite:
Therefore love moderately; long love doth

so;
Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

Enter JULIET.

Here comes the lady: O! so light a foot
Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:
A lover may bestride the gossamer

That idles in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity. 20

Jul. Good even to my ghostly confessor.
Fri. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter,
for us both.

Jul. As much to him, else is his thanks
too much.

Rom. Ah! Juliet, if the measure of thy joy

Be heap'd like mine, and that thy skill be
more

To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbour air, and let rich music's
tongue

Unfold the imagin'd happiness that ooth
Receive in either by this dear encounter.

Jul. Conceit, more rich in matter than in
words, 30

Braggs of his substance, not of ornament:
They are but beggars that can count their
worth;

But my true love is grown to such excess
I cannot sum up half my sum of wealth.

Fri. Come, come with me, and we will make short work;

For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone
Till holy church incorporate two in one.

Exeunt.

ACT III

SCENE I.—Verona. A public Place.

Enter MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire:

The day is hot, the Capulets abroad,
And, if we meet, we shall not 'scape a brawl;

For now, these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

Mer. Thou art like one of those fellows that when he enters the confines of a tavern claps me his sword upon the table and says,
'God send me no need of thee!' and by the operation of the second cup draws it on the drawer, when indeed there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow? 11

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack in thy mood as any in Italy, and as soon moved to be moody, and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to? 15

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more or a hair less in his beard than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes. What eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels as an egg is full of meat, and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg for quarrelling. Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old riband? and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling! 33

Ben. An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee-simple! O simple!

Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Enter TYBALT and Others.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them. Gentlemen, good den! a word with one of you. 41

Mer. And but one word with one of us? Couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You shall find me apt enough to that, sir, an you will give me occasion.

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consort'st with Romeo,—

Mer. Consort! what! dost thou make us minstrels? an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddle-stick; here's that shall make you dance. Zounds! consort! 52

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men:

Either withdraw unto some private place,
Or reason coldly of your grievances,
Or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us.

Mer. Men's eyes were made to look, and let them gaze;

I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter ROMEO.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir. Here comes my man.

Mer. But I'll be hang'd, sir, if I wear your livery: 60

Marry, go before to field, he'll be your follower;

Your worship in that sense may call him 'man.'

Tyb. Romeo, the love I bear thee can afford

No better term than this,—thou art a villain.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee

Doth much excuse the appertaining rage

To such a greeting; villain am I none,
Therefore farewell; I see thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries

That thou hast done me; therefore turn and draw. 70

Rom. I do protest, I never injur'd thee
But love thee better than thou canst devise,
Till thou shalt know the reason of my love:
And so, good Capulet, which name I tender
As dearly as mine own, be satisfied.

Mer. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission!

Alla stoccata carries it away. Draws.
Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk? 78

Tyb. What would'st thou have with me?

Mer. Good king of cats, nothing but one of your nine lives, that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-beat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pilcher by the ears? make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you.

Drawing.

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Mer. Come, sir, your passado. They fight.

Rom. Draw, Benvolio; beat down their weapons.

Gentlemen, for shame, forbear this outrage! 80

Tybalt, Mercutio, the prince expressly hath Forbidden bandying in Verona streets.

Hold, Tybalt! good, Mercutio!

Exeunt TYBALT and his Partisans.

Mer.

I am hurt.

A plague o' both the houses! I am sped.

Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben.

What! art thou hurt?

Mer. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry, 't is enough. 96

Where is my page? Go, villain, fetch a surgeon. Exit Page.

Rom. Courage, man; the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No, 't is not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door; but 't is enough, 't will serve; ask for me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am peppered, I warrant, for this world. A plague o' both your houses! Zounds! a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a braggart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic! Why the devil came you between us? I was hurt under your arm. 108

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Help me into some house, Benvolio,

Or I shall faint. A plague o' both your houses!

They have made worms' meat of me: I have it,

And soundly too: your houses!

Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO.

Rom. This gentleman, the prince's near ally,

My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt

In my behalf; my reputation stain'd

With Tybalt's slander, Tybalt, that an hour

Hath been my cousin. O sweet Juliet!

Thy beauty hath made me effeminate,

And in my temper soften'd valour's steel. 120

Re-enter BENVOLIO.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo! brave Mercutio's dead;

That gallant spirit hath aspir'd the clouds,
Which too untimely here did scorn the earth.

Rom. This day's black fate on more days doth depend;

This but begins the woe others must end.

Re-enter TYBALT.

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive! in triumph! and Mercutio slain!

Away to heaven, respective lenity,

And fire-eyed fury be my conduct now!

Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again 130

That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul

Is but a little way above our heads,
Staying for thine to keep him company:
Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This shall determine that,
They fight; TYBALT falls.

Ben. Romeo, away! be gone!
The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain.
Stand not amaz'd: the prince will doom thee death <sup>139</sup>

If thou art taken: hence! be gone! away!
Rom. O! I am fortune's fool.

Ben. Why dost thou stay?
Exit ROMEO.

Enter Citizens, etc.

First Cit. Which way ran he that kill'd Mercutio?

Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?
Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

First Cit. Up, sir; go with me;
I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter PRINCE, attended; MONTAGUE, CAPULET, their Wives, and Others.

Prince. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

Ben. O noble prince! I can discover all
The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl;
There lies the man, slain by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio. <sup>150</sup>

Lady Cap. Tybalt, my cousin! O my brother's child!

O prince! O cousin! husband! O! the blood is spill'd

Of my dear kinsman. Prince, as thou art true,

For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague.
O cousin, cousin!

Prince. Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?

Beh. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay:

Romeo, that spoke him fair, bade him be-
think

How nice the quarrel was, and urg'd withal
Your high displeasure: all this uttered <sup>160</sup>
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bow'd,

Could not take truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt deaf to peace, but that he tilts
With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's
breast,

Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point,
And, with a martial scorn, with one hand beats

Cold death aside, and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity

Retorts it: Romeo he cries aloud,
'Hold, friends! friends, part!' and, swifter than his tongue, <sup>170</sup>

His agile arm beats down their fatal points,
And 'twixt them rushes; underneath whose

arm
An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life

Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled;
But by and by comes back to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertain'd revenge,
And to 't they go like lightning, for, ere I Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt
slain,

And as he fell, did Romeo turn and fly.
This is the truth or let Benvolio die. <sup>180</sup>

Lady Cap. He is a kinsman to the Montague;

Affection makes him false, he speaks not
true:

Some twenty of them fought in this black
strife,

And all those twenty could but kill one life.
I beg for justice, which thou, prince, must
give:

Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.
Prince. Romeo slew him, he slew Mer-cutio;

Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe?

Mon. Not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio's friend;

His fault concludes but what the law should
end, <sup>190</sup>

The life of Tybalt.

Prince. And for that offence
Immediately we do exile him hence:

I have an interest in your hate's proceeding,
My blood for your rude brawls doth lie
a-bleeding;

But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine
That you shall all repent the loss of mine.
I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;

Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses;

Therefore use none; let Romeo hence in haste, <sup>199</sup>

Else, when he's found, that hour is his last.
Bear hence this body and attend our will:

Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. CAPULET'S Orchard.

Enter JULIET.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
Towards Phoebus' lodging; such a waggoner

As Phaethon would whip you to the west,
And bring in cloudy night immediately.

Spread thy close curtain, love-performing
night!

That runaway's eyes may wink, and Romeo
Leap to these arms, untalk'd of and unseen!

Lovers can see to do their amorous rites
By their own beauties; or, if love be blind,

It best agrees with night. Come, civil night, <sup>10</sup>

Thou sober-suited matron, all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,

Play'd for a pair of stainless maidenhoods:
Hood my unmann'd blood, bating in my
cheeks,

With thy black mantle; till strange love,
grown bold,

Think true love acted simple modesty.
Come, night! come, Romeo! come, thou day in night!

For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow on a raven's back.
Come, gentle night; come, loving, blackbrow'd night, 20
Give me my Romeo; and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun.
O! I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it, and though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd. So tedious is this day
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child that hath new robes 30
And may not wear them. O! here comes my nurse.

Enter Nurse, with cords.

And she brings news; and every tongue
that speaks
But Romeo's name speaks heavenly eloquence.

Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there? the cords
That Romeo bid thee fetch?

Nurse. Ay, ay, the cords.
Throws them down.

Jul. Ay me! what news? why dost thou wring thy hands?

Nurse. Ah! well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's dead!

We are undone, lady, we are undone!
Alack the day! he's gone, he's kill'd, he's
dead!

Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nurse. Romeo can,
Though heaven cannot. O! Romeo, Romeo; 41

Who ever would have thought it? Romeo!

Jul. What devil art thou that dost torment me thus?

This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell.
Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but 'I,'
And that bare vowel 'I' shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice:
I am not I, if there be such an I;
Or those eyes shut that makes thee answer
'I.'

If he be slain say 'I'; or if not, no: 50
Brief sounds determine of my weal or woe.

Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,
God save the mark! here on his manly
breast:

A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood,
All in gore blood; I swoonded at the sight.

Jul. O! break, my heart; poor bankrupt, break at once!

To prison, eyes; ne'er look on liberty!
Vile earth, to earth resign; end motion
here; 59

And thou and Romeo press one heavy bier!
Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt! the best friend
I had:

O courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman!
That ever I should live to see thee dead!

Jul. What storm is this that blows so contrary?

Is Romeo slaughter'd, and is Tybalt dead?
My dearest cousin, and my dearer lord?
Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general
doom!

For who is living if those two are gone?

Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banished;

Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banished. 70

Jul. O God! did Romeo's hand shed
Tybalt's blood?

Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day! it did.

Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a flowering
face!

Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?

Beautiful tyrant! fiend angelical!

Dove-feather'd raven! wolfish-ravens-lamb!

Despised substance of divinest show!

Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st;

A damned saint, an honourable villain!

O nature! what hadst thou to do in hell 80

When thou didst bower the spirit of a fiend

In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?

Was ever book containing such vile matter

So fairly bound? O! that deceit should dwell

In such a gorgeous palace.

Nurse. There's no trust,

No faith, no honesty in men; all perjur'd,

All forsworn, all naught, all dissemblers.

Ah! where's my man? give me some aqua

vitæ:

These griefs, these woes, these sorrows

make me old.

Shame come to Romeo!

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue

For such a wish! he was not born to shame:

Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit; 92

For 't is a throne where honour may be
crown'd

Sole monarch of the universal earth.

O! what a beast was I to chide at him.

Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your cousin?

Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?

Ah! poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth
thy name,

When I, thy three-hours' wife, have mangled it?

But, wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my cousin? 100

That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband:

Back, foolish tears, back to your native
spring;

Your tributary drops belong to woe,

Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.

My husband lives, that Tybalt would have
slain;

And Tybalt's dead, that would have slain
my husband:

All this is comfort; wherefore weep I then?

Some word there was, worse than Tybalt's
death,

That murder'd me: I would forget it fain;

But, O! it presses to my memory. 110

Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds.

'Tybalt is dead, and Romeo banished!'

That 'banished,' that one word 'banished,' Hath slain ten thousand Tybalts. Tybalt's
death

Was woe enough, if it had ended there:
Or, if sour woe delights in fellowship,
And needly will be rank'd with other griefs,
Why follow'd not, when she said 'Tybalt's
death,'

Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both,
Which modern lamentation might have
mov'd?

But with a rearward following Tybalt's
death,

'Romeo is banished!' to speak that word,
Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,
All slain, all dead: 'Romeo is banished!'
There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,
In that word's death; no words can that woe sound.

Where is my father and my mother, nurse?
Nurse. Weeping and wailing over Tybalt's corse:

Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.
Jul. Wash they his wounds with tears:
mine shall be spent.

When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banish-
ment.

Take up those cords. Poor ropes, you are beguil'd,

Both you and I, for Romeo is exil'd:
He made you for a highway to my bed,
But I, a maid, die maiden-widowed.
Come, cords; come, nurse; I'll to my wedding-bed;

And death, not Romeo, take my maiden-
head!

Nurse. Hie to your chamber; I'll find
Romeo

To comfort you: I wot well where he is.
Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night:
I'll to him; he is hid at Laurence' cell.

Jul. O! find him; give this ring to my true knight,
And bid him come to take his last farewell.
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Friar LAURENCE'S
Cell.

Enter Friar LAURENCE.

Fri. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful man:

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's doom?

What sorrow craves acquaintance at my
hand,

That I yet know not?

Fri. Too familiar
Is my dear son with such sour company:
I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom.

Rom. What less than doomsday is the prince's doom?

Fri. A gentler judgment vanish'd from his lips,

Not body's death, but body's banishment.

Rom. Ha! banishment! be merciful, say
'death';

For exile hath more terror in his look,
Much more than death: do not say 'banish-
ment.'

Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banished.

Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walls,

But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
Hence banished is banish'd from the world,
And the world's exile is death; then 'ban-
ished'

Is death mis-term'd. Calling death 'banished,'

Thou cutt'st my head off with a golden axe,
And smil'st upon the stroke that murders
me.

Fri. O deadly sin! O rude unthankful-
ness!

Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind
prince,

Taking thy part, hath rush'd aside the
law,

And turn'd that black word death to banish-
ment:

This is dear mercy, and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'T is torture, and not mercy:
heaven is here,

Where Juliet lives; and every cat and dog
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,

Live here in heaven and may look on her;
But Romeo may not: more validity,
More honourable state, more courtship lives
In carrion flies than Romeo: they may seize

On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand,
And steal immortal blessing from her lips,

Who, even in pure and vestal modesty,
Still blush, as thinking their own kisses sin;
But Romeo may not; he is banished.

Flies may do this, but I from this must fly:
They are free men, but I am banished.

And say'st thou yet that exile is not death?
Hadst thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-
ground knife,

No sudden mean of death, though ne'er so mean,

But 'banished' to kill me? 'Banished'!
O friar! the damned use that word in hell;

Howlings attend it: how hast thou the
heart,

Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profess'd, 50
To mangle me with that word 'banished'?

Fri. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word.

Rom. O! thou wilt speak again of banish-
ment.

Fri. I'll give thee armour to keep off that
word;

Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy,
To comfort thee, though thou art banished.

Rom. Yet 'banished'! Hang up philosophy!

Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,

It helps not, it prevails not: talk no more. 60

Fri. O! then I see that madmen have no ears.

Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.

Rom. Thou canst not speak of that thou dost not feel.

Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,
An hour but married, Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me banished,
Then might'st thou speak, then might'st
thou tear thy hair,
And fall upon the ground, as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave. 70

Knocking within.

Fri. Arise; one knocks: good Romeo, hide thyself.

Rom. Not I; unless the breath of heart-sick groans,

Mist-like, infold me from the search of eyes.

Knocking.

Fri. Hark! how they knock. Who's there? Romeo, arise;

Thou wilt be taken. Stay awhile! Stand up;

Knocking.

Run to my study. By and by! God's will!
What simpleness is this! I come, I come!

Knocking.

Who knocks so hard? whence come you?
what's your will?

Nurse. Within. Let me come in, and you shall know my errand:

I come from Lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome then. 80

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O holy friar! O! tell me, holy friar,

Where is my lady's lord? where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

Nurse. O! he is even in my mistress' case,

Just in her case. O woeful sympathy!
Piteous predicament! Even so lies she,

Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubbering.

Stand up, stand up: stand, an you be a man:
For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand;

Why should you fall into so deep an O? 80

Rom. Nurse!
Nurse. Ah sir! ah sir! Well, death's the end of all.

Rom. Spak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?

Doth she not think me an old murderer,
Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy

With blood remov'd but little from her own?
Where is she? and how doth she? and what says

My conceal'd lady to our cancell'd love?

Nurse. O! she says nothing, sir, but weeps and weeps;

And now falls on her bed; and then starts up,

And Tybalt calls, and then on Romeo cries,
And then down falls again. 103

Rom. As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand

Murder'd her kinsman.. O! tell me, friar, tell me,

In what vile part of this anatomy
Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack

The hateful mansion. Drawing his sword.

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy form cries out thou art:

Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote 110

The unreasonable fury of a beast:
Unseemly woman in a seeming man;

And ill-beseeming beast in seeming both!
Thou hast amaz'd me: by my holy order,

I thought thy disposition better temper'd.
Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself?

And slay thy lady that in thy life lives,
By doing damned hate upon thyself?

Why rail'st thou on thy birth, the heaven,
and earth?

Since birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do meet 120

In thee at once, which thou at once would'st lose.

Fie, fie! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love,
thy wit;

Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all,
And uses none in that true use indeed

Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love,
thy wit.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the valour of a man;

Thy dear love sworn, but hollow perjury,
Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish;

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love, 130
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skillless soldier's flask,

Is set a-fire by thine own ignorance,
And thou dismember'd with thine own defence.

What! rouse thee, man; thy Juliet is alive,
For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead;

There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee,

But thou slew'st Tybalt; there art thou happy too:

The law that threaten'd death becomes thy friend,

And turns it to exile; there art thou happy: 140

A pack of blessings light upon thy back;
Happiness courts thee in her best array;

But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
Thou pou'st upon thy fortune and thy love.

Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.

Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed,
Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her;

But look thou stay not till the watch be set,

For then thou canst not pass to Mantua;

Where thou shalt live, till we can find a
time 150
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your
friends,
Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back
With twenty hundred thousand times more
joy
Than thou went'st forth in lamentation.
Go before, nurse: commend me to thy lady;
And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto:
Romeo is coming.

Nurse. O Lord! I could have stay'd here
all the night
To hear good counsel: O! what learning
is. 160

My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.
Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.

Nurse. Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir.
Hie you, make haste, for it grows very late.

Exit.
Rom. How well my comfort is reviv'd by
this!

Fri. Go hence. Good night; and here stands all your state:
Either be gone before the watch be set,
Or by the break of day disguis'd from hence:
Sojourn in Mantua: I'll find out your man,
And he shall signify from time to time 170
Every good hap to you that chances here.
Give me thy hand; 't is late: farewell;
good night.

Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out
on me,
It were a grief, so brief to part with thee:
Farewell. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Room in CAPULET'S House.

Enter CAPULET, Lady CAPULET, and PARIS.

Cap. Things have fall'n out, sir, so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our
daughter:
Look you, she lov'd her kinsman Tybalt
dearly,
And so did I: well, we were born to die.
'T is very late, she'll not come down to-
night:

I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been a-bed an hour ago.

Par. These times of woe afford no time to woo.
Madam, good night: commend me to your
daughter.

Lady Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow; 10
To-night she's mew'd up to her heaviness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate
tender

Of my child's love: I think she will be rul'd
In all respects by me; nay, more, I doubt
it not.

Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Ascend her here of my son Paris' love,

And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday
next—

But, soft! what day is this?
Par. Monday, my lord.
Cap. Monday! ha, ha! Well, Wednesday is too soon;

O' Thursday let it be: o' Thursday, tell
her, 20

She shall be married to this noble earl.
Will you be ready? do you like this haste?
We'll keep no great ado; a friend or two;
For, hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much.
Therefore we'll have some half a dozen

friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to-morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone: o' Thursday be it then. 30

Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day.
Farewell, my lord. Light to my chamber,
ho!

Afore me! it is so very very late,
That we may call it early by and by.
Good night. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. JULIET'S Chamber.

Enter ROMEO and JULIET.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near
day:

It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierc'd the fearful hollow of thine ear:
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate tree:
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.

Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious
streaks

Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east:
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund
day

Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops: 10
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

Jul. Yon light is not daylight, I know it, I:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet; thou need'st not to be
gone.

Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to
death;

I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I'll say yon grey is not the morning's eye,
'T is but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow; 20
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads:
I have more care to stay than will to go:
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it
so.

How is 't, my soul? let's talk; it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is; hie hence, be gone, away!
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing
sharps.

Some say the lark makes sweet division;
This doth not so, for she divideth us: 30
Some say the lark and loathed toad change
eyes;

O! now I now they had chang'd voices too,
Since arm from arm that voice doth us
affray,
Hunting thee hence with hunt's-up to the
day.

O! now be gone; more light and light it grows.

Rom. More light and light; more dark and dark our woes.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Madam!

Jul. Nurse!

Nurse. Your lady mother is coming to your chamber:

The day is broke; be wary, look about. 40

Exit.

Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.

Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll descend. Descends.

Jul. Art thou gone so? my lord, my love, my friend!

I must hear from thee every day in the hour,
For in a minute there are many days:

O! by this count I shall be much in years
Ere I again behold my Romeo.

Rom. Farewell!

I will omit no opportunity

That may convey my greetings, love, to
thee. 50

Jul. O! think'st thou we shall ever meet
again?

Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall serve

For sweet discourses in our time to come.

Jul. O God! I have an ill-divining soul:
Methinks I see thee, now thou art so low,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st
pale.

Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you:

Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu!
adieu! Exit.

Jul. O fortune, fortune! all men call thee fickle: 60

If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him
That is renown'd for faith? Be fickle,
fortune;

For then, I hope, thou wilt not keep him long,
But send him back.

Lady Cap. Within. Ho, daughter! are you up?

Jul. Who is't that calls? is it my lady
mother?

Is she not down so late, or up so early?
What unaccustom'd cause procures her
hither?

Enter Lady CAPULET.

Lady Cap. Why, how now, Juliet!

Jul. Madam, I am not well.

Lady Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's death? 70

What! wilt thou wash him from his grave
with tears?

An if thou could'st, thou could'st not make him live;

Therefore, have done: some grief shows
much of love;

But much of grief shows still some want of wit.

Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling
loss.

Lady Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the friend

Which you weep for.

Jul. Feeling so the loss,

I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.

Lady Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death

As that the villain lives which slaughter'd
him. 80

Jul. What villain, madam?

Lady Cap. That same villain, Romeo.

Jul. Aside. Villain and he be many miles
asunder.

God pardon him! I do, with all my heart;
And yet no man like he doth grieve my
heart.

Lady Cap. That is because the traitor murderer lives.

Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands.

Would none but I might venge my cousin's
death!

Lady Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not:

Then weep no more. I'll send to one in Mantua,

Where that same banish'd runagate doth
live, 90

Shall give him such an unaccustom'd
dram

That he shall soon keep Tybalt company:

And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.

Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—

Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vex'd;
Madam, if you could find out but a man

To bear a poison, I would temper it,
That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,
Soon sleep in quiet. O! how my heart abhors 100

To hear him nam'd, and cannot come to
him,

To wreak the love I bore my cousin Tybalt
Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him.

Lady Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such a man.

But now, I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girl.

Jul. And joy comes well in such a needy
time.

What are they, I beseech your ladyship?

Lady Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father, child;

One who, to put thee from thy heaviness,
Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy, 110

That thou expect'st not, nor I look'd not for.

Jul. Madam, in happy time, what day is
that?

Lady Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday morn,

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The County Paris, at Saint Peter's church,
Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.

Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's church, and Peter too,

He shall not make me there a joyful bride.
I wonder at this haste; that I must wed Ere he that should be husband comes to
woo. 120

I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam,
I will not marry yet; and, when I do, I
swear

It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate,
Rather than Paris. These are news indeed!

Lady Cap. Here comes your father; tell him so yourself.

And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter CAPULET and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew;

But for the sunset of my brother's son
It rains downright.

How now! a conduit, girl? what! still in
tears? 130

Evermore showering? In one little body
Thou counterfeit'st a bark, a sea, a wind;
For still thy eyes, which I may call the sea,
Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,

Sailing in this salt flood; the winds, thy
sighs;

Who, raging with thy tears, and they with
them,

Without a sudden calm, will overset
Thy tempest-tossed body. How now, wife!

Have you deliver'd to her our decree?

Lady Cap. Ay, sir; but she will none, she gives you thanks. 140

I would the fool were married to her grave!
Cap. Soft! take me with you, take me with you, wife.

How! will she none? doth she not give us
thanks?

Is she not proud? doth she not count her
bless'd,

Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought
So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?

Jul. Not proud, you have; but thankful, that you have:

Proud can I never be of what I hate;
But thankful even for hate, that is meant
love.

Cap. How now! how now, chop-logic!
What is this? 150

'Proud,' and 'I thank you,' and 'I thank you
not';

And yet 'not proud'; mistress minion, you,
Thank me no thankings, nor proud me no
prouds,

But fettle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday
next,

To go with Paris to Saint Peter's church,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.

Out, you green-sickness carrion! out, you baggage!

You tallow-face!

Lady Cap. Fie, fie! what! are you mad?

Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,

Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch! 161

I tell thee what: get thee to church o'
Thursday,

Or never after look me in the face.
Speak not, reply not, do not answer me;

My fingers itch—Wife, we scarce thought us
bless'd

That God had lent us but this only child;
But now I see this one is one too much,

And that we have a curse in having her.
Out on her, hiding!

Nurse. God in heaven bless her!
You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.

Cap. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue. 171

Good prudence; smatter with your gossips;
go.

Nurse. I speak no treason.
Cap. O! God ye good den.

Nurse. May not one speak?
Cap. Peace, you mumbling fool!

Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,
For here we need it not.

Lady Cap. You are too hot.
Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad.

Day, night, hour, tide, time, work, play,
Alone, in company, still my care hath been
To have her match'd; and having now provided 180

A gentleman of noble parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly
train'd,

Stuff'd, as they say, with honourable parts,
Proportion'd as one's thoughts would wish
a man;

And then to have a wretched puling fool,
A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,

To answer 'I'll not wed,' 'I cannot love,'
'I am too young,' 'I pray you, pardon me.'

But, an you will not wed, I'll pardon you!
Graze where you will, you shall not house
with me: 190

Look to 't, think on 't, I do not use to jest.
Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise.

An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
An you be not, hang, beg, starve, die in the
streets,

For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good.

Trust to 't, bethink you; I'll not be for-sworn. Exit.

Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,
That sees into the bottom of my grief?

O! sweet my mother, cast me not away: 200
Delay this marriage for a month, a week;

Or, if you do not, make the bridal bed
In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

Lady Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word.

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.
Exit.

Jul. O God! O nurse! how shall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;
How shall that faith return again to earth,

Unless that husband send it me from heaven
By leaving earth? comfort me, counsel me.
Alack, alack! that heaven should practise stratagems 211
Upon so soft a subject as myself!
What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?

Some comfort, Nurse.

Nurse. Faith, here 't is. Romeo
Is banished; and all the world to nothing,
That he dares ne'er come back to challenge
you;

Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then, since the case so stands as now it
doth,

I think it best you married with the county.
O! he's a lovely gentleman; 220
Romeo's a dishclout to him: an eagle,
madam,

Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye
As Paris hath. Beshrew my very heart,
I think you are happy in this second match,
For it excels your first: or if it did not,
Your first is dead; or 't were as good he
were,

As living here and you no use of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?
Nurse. And from my soul too;
Or else beshrew them both.

Jul. Amen!

Nurse. What?
Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much. 230

Go in; and tell my lady I am gone,
Having displeas'd my father, to Laurence's
cell,

To make confession and to be absolv'd.

Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely done. Exit.

Jul. Ancient damnation! O most wicked fiend!

Is it more sin to wish me thus forsworn,
Or to dispraise my lord with that same
tongue

Which she hath prais'd him with above compare

So many thousand times? Go, counsellor;
Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be
twain. 240

I'll to the friar, to know his remedy:
If all else fail, myself have power to die.

Exit.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—Verona. Friar LAURENCE'S Cell.

Enter Friar LAURENCE and PARIS.

Fri. On Thursday, sir? the time is very short.

Par. My father Capulet will have it so;
And I am nothing slow to slack his haste.

Fri. You say you do not know the lady's
mind:

Uneven is the course, I like it not.

Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's
death,

And therefore have I little talk'd of love;
For Venus smiles not in a house of tears.
Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous

That she doth give her sorrow so much sway,
And in his wisdom hastes our marriage 11
To stop the inundation of her tears;
Which, too much minded by herself alone,
May be put from her by society.

Now do you know the reason of this haste.
Fri. Aside. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter JULIET.

Par. Happily met, my lady and my wife!

Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a
wife.

Par. That may be must be, love, on Thursday next. 20

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. That's a certain text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father?

Jul. To answer that, I should confess to
you.

Par. Do not deny to him that you love me.

Jul. I will confess to you that I love him.

Par. So will ye, I am sure, that you love me.

Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price,

Being spoke behind your back, than to your
face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abus'd
with tears.

Jul. The tears have got small victory by
that; 30

For it was bad enough before their spite.

Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears,
with that report.

Jul. That is no slander, sir, which is a
truth;

And what I spake, I spake it to my face.

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd it.

Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?

Fri. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now.

My lord, we must entreat the time alone. 40

Par. God shield I should disturb devotion!

Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse you:
Till then, adieu; and keep this holy kiss.

Exit.

Jul. O! shut the door; and when thou hast done so,

Come weep with me; past hope, past cure,
past help!

Fri. Ah! Juliet, I already know thy grief;
It strains me past the compass of my wits:
I hear thou must, and nothing may proroque
it.

On Thursday next be married to this county.

Jul. Tell me not, friar, that thou hear'st of this, 50

Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it;
If in thy wisdom thou canst give no help,

Do thou but call my resolution wise,
And with this knife I'll help it presently.

God join'd my heart and Romeo's, thou our
hands;

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both.
Therefore, out of thy long-experienc'd
time, 60

Give me some present counsel; or, behold,
'Twixt my extremes and me this bloody
knife

Shall play the umpire, arbitrating that Which the commission of thy years and
art

Could to no issue of true honour bring.
Be not so long to speak; I long to die,
If what thou speak'st speak not of remedy.

Fri. Hold, daughter; I do spy a kind of hope, -

Which craves as desperate an execution
As that is desperate which we would prevent.
If, rather than to marry County Paris, 71
Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself,

Then is it likely thou wilt undertake
A thing like death to chide away this shame,
That cop'st with death himself to 'scape
from it;

And, if thou dar'st, I'll give thee remedy.

Jul. O! bid me leap, rather than marry
Paris,

From off the battlements of yonder tower;
Or walk in thievish ways; or bid me lurk
Where serpents are; chain me with roaring bears; 80

Or shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
O'er-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling
bones,

With reeky shanks, and yellow chapless
skulls;

Or bid me go into a new-made grave
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud;
Things that, to hear them told, have made me tremble;

And I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unstain'd wife to my sweet love.

Fri. Hold, then; go home, be merry,
give consent 89

To marry Paris: Wednesday is to-morrow;
To-morrow night look that thou lie alone,
Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber:

Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off;
When presently through all thy veins shall
run

A cold and drowsy humour, for no pulse
Shall keep his native progress, but surcease;
No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou
livest;

The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade
To pale ashes; thy eyes' windows fall, 110
Like death, when he shuts up the day of
life;

Each part, depriv'd of supple government,
Shall, stiff and stark and cold, appear like
death;

And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk
death

Thou shalt continue two-and-forty hours,
And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.

Now, when the bridegroom in the morning
comes

To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou
dead:

Then, as the manner of our country is,
In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier, 110
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault

Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.
In the mean time, against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift,
And hither shall he come; and he and I
Will watch thy waking, and that very night
Shall Romeo bear thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present
shame;

If no unconstant toy, nor womanish fear,
Abate thy valour in the acting it. 120

Jul. Give me, give me! O! tell not me of fear.

Fri. Hold; get you gone: be strong and prosperous

In this resolve. I'll send a friar with speed
To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.

Jul. Love help me strength! and strength shall help afford.

Farewell, dear father. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—*The Same. Hall in CAPULET'S
House.*

Enter CAPULET, Lady CAPULET, Nurse, and Servingmen.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ. Exit Servant.

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.
Second Serv. You shall have none ill, sir;
for I'll try if they can lick their fingers

Cap. How canst thou try them so?

Second Serv. Marry, sir, 't is an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore he that cannot lick his fingers goes not with
me.

Cap. Go, be gone. Exit Second Servant.
We shall be much unfurnish'd for this
time. 10

What! is my daughter gone to Friar Laurence?

Nurse. Ay, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on her;
A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.

Enter JULIET.

Nurse. See where she comes from shrift with merry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?

Jul. Where I have learn'd me to repent
the sin

Of disobedient opposition
To you and your behests; and am enjoin'd

By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here, 20
And beg your pardon. Pardon, I beseech
you!

Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you,
Cap. Send for the county; go tell him of
this:

I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence's cell;
And gave him what becomed love I might,
Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on 't; this is well:
stand up:

This is as 't should be. Let me see the county;

Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither. 30
Now, afore God! this reverend holy friar,
All our whole city is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,

To help me sort such needful ornaments
As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

Lady Cap. No, not till Thursday; there is time enough.

Cap. Go, nurse, go with her. We'll to church to-morrow.

Exeunt JULIET and Nurse.
Lady Cap. We shall be short in our provision:

'T is now near night.

Cap. Tush! I will stir about,
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, 40
wife.

Go thou to Juliet, help to deck up her;
I'll not to bed to-night; let me alone;
I'll play the housewife for this once. What, ho!

They are all forth: well, I will walk myself
To County Paris, to prepare him up Against to-morrow. My heart is wondrous
light,

Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd.
Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. JULIET'S Chamber.

Enter JULIET and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best; but, gentle nurse,
I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night;
For I have need of many orisons
To move the heavens to smile upon my state,
Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter Lady CAPULET.

Lady Cap. What! are you busy, ho? need you my help?

Jul. No, madam; we have cull'd such necessities

As are behoveful for our state to-morrow:
So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the nurse this night sit up with you;
For I am sure you have your hands full all 11
in this so sudden business.

Lady Cap. Good-night:
Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need.

Exeunt Lady CAPULET and Nurse.
Jul. Farewell! God knows when we shall meet again.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,

That almost freezes up the heat of life:
I'll call them back again to comfort me:

Nurse? What should she do here?
My dismal scene I needs must act alone.
Come, vial. 20
What if this mixture do not work at all?
Shall I be married then to-morrow morning?
No, no; this shall forbid it: lie thou there.

Laying down a dagger.
What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subtly hath minister'd to have me dead,
Lest in this marriage he should be dishonour'd

Because he married me before to Romeo?
I fear it is; and yet, methinks, it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man.

How, if, when I am laid into the tomb, 30
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeem me? there's a fearful point!

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes?

Or, if I live, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where, for this many hundred years, the 40
bones

Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd;
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies fest'ring in his shroud; where, as they say,

At some hours in the night spirits resort:
Alack, alack! is it not like that I,
So early waking, what with loathsome smells,

And shrieks like mandrakes' torn out of the earth,

That living mortals, hearing them, run mad:
O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Environed with all these hideous fears, 50
And madly play with my forefathers' joints,
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?

And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?

O! look, methinks I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body
Upon a rapier's point. Stay, Tybalt, stay!
Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee.

She falls upon her bed within the curtains.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Hall in CAPULET'S House.

Enter Lady CAPULET and Nurse.

Lady Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.

Enter CAPULET.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd,
The curfew bell hath rung, 't is three o'clock:

Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica:
Spare not for cost.

Nurse. Go, you cot-quean, go.
Get you to bed; faith, you'll be sick tomorrow
For this night's watching.

Cap. No, not a whit: what! I have watch'd ere now
All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick. 10

Lady Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt in your time;
But I will watch you from such watching
now.

Exeunt Lady CAPULET and Nurse.
Cap. A jealous-hood, a jealous-hood!

Enter three or four Servingmen, with spits, logs, and baskets.

Now, fellow,

What's there!
First Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what.

Cap. Make haste, make haste.
Exit First Servant.
Sirrah, fetch drier logs;

Call Peter, he will show thee where they
are.

Second Serv. I have a head, sir, that will find out logs,

And never trouble Peter for the matter.

Cap. Mass, and well said; a merry
whoreson, ah!
Thou shalt be logger-head. Good faith!
't is day: 20

The county will be here with music straight,
For so he said he would. Music within.

I hear him near.
Nurse! Wife! What, ho! What, nurse, I say!

Re-enter Nurse.

Go waken Juliet, go, and trim her up;
I'll go and chat with Paris. Hie, make
haste,

Make haste; the bridegroom he is come
already:

Make haste, I say,

SCENE V.—The Same. JULIET'S Chamber.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress! what, mistress! Juliet!
fast, I warrant her, she:

Why, lamb! why, lady! fie, you slug-a-bed!
Why, love, I say! madam! sweet-heart!
why, bride!

What! not a word? you take your penny-
worths now:

Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant,

The County Paris hath set up his rest,
That you shall rest but little. God forgive
me,

Marry, and amen, how sound is she asleep!
I must needs wake her. Madam, madam,
madam!

Ay, let the county take you in your bed; 10
He'll fright you up, i' faith. Will it not be?

What, dress'd! and in your clothes! and down again!

I must needs wake you. Lady! lady! lady!
Alas! alas! Help! help! my lady's dead!
O! well-a-day, that ever I was born.
Some aqua vitæ, ho! My lord, my lady!

Enter Lady CAPULET.

Lady Cap. What noise is here?

Nurse. O lamentable day!

Lady Cap. What is the matter?

Nurse. Look, look! O heavy day!

Lady Cap. O me! O me! my child! my only life,

Revive, look up, or I will die with thee! 20
Help! help! Call help.

Enter CAPULET.

Cap. For shame! bring Juliet forth; her lord is come.

Nurse. She's dead, deceas'd, she's dead; alack the day!

Lady Cap. Alack the day! she's dead,
she's dead, she's dead.

Cap. Ha! let me see her. Out, alas!
she's cold;

Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff;
Life and these lips have long been separated:
Death lies on her like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.

Nurse. O lamentable day!

Lady Cap. O woeful time!

Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail, 31

Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

Enter Friar LAURENCE and PARIS, with Musicians.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?

Cap. Ready to go, but never to return.
O son! the night before thy wedding-day Hath death lain with thy wife. There she lies,

Flower as she was, deflowered by him.
Death is my son-in-law, Death is my heir;

My daughter he hath wedded: I will die,
And leave him all; life, living, all is Death's!

Par. Have I thought long to see this morning's face, 41

And doth it give me such a sight as this?

Lady Cap. Accurs'd, unhappy, wretched, hateful day!

Most miserable hour that e'er time saw
In lasting labour of his pilgrimage!

But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,

And cruel Death hath catch'd it from my sight!

Nurse. O woe! O woeful, woeful, woeful
day!

Most lamentable day, most woeful day, 50
That ever, ever, I did yet behold!

O day! O day! O day! O hateful day!
Never was seen so black a day as this:

O woeful day, O woeful day!
Par. Beguil'd, divorced, wronged, spited,
slain!

Most detestable Death, by thee beguil'd,

By cruel cruel thee quite overthrown!
O love! O life! not life, but love in death!
Cap. Despis'd, distressed, hated, marty'd,
kill'd!

Uncomfortable time, why cam'st thou now 60
To murder, murder our solemnity?
O child! O child! my soul, and not my child!
Dead art thou! alack! my child is dead;
And with my child my joys are buried.

Fri. Peace, ho! for shame! confusion's cure lives not
In these confusions. Heaven and yourself
Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all.

And all the better is it for the maid:
Your part in her you could not keep from
death,

But heaven keeps his part in eternal life. 70
The most you sought was her promotion,
For 't was your heaven she should be advanc'd;

And weep we now, seeing she is advanc'd
Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself?
O! in this love, you love your child so ill,
That you run mad, seeing that she is well:
She's not well married that lives married
long;

But she's best married that dies married
young.

Dry up your tears, and stick your rosemary
On this fair corse; and, as the custom is, 80
In all her best array bear her to church;
For though fond nature bids us all lament,
Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

Cap. All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral;
Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad burial feast,
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change,
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse,
And all things change them to the contrary.

Fri. Sir, go you in; and, madam, go with
him; 91

And go, Sir Paris; every one prepare
To follow this fair corse unto her grave.
The heavens do lower upon you for some ill;
Move them no more by crossing their high will. Exeunt CAPULET, Lady CAPULET,
PARIS, and Friar.

First Mus. Faith, we may put up our pipes, and be gone.

Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah! put up,
put up;

For, well you know, this is a pitiful case. Exit.

First Mus. Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended. 101

Enter PETER.

Peter. Musicians, O! musicians; 'Heart's ease, Heart's ease': O! an you will have me live, play 'Heart's ease.'

First Mus. Why 'Heart's ease'?

Peter. O! musicians, because my heart itself plays 'My heart is full of woe.' O! play me some merry dump, to comfort
me.

First Mus. Not a dump we; 't is no time to play now. 110

Peter. You will not then?

First Mus. No.

Peter. I will then give it you soundly.

First Mus. What will you give us?

Peter. No money, on my faith! but the gleek; I will give you the minstrel.

First Mus. Then will I give you the serving-creature.

Peter. Then will I lay the serving-creature's dagger on your pate. I will carry no crotchets: I 'll re you, I 'll fa you. Do you note me? 121

First Mus. An you re us and fa us, you note us.

Second Mus. Pray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.

Peter. Then have at you with my wit! I will dry-beat you with an iron wit, and put up my iron dagger. Answer me like men: 127

*When gripping grief the heart doth wound,
And doleful dumps the mind oppress,
Then music with her silver sound—*

why 'silver sound'? why 'music with her silver sound'? What say you, Simon Cat-
ling?

First Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

Peter. Pretty! What say you, Hugh Re-
beck?

Second Mus. I say 'silver sound,' because musicians sound for silver.

Peter. Pretty too! What say you, James Soundpost? 129

Third Mus. Faith, I know not what to say.

Peter. O! I cry you mercy; you are the singer; I will say for you. It is 'music with her silver sound,' because musicians have no gold for sounding:

*Then music with her silver sound
With speedy help doth lend redress.*

Exit.

First Mus. What a pestilent knave is this same!

Second Mus. Hang him, Jack! Come, we 'll in here; tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner. Exeunt.

ACT V

SCENE I.—Mantua. A Street.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering truth of
sleep,

My dreams presage some joyful news at
hand:

My bosom's lord sits lightly in his throne;
And all this day an unaccustom'd spirit
Lifts me above the ground with cheerful
thoughts.

I dreamt my lady came and found me dead;
Strange dream, that gives a dead man leave to think!

And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,
That I reviv'd, and was an emperor.

Ah me! how sweet is love itself possess'd, 10
When but love's shadows are so rich in joy!

Enter BALTHASAR, booted.

News from Verona! How now, Balthasar!
Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar?

How doth my lady? Is my father well?
How fares my Juliet? that I ask again;
For nothing can be ill if she be well.

Bal. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill.

Her body sleeps in Capel's monument,
And her immortal part with angels lives.
I saw her laid low in her kindred's vault, 20
And presently took post to tell it you.

O! pardon me for bringing these ill news,
Since you did leave it for my office, sir.

Rom. Is it e'en so? then I deny you, stars!
Thou know'st my lodging: get me ink and
paper,

And hire post-horses; I will hence to-night.

Bal. I do beseech you, sir, have patience:
Your looks are pale and wild, and do import
Some misadventure.

Rom. Tush! thou art deceiv'd;
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do. 30
Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

Bal. No, my good lord.

Rom. No matter; get thee gone,
And hire those horses: I'll be with thee straight. Exit BALTHASAR.

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee to-night.
Let's see for means: O mischief! thou art swift

To enter in the thoughts of desperate men.
I do remember an apothecary,

And hereabouts he dwells, which late I noted

In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples; meagre were his looks, 40
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones:
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty
seeds,

Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses,

Were thinly scatter'd to make up a show.
Noting this penury, to myself I said

An if a man did need a poison now, 50
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a caitiff wretch would sell it him.

O! this same thought did but forerun my
need,

And this same needy man must sell it me.
As I remember, this should be the house:

Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut.
What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?
Rom. Come hither, man. I see that thou art poor;

Hold, there is forty ducats; let me have
A dram of poison, such soon-speeding gear 60

As will disperse itself through all the veins
That the life-weary talker may fall dead,

And that the trunk may be discharg'd of
breath.

As violently as hasty powder fir'd
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law

Is death to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,

And fear'st to die? famine is in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starveth in thine
eyes, 70

Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back;
The world is not thy friend nor the world's
law:

The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then be not poor, but break it, and take
this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.
Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will,
And drink it off; and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you
straight.

Rom. There is thy gold, worse poison to men's souls, 80
Doing more murders in this loathsome
world

Than these poor compounds that thou
may'st not sell:

I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none.
Farewell: buy food, and get thyself in flesh.

Come, cordial and not poison, go with me
To Juliet's grave, for there must I use thee.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Verona. Friar LAURENCE'S Cell.

Enter Friar JOHN.

Fri. John. Holy Franciscan friar! brother!
ho!

Enter Friar LAURENCE.

Fri. Lau. This same should be the voice of Friar John.

Welcome from Mantua: what says Romeo?
Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.

Fri. John. Going to find a bare-foot brother out,

One of our order, to associate me,
Here in this city visiting the sick,

And finding him, the searchers of the town,
Suspecting that we both were in a house

Where the infectious pestilence did reign, 10
Seal'd up the doors, and would not let us
forth;

So that my speed to Mantua there was stay'd.

Fri. Lau. Who bare my letter then to Romeo?

Fri. John. I could not send it, here it is
again,

Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

Fri. Lau. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,

The letter was not nice, but full of charge
Of dear import; and the neglecting it

May do much danger. Friar John, go
hence;
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

Fri. John. Brother, I'll go and bring it thee. Exit.

Fri. Lau. Now must I to the monument
alone;

Within this three hours will fair Juliet wake;
She will beshrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents;
But I will write again to Mantua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come:
Poor living cerse, clos'd in a dead man's tomb! Exit. 30

SCENE III.—The Same. A Churchyard; in it a tomb belonging to the CAPULETS.

Enter PARIS, and his Page bearing flowers and a torch.

Par. Give me that torch, boy: hence, and stand aloof;

Yet put it out, for I would not be seen.
Under yond yew-trees lay thee all along,
Holding thine ear close to the hollow ground:
So shall no foot upon the churchyard tread,
Being loose, unfirm with digging up of graves.

But thou shalt hear it: whistle then to me,
As signal that thou hear'st something approach.

Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee;
go.

Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone 10
Here in the churchyard; yet I will adventure.
Retires.

Par. Sweet flower, with flowers thy bridal bed I strew,

O woe! thy canopy is dust and stones;
Which with sweet water nightly I will dew,
Or, wanting that, with tears distill'd by moans:

The obsequies that I for thee will keep Nightly shall be to strew thy grave and weep.

The Page whistles.
The boy gives warning something doth
approach.

What cursed foot wanders this way to-night,
To cross my obsequies and true love's rite? 20
What! with a torch? muffle me, night, awhile. Retires.

Enter ROMEO and BALTHASAR, with a torch, mattock, etc.

Rom. Give me that mattock and the wrenching iron.

Hold, take this letter; early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.

Give me the light: upon thy life I charge
thee,

Whate'er thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloof,

And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death

Is partly to behold my lady's face,
But chiefly to take thence from her dead
finger 30

A precious ring, a ring that I must use

In dear employment: therefore hence, be
gone:

But if thou, jealous, dost return to pry
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heaven, I will tear thee joint by joint,
And strew this hungry churchyard with thy
limbs.

The time and my intents are savage-wild,
More fierce and more inexorable far
Than empty tigers or the roaring sea.

Bal. I will be gone, sir, and not trouble
you. 40

Rom. So shalt thou show me friendship.
Take thou that:

Live, and be prosperous; and farewell,
good fellow.

Bal. Aside. For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout:

His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt.
Retires.

Rom. Thou detestable maw, thou womb
of death,

Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open,

Opens the tomb.
And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!

Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,

That murder'd my love's cousin, with which
grief 50

It is supposed the fair creature died;
And here is come to do some villanous
shame

To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.
Comes forward.

Stop thy unhallow'd toil, vile Montague,
Can vengeance be pursu'd further than

death?

Condemned villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

Rom. I must indeed; and therefore came
I hither.

Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate
man;

Fly hence and leave me: think upon these
gone; 60

Let them affright thee. I beseech thee,
youth,

Put not another sin upon my head
By urging me to fury: O! be gone:

By heaven, I love thee better than myself,
For I come hither arm'd against myself:

Stay not, be gone; live, and hereafter say
A madman's mercy bade thee run away.

Par. I do defy thy conjurations,
And apprehend thee for a felon here.

Rom. Wilt thou provoke me? then have at thee, boy! They fight. 70

Page. O Lord! they fight: I will go call the watch. Exit.

Par. O! I am slain. Falls.
If thou be merciful,

Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet. Dies.

Rom. In faith, I will. Let me peruse
this face:

Mercutio's kinsman, noble County Paris!
What said my man when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think

He told me Paris should have married Juliet:

Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet, 80
To think it was so? O! give me thy hand,
One writ with me in sour misfortune's book:
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave;
A grave? O, no! a lantern, slaughter'd youth,

For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death, lie thou there, by a dead man inter'd. Laying PARIS in the tomb.

How oft when men are at the point of death
Have they been merry! which their keepers call

A lightning before death: O! how may I 90
Call this a lightning? O my love! my wife!
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy
breath,

Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:
Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign
yet

Is crimson in thy lips and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O! what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in
twain

To sunder his that was thine enemy? 100

Forgive me, cousin! Ah! dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? Shall I believe
That unsubstantial Death is amorous,
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour?
For fear of that I still will stay with thee,
And never from this palace of dim night
Depart again; here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chambermaids;

O! here
Will I set up my everlasting rest, 110
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Eyes, look your last!

Arms, take your last embrace! and, lips, O
you,

The doors of breath, seal with a righteous
kiss

A dateless bargain to engrossing death!
Come, bitter conduct, come, unsavoury guide!

Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary bark!
Here's to my love! Drinks.

O true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick. Thus with a kiss I die. Dies.

Enter, at the other end of the churchyard, Friar LAURENCE, with a lantern, crow, and spade.

Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft
to-night 121

Have my old feet stumbled at graves!
Who's there?

Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.

Fri. Bliss be upon you! Tell me, good my
friend,

What torch is yond, that vainly lends his
light

To grubs and eyeless skulls? as I discern,
It burneth in the Capel's monument.

Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my
master,

One that you love. Who is it?

Fri. Romeo.
Bal. How long hath he been there?

Bal. Full half an hour. 130
Fri. Go with me to the vault.

Bal. I dare not, sir.
My master knows not but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death
If I did stay to look on his intents.

Fri. Stay then, I'll go alone. Fear comes upon me;

O! much I fear some ill unlucky thing.
Bal. As I did sleep under this yew tree
here,

I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.

Fri. Romeo! Advances.
Alack, alack! what blood is this which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre? 141

What mean these masterless and gory
swords
To lie discolour'd by this place of peace?

Enters the tomb.
Romeo! O! pale. Who else? what! Paris
too?

And steep'd in blood? Ah! what an unkind
hour

Is guilty of this lamentable chance.
The lady stirs. JULIET wakes.

Jul. O comfortable friar! where is my
lord?

I do remember well where I should be,
And there I am. Where is my Romeo? 150

Noise within.
Fri. I hear some noise. Lady, come from that nest

Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep:
A greater power than we can contradict
Hath thwarted our intents: come, come
away.

Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too: come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns.

Stay not to question, for the watch is com-
ing;

Come, go, good Juliet. Noise again.

I dare no longer stay.
Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away. Exit Friar LAURENCE.

What's here? a cup clos'd in my true love's
hand? 161

Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end.
O churl! drunk all, and left no friendly
drop

To help me after! I will kiss thy lips; Haply some poison yet doth hang on
them,

To make me die with a restorative.
Kisses him.

Thy lips are warm!
First Watch. Within. Lead, boy: which
way?

Jul. Yea, noise? then I'll be brief. O happy dagger!

Snatching ROMEO'S dagger.

This is thy sheath; Stabs herself.
There rest, and let me die. Dies.

Enter Watch, with the Page of PARIS.

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch doth burn. 171

First Watch. The ground is bloody; search about the churchyard.

Go, some of you; whoe'er you find, attach. Exeunt some.

Pitiful sight! here lies the county slain, And Juliet bleeding, warm, and newly dead, Who here hath lain this two days buried.

Go, tell the prince, run to the Capulets, Raise up the Montagues, some others search: Exeunt other Watchmen.

We see the ground whereon these woes do lie;

But the true ground of all these piteous woes We cannot without circumstance descry. 181

Re-enter some of the Watch, with BAL-THASAR.

Second Watch. Here's Romeo's man; we found him in the churchyard.

First Watch. Hold him in safety till the prince come hither.

Re-enter others of the Watch, with Friar LAURENCE.

Third Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps:

We took this mattock and this spade from him,

As he was coming from this churchyard side.

First Watch. A great suspicion: stay the friar too.

Enter the PRINCE and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up, That calls our person from our morning's rest?

Enter CAPULET, Lady CAPULET, and Others.

Cap. What should it be that they so shriek abroad? 190

Lady Cap. The people in the street cry Romeo,

Some Juliet, and some Paris; and all run With open outcry toward our monument.

Prince. What fear is this which startles in our ears?

First Watch. Sovereign, here lies the County Paris slain;

And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before, Warm and new kill'd.

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

First Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd Romeo's man,

With instruments upon them fit to open 200 These dead men's tombs.

Cap. O heaven! O wife! look how our daughter bleeds.

This dagger hath mista'en, for, lo! his house

Is empty on the back of Montague, And it mis-sheathed in my daughter's bosom.

Lady Cap. O me! this sight of death is as a bell,

That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter MONTAGUE and Others.

Prince. Come, Montague; for thou art early up,

To see thy son and heir more early down. Mon. Alas! my liege, my wife is dead to-night; 210

Grief of my son's exile hath stopp'd her breath.

What further woe conspires against mine age?

Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.

Mon. O thou untaught! what manners is in this,

To press before thy father to a grave? Prince. Seal up the mouth of outrage for a while,

Till we can clear these ambiguities, And know their spring, their head, their true descent;

And then I will be general of your woes, And lead you even to death: meantime forbear, 220

And let mischance be slave to patience. Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to do least, Yet most suspected, as the time and place Doth make against me, of this direful murder;

And here I stand, both to impeach and purge Myself condemned and myself excus'd.

Prince. Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. I will be brief, for my short date of breath

Is not so long as is a tedious tale. 230 Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet;

And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife:

I married them; and their stol'n marriage-day

Was Tybalt's doomsday, whose untimely death

Banish'd the new-made bridegroom from this city;

For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pin'd.

You, to remove that siege of grief from her, Betroth'd, and would have married her perforce,

To County Paris; then comes she to me, And with wild looks bid me devise some mean 240

To rid her from this second marriage, Or in my cell there would she kill herself.

Then gave I her, so tutor'd by my art, A sleeping potion; which so took effect

As I intended, for it wrought on her The form of death: meantime I writ to Romeo

That he should hither come as this dire night,

To help to take her from her borrow'd grave,
Being the time the potion's force should cease.

But he which bore my letter, Friar John, 250
Was stay'd by accident, and yesternight
Return'd my letter back. Then, all alone,
At the prefixed hour of her waking,
Came I to take her from her kindred's vault,
Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,
Till I conveniently could send to Romeo:
But when I came, some minute ere the time
Of her awakening, here untimely lay
The noble Paris and true Romeo dead. 259
She wakes; and I entreated her come forth
And bear this work of heaven with patience;
But then a noise did scare me from the tomb,
And she, too desperate, would not go with me,

But, as it seems, did violence on herself.
All this I know; and to the marriage
Her nurse is privy: and, if aught in this Miscarried by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrific'd, some hour before his time,
Unto the rigour of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man. 270

Where 's Romeo's man? what can he say to this?

Bal. I brought my master news of Juliet's death;

And then in post he came from Mantua
To this same place, to this same monument.
This letter he early bid me give his father,
And threaten'd me with death, going in the vault,

If I departed not and left him there.

Prince. Give me the letter; I will look on it.

Where is the county's page that rais'd the watch?

Sirrah, what made your master in this place?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady's grave, 281

And bid me stand aloof, and so I did;
Anon comes one with light to ope the tomb;

And by and by my master drew on him;
And then I ran away to call the watch.

Prince. This letter doth make good the friar's words,

Their course of love, the tidings of her death;

And here he writes that he did buy a poison

Of a poor pothecary, and therewithal 289

Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet.
Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague!

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love;

And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen: all are punish'd.

Cap. O brother Montague! give me thy hand;

This is my daughter's jointure, for no more
Can I demand.

Mon. But I can give thee more;

For I will raise her statue in pure gold; 299
That while Verona by that name is known,
There shall no figure at such rate be set
As that of true and faithful Juliet.

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie;
Poor sacrifices of our enmity!

Prince. A glooming peace this morning with it brings;

The sun, for sorrow, will not show his head;
Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things;

Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished:

For never was a story of more woe 307
Than this of Juliet and her Romeo. Exeunt.

TIMON OF ATHENS

---

IT is not likely that Timon of Athens was ever acted during Shakespeare's lifetime, and it is even less likely that it will in time to come find favor either on the stage or with the general reader. Its weakness is due even more to its conception than to its execution, although the conception is doubtless Shakespeare's and the execution, in part at least, by some other hand than his. The probability is that Shakespeare, after having sketched it and after having exhausted his powers to make of Timon a great dramatic figure, finally abandoned it as inherently undramatic, and that it was later expanded by some other writer for insertion in the First Folio, where it was first printed. Bad as the play is, there are in it some speeches of Timon's that the world could ill afford to lose, if for no other reason than that they constitute what Schlegel calls a "dictionary of imprecations" which will always be needed as a vent for those who, without them, might do the world real injury.

It is common to regard Timon as a "painful play." Whether it is or not will depend, of course, on how seriously we take it. If we really feel that Timon is at any time justified even in part in his railings against humanity, we shall hardly escape a painful impression from our reading. If, on the other hand, his misanthropy appears to us, as it does to Apemantus, only an affectation, an exaggeration of his own importance, we shall accept the play as a somewhat pleasant satire.

What, for instance, could be more provocative of a smile than to see this hater of mankind preparing his

"everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood,
Who once a day with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover,"

that it may carry an epitaph designed to keep alive among men the name of one who would be nameless, or stay the gait of those whom he would have pass with curses? Surely here is a strange clinging to his kind even in death, for one whose misanthropy is to be taken seriously.

If this play is to affect us as "painful" then, somewhere in it we must get into sympathy with Timon; and that, for my part, I find it impossible to do. My reason for this can best be shown by a brief contrast of the characters of Timon and Lear, between whom there are certain superficial resemblances. I do not for a moment believe with some critics that "Timon is cast in the mould of Lear," and yet he suggests Lear inasmuch as both suffer from ingratitude, both indulge in frightful imprecations against "ingrateful man"; both are in large measure responsible for the evils under which they suffer, and both at last repudiate the power they enjoyed in their days of prosperity. In spirit and conception, however, few characters could be more unlike.

There is, for instance, a greatness in Lear's tragic fault that commands our admiration at the same time that it forfeits our sympathy. If his giving away his kingdom and abdicating his power seem to be folly, yet his trust in his own children, and his desire to shake off the cares and business of state is justified by the way he has borne them throughout a long lifetime. There is no suggestion of prodigality in his nature or of failure to make due provision for the future. His is the fault of pride, not vanity; and his character shows within itself a strength which gives promise of recovery.

I can feel none of this in Timon. His weakness is revealed by his environment even before we see him. If his friendships include such men as the Poet, the Painter, the Jeweler and the Merchant, then he has neglected one of his highest obligations to himself and to society—the obligation to scrutinize his friends. To entertain such men is not generosity, but prodigality; to seek their favor, not pride but vanity. Even his wealth suggests no cares or burdens on his part either in its accumulation or its conservation; it is something attached to, but not a part of him. He has no sense of stewardship. His appointed steward, the only thoroughly admirable character in the play, he ignores and defeats. Indiscriminate in his gifts, he looks upon all recipients of his favors as bound in the duties of friendship. Not knowing what friendship really is, he rails against the world when he wakes to the discovery that he lacks it.
